Awards in Eighth Monthly Contest

The prizes for the best papers in the current monthly contest on the best time to stock Nationally Advertised Goods, are awarded as follows:—

First Prize—$7.50—OLIVER SHEPPARD, Penn Yan, N. Y.

Second Prize—$5.00—SOLOMON MANN, Plainfield, N. J.

Third Prize—$2.50—GEORGE KAPPELT, Erie, Pa.

By Oliver Sheppard, Penn Yan, N. Y.

Who can give any hard and fast rule as to the best time for the dealer to stock the new advertised goods? So many manufacturers who distribute through the retail trade send forth big advance advertising to dealers, telling them of the mighty consumer campaign that they (the manufacturers) are about to wage, and warning them (the dealers) to get ready for the heavy increase in demand for their goods which is sure to follow. They are told that on a certain date the first big announcement is to be published in a magazine of National circulation and they must carry a large stock in order to take care of the consumer demand which is bound to result. On the strength of this glowing statement many dealers are induced to overstock with the new goods, and when the momentous day arrives without the expected rush to their counters it is not strange that retailers are shaken in their faith as to the advantage of selling new, advertised brands.

And yet if you lead the public to expect that your store is headquarters for advertised goods, you must be prepared to meet every reasonable demand in that line. A purchaser who asks for an article you ought to have and fails to get it may go to your competitor. You have lost more than the profit on the sale of that particular thing.

The writer is not an authority, but it seems to him that viewed from a conservative angle, the prudent time for our dealer to stock newly advertised wares is when he has actual evidence of what the advertising campaign is doing for him, and this evidence will take the form of an increased demand for the goods advertised. Do you use the "call slip," brother? Put down each day each thing called for that you could not supply, and make every salesman in your store use it. Go over the lists at the end of the day, and again before you replenish your stocks. In this way you will come nearer to knowing the actual demands of your trade than by any other method.

Don't be lukewarm, but a little more than willing to establish with the right manufacturer what, in the economy of the day, we call a community of interest. When the dealer knows that the manufacturer's merchandising policy includes him as a retailer, that his efficient sales organization will be directed toward bringing about the close, satisfactory and profitable relations, then is the time for the live merchant to co-operate by not only selling the goods, but also advertising them on his own hook in his local newspaper.

Feature the acquisitions as the newspaper does a piece of exclusive news. Let a new purchaser go hand in hand with the closing out of a slow moving lot at a price, and make that price so low it's a "puller." Have people know you must make room for newer goods. Almost every woman who can read takes note of the advertising of the local stores which appears in her home paper. That more folks do not respond to the small store's advertising is more apt to be the fault of the store and the way it advertises, than the fault of the paper.

The local newspaper can make the fortune of a merchant in his community, and if the newspaper publisher is wise he will co-operate with a live merchant—realizing if you please, that that merchant is bound to become a bigger merchant and a bigger advertiser.

There are particular relations, not only with the manufacturer, but of store policy and method, which can double the results of dealers' advertising. For one thing this advertising should be planned ahead. Definite attractions for each week should be determined upon. Make your offerings seasonable. Look down the calendar and arrange for those expressions of public spirit which if fitted to the right store always attract favorable attention.

Plan your window display so that it will arouse some interest. Do something to bring people up for a little closer inspection—to make them stop, look, and come into the store. Your window display, like your newspaper advertisement, should answer the question: Why do I expect people to buy these goods from me instead of from someone else?

And the wrapping paper that goes out of your store—have you thought of its advertising possibilities? Is it attractive and distinctive, and likely to add value to the article within? There are many more details which will not take care of themselves—the circulars which ought to go out in all packages—the method of reaching particular classes of trade—of getting promptly in touch with the stranger who has taken up his or her abode in your city—these are all things of which a great deal can be said and done, but are not strictly within the scope of this article.

By Solomon Mann, Plainfield, N. J.

When is the psychological moment for stocking Nationally advertised goods—when the merchant is told by manufacturer's representative that they are being largely advertised, or when he begins to get inquiries? I would say that I stock up when I see fit to do so; in other words, I stock up according to the merit of the article, and what the article is, and who the father of the article in question is, and how much Nationally advertising they are going to do on this particular article. In other words, I study the article in question, the merit of the article, the father of it, and if they all look good to me I get busy right away and order the goods in question and display them right in front of the store and welcome our new comer in a friendly manner, and by doing this I always reap the benefit of the first profits besides. I get the name from my consumer by being up to date, by having this new article just advertised in this weekly or monthly magazine, etc. Just to illustrate my article I will convince you what I said above, if the article looks good to me, if the article has good quality and merit and a good father in back of it, it pays to stock up when you see fit or when the father of the article tells you that they are going to do some Nationally advertising. Since my last article I bought a couple of cartons of Dromedary Cocoanut, as I saw so much about it in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" that I thought to myself, this cocoanut has got to sell, so I displayed it in front of my counter next to my cash register, and I said I would watch what effect this display will have. Everybody that comes in the store must pay at this particular place, and the consequence was everyone had their hands on Dromedary Cocoanut, and very few went away without buying a package. It was new to them, and generally something new people like to try (especially ladies), and it was new profit to me; and, to tell you the truth, I enjoyed seeing the little extra profit coming to me with very little effort on my part. But the most pleasure I had was when a couple of my good customers came in the store Saturday night before closing, and I was indeed glad to see them, as they are the kind that buy heavy and pay prompt, and I greeted them warmly. They said they did not come to buy anything, but out for a walk and passing the store they thought they would stop to see the new things I had, and looking around they picked up a box of Dromedary Cocoanut and said to the other lady, "Why Mrs. Jones, here is the Dromedary Cocoanut that I gave the man an order for at the church supper the other night. I did not know that you kept it." So Mrs. Jones answered by saying that she had the second box from my store already and it was fine. Now this is just an illustration of what Dromedary Cocoanut did for me to impress in the minds of my good consumers that anything that's new and good she can get at Mann's.

I will say again, stock up heavy anything that you think is good in merit and reap the benefit first. Don't wait until you are asked for the article and then order, but get the article and display it and it will sell. If you know anything about the grocery business you will agree with me on my point.

One more illustration will prove to you that it pays to stock up while it is fresh in everybody's mind. There is a saying, "Knock at the iron while it's hot." When the old Dutch came in the market first I was the first merchant to order a big quantity of old Dutch. I received it promptly and displayed it in the front, and it was nothing but Dutch and Dutch in my store for a couple of weeks. I got away with more old Dutch in that little time than all my neighbor grocers would think to buy in a year or maybe two years' time.

I will say stock up when the goods are first put on the market and have it ready to hand out when the call comes for it, providing there is merit and a good father in back of it. Stock up with all your might, and if you can't sell it I will come and sell it for you.

I have taken up quite some space, but you have been quite liberal in allowing me the use of your space in your valuable paper.

I will close with many good wishes to your paper and subscribers and advertisers.

By George W. Kappelt, Erie, Pa.

What a grocer buys is far more important than what he sells, for if he buys right he must surely sell right. A grocer cannot buy every article he is asked to buy or he would soon be dippy wondering what to do with it all. Every day there are dozens of salesmen selling dozens of articles, each one in his own talk has the only good article of its kind on the market. If you have never heard of these articles or have never sold them or never had a call for them you surely will now, for they are going to be advertised, such is the wind up of most of their talk. No matter how careful a fellow wants to be in this matter he will often fall for some of these articles in spite of himself. At the present time there are good reliable manufacturers enough in the country to furnish almost anything a retailer could wish for or needs. Some of these goods are ready sellers because they are very necessary to the consuming public, and the others have made a place for themselves and sell on sight on account of their sterling qualities and usefulness as articles of importance to the public in general, being satisfying and convenient to the majority. The Nationally advertised line takes in most of these two classes of goods.

When Postum was introduced in the instant style it was readily accepted by the public, when Grape-Nuts made its appearance in the market the brain workers accepted it as their food and the workers as theirs; both found this food satisfactory for their particular needs. Shredded Wheat is in a class by itself and is here to stay, being now an important article of food to thousands daily. Wherever Fleischmann's yeast is sold all other fresh vegetable yeast is soon lost to sight. When Duff put molasses in cans there was no more need of having a molasses barrel around the store. When Fels put naphtha in his soap the wash boiler industry suffered. When Heinz took the ake out of bake and used it with his beans thousands of tired and unsatisfied housewives quit baking beans and used Heinz. Since Hires root beer is what it is there are more thirsts than ever. Royal, Rumford and Davis baking powders would make Bleriot, Wright and Curtiss green with envy. So it goes up or down the line, taking in almost everything of importance.

These big sellers that are popular with the trade were not made so over night; it took months of steady and hard work and constant advertising to introduce and create a demand to put these goods where they are to-day. If new goods are offered in the staple line there should first be a demand created, then stock them and get the good of the money spent to advertise and bring them before the public. There are often exceptions to this. If an article appears on the market, an out of the ordinary article that is more than likely to fill a want of the public, then by all means try it out.

By J. M. Currie, Reisterstown, Md.

To your question as to the psychological moment to stock advertised goods, would say that in most cases it is when you have inquiries for the goods, not before, as from experience we have found that in a combined village and country neighborhood much of the advertising is not seen by our customers, or, if it is, they do not respond perhaps because the goods advertised do not appeal to them or they can do without them. In the cities or larger towns it might be different, as they are accustomed to using package goods and prepared foods more generally than the village or country, but in either case merchants do not care to buy in advance stuff that may or may not sell; they have too many lines as it is and new ones are constantly being introduced.

By M. L. Zeigler, Dallastown, Pa.

When I read the article for the first time asking when to buy or stock Nationally advertised goods I thought it a problem, but when I think of the number of advertisement wars I have gone through, experience tells me how many calls I received through them. Sales made in stock or lost if not in stock it appears to be a small matter in gain or loss. If I did not or did buy when the representative called, since it is a proven fact that nine out of every ten of your customers buy what the merchant recommends. If the salesman has an article you need and you have perfect confidence in the producer of the goods and the product—the merchant who is looking for permanency in his business will buy the best the market affords and realize on his ability to absolutely satisfy the most exacting of his trade. And he must also be convinced in order to give his customers their value. He can only offer them merchandise that is of a sufficient high quality to be unreservedly guaranteed by the manufacturers. Goods bought in this manner can always be recommended. Besides this the policy of buying only the best on the basis of such a guarantee from the manufacturers as precludes the possibility of loss by the dealer for any reason whatever, will fill his shelves with articles which, while they may be higher priced, will give the consumer a much greater value than the cheaper variety. This will establish his reputation as a quality dealer, handling only what is in reality the cheapest and most satisfactory merchandise. Now how do the goods stand up? Has he got the goods? Do you need them? Do they suit your trade? Your moment to stock them has come. But you did not buy. You had enough other brands in same line or, according to your business judgment, thought so.

The next part. If I read about them and saw they were largely advertised, this would not induce me to buy, as I would buy on the strength of the advertisement, which cuts a small figure. As Nationally advertised goods can be kept in stock by the merchant, and goods not advertised can be sold two to one, so advertising without the co-operation of the merchant is like a wax figure—sometimes they get pushed over. Now I have tried to dispose of the salesman call and the reading and seeing goods Nationally advertised. But I did not answer the customers' call, as this is quite a reverse from the other two. I am taking hold of a customer and I do not want to lose him or her, as no merchant can afford this. Mrs. Good asked me for that Nationally advertised article the salesman told me about or the one I read about. Gee! Say did you ever ship? Well I am so sorry but I have not that brand, Mrs. Good. Did you ever try this brand, and this one? Yes. And this one? Yes. And this one? Yes. Here I have a new one that is recommended highly. Will you try this one? Well I might try that one. But I like the other, it is so good; it has a very good taste, it is easily prepared, and all of the family like it. Say, did you ever slide to the edge of a roof? Well you are close enough to stop and take hold. What for? Why if she would have said I won't take any other kind you might have had a fall. Now she is gone and I am afraid she will not like that kind. And if she comes again and asks for the kind she wanted say, Oh well, if she says it is so good and the family like it then it is easy to sell to others. She will tell her neighbors and they will soon tell others. Soon the whole town will know about it. All the family will talk about it, as they are all well known and have influence. And the people have lots of confidence in them, besides I can tell the trade that Mrs. Good has tried and recommended this brand to me; some strength to that. The clerks can tell about it. Say that the goods are Nationally advertised or the Boss read about them and seen them largely advertised. No, Mrs. Good tried the brand and she recommends it to the Boss. I need no more calls. I am ready to stock the Nationally advertised article on the value of the first call. No hurry if the representatives tell you. No hurry if you read and see that the article is Nationally advertised. But when you get a call you get close to the edge. Better take a hold. I reached the moments.

By Clarence Nagle, Columbia, Pa.

With regard to which is the psychological moment to stock Nationally advertised goods. I think that the best time to stock them is when you begin to get demand for them. If there is a jobber near you you can get the goods almost immediately.

But if you stock up as soon as the manufacturer tells you he is going to advertise it may be a couple of months before there is any demand for the article in your locality, or it may not take at all and you will be left with a lot of dead stock on your hands.

By "A Reader," Watervliet, N. Y.

My idea is the moment for stocking Nationally advertised goods is when the merchant begins to receive inquiries. My reason for this is, many times things are advertised and the merchant hasn't any call for them. In one case while working in this store I noticed a certain article advertised. We hadn't any of this in stock, also we hadn't received any calls for it. We didn't put any in stock until we began to receive calls for it. Then we began to receive many calls and finally stocked up good, although I think that there isn't anything better than "advertising" for selling a new article, because if you don't advertise the clerk won't advertise for you. This is my observance while working in this store.

Advertising does a world of good.

Here is the Next Contest Subject:

It concerns the quality of Nationally Advertised Goods. How have you found them—are Nationally Advertised products any better than other brands of the same product not Nationally Advertised? Have you found them better in your own home use? Have your customers told you they were better?

The subject formally stated is this:

9—Give your experience with the quality of Nationally Advertised Goods—are they better or poorer quality than the brands sold without General Advertising?

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

XXIII.—There are Other Good Drinking Coffees Besides Java and Mocha.

By WILLIAM B. HARRIS.

Just what constitutes the best blend of coffee is a question that has never been definitely answered. Hundreds of buyers thought there was absolutely nothing worth while in a blend of coffee excepting Java and Mocha, and the most astonishing fact was that they thought they were getting those identical coffees no matter what the price happened to be. I once saw a dealer pick out the large beans from a scoop full of Santos and point them out to his customer as a beautiful Java, after which he carefully selected a few small beans, cracked them on the counter, and invited her to smell that Mocha. All out of the same scoopful of Santos for a pound of which she paid 20 cents and went away satisfied that she had the blend of all blends—Java and Mocha.

After all is said and done, a satisfactory coffee is a matter of preference, some selecting one character and some another. As they can no longer buy all kinds as Java and Mocha, customers must purchase what suits their taste and pocket book, under the correct name of the coffee, or under some brand name, advertised to a greater or lesser extent.

It is certain that a blend of coffee from the product of the Dutch East Indies and Arabia produces results that are not obtainable with any other growth of coffees. The Sumatra coffees have a character that is lost where the seed is transplanted to other countries. Even the actual types of Java, which have become better known since the Food and Drugs Act shut out the use of the term for coffees from the neighboring and larger island, have a distinct cup character easily discernable from other coffees.

There is only one Mocha. A fancy Bourbon may have a winey acid, the nearest approach to Mocha, but still very far removed from the actual character of the coffee from Arabia. There is something indescribably pleasing that arises with the steam from a cup of fine Mocha coffee while the liquor is smooth and rich, making one of the finest after-dinner coffees imaginable.

Large handsome bean, smooth, full bodied coffees are produced in other countries, transplanted from either the Dutch possessions or Arabia. Some of these coffees are fast becoming indispensable in standard blends. This is noticeably the case with the coffees from Colombia, known to the trade as Bogota. These coffees have a very full rich body, making them particularly desirable as the backbone of innumerable blends and brands. Bogota coffee, blended with Santos, has probably given the public more Java and Mocha than the sale of the genuine product.

Combinations, containing Guatemala and Mexican coffees must not be overlooked, as no coffee roaster can afford to be without both these coffees if he is catering to the different tastes in various sections of the country. Where certain brands have been established, made up of fancy South or Central American types, it will be found to be a difficult matter to switch those who have become accustomed to them over to a blend of Java and Mocha even if it was possible to do so at the same price.

In the opinion of some a Java lacks character, and they prefer blends having the heavy Bogota cup or that of the acid Mexican. In the last analysis we find ourselves at the point at which we started, namely, that one particular blend will not suit all coffee drinkers. The blend that gives the result the individual desires may be a high priced or a very moderate priced coffee. In either case, however, it will be absolutely spoiled unless it is carefully prepared for the table. The great secret of good coffee after all is in the making.

ECHOES.

I have been for some time a subscriber to two grocers' magazines and find I get a good deal of information out of them, even if I am 63 years old and for 32 years have been a grocer. "Don't you feel sorry for me?" Last year I was induced by a friend to try yours and now see my friend got me into trouble, for the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has been so good I feel obliged to enclose a check to renew my subscription and add a third journal of trade to my other troubles.—C. WITH THE EDITOR

We have the following from a valued subscriber:—

Plainfield, N. J., June 30, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you please inform me through your valuable paper, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," if a college education is essential for a man entering business, or if it is not, please state reasons.

Thanking you in advance for your answer, I remain,
Yours truly,
SOLOMAN MANN.

Most positively a college education is not necessary for a man entering business, though it may be a good thing to have. Naturally it depends both on the business, and on the man. That it is not necessary is shown by the fact that some of the most conspicuous successes in business life have been made by men who have had no college education. The average business man, in fact, who is doing a moderate sized business, is not a college graduate. We do believe, however, that a short course in a good business college is an excellent thing for anybody who expects to go in business. Or even a correspondence course in the subjects with which a business man must deal.

Many believe that a college education unfits a man for practical business. He gets a great mass of stuff that he can never use unless he follows some of the professions, and not always in them. He also is apt to learn and do much that is idle and vicious. Going to college is a sharp test of character; many young men come out worth much less than when they went in. They all come out late, too—the boy who had to be content with a public school education has several years start of them in actual work.

One of the very greatest advantages of a college education is the social advantage—the chance that it gives to form friendships and acquaintances which one may turn to use in after life. As for the learning one gets from college, there is nothing whatever that one cannot get from books outside of college, and get it too while laying a foundation for a business career. It is not so easy to get it that way, but it can be done, and learning thus gotten will last longer and be more appreciated.

From a communication just received by this paper from a subscriber we take the following:—

I have done no advertising for three or four years. Some of my reasons are:—

1st.—Do not feel I can write a catchy ad.

2d.—I would have to advertise in all three papers published in this town (3,000 population), or the other fellow would get jealous. Expense too great for benefit derived. Everybody knows everybody here and a little more, too.

Are these good reasons for suffering the loss of the benefit which can undoubtedly come from the right kind of advertising in a country town? We think not. Certainly the belief that this friend can not write a catchy advertisement is not a good reason. Just as soon let a man refuse to walk because he feels that his gait is ungraceful. No man ever wrote a catchy advertisement the first time he wrote one. Everybody must make a beginning, and a man is foolish, in the writer's judgment, if he refrains from advertising merely because he cannot at the beginning write advertisements that suit him.

The second reason probably is shared by a large number of country merchants—they must advertise in all papers if they advertise in any, merely because those not patronized may be jealous. A good way to get rid of this objection forever is to advertise a good bargain first in one paper, then in another, then in the third. If two give no results, and the third does, the two can no longer object to the exclusive patronage of the other. "I gave you a fair trial and you did not make good." If they all give good results, then it will pay to stay in all. If none give results, then you at least have some evidence that they are not profitable mediums. To-day you have no evidence.

We believe that investigation would show that the best medium for country town advertising is a little store paper, carefully prepared and carefully distributed.

At the recent convention of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association a paper was read on "The Science of Cost Finding Applied to the Wholesale Grocery Business." The author was E. E. Sheasgreen, a Chicago expert on costs. The paper is largely technical. One wonders, after reading it, whether the consumer really receives proper compensation for all the costs that are loaded upon the original cost of merchandise. For of course the consumer has to pay them all.

The core of Mr. Sheasgreen's address is as follows:—

In the grocery business, as in any other business, the original capital invested in the land and buildings must bring back, and the same must be included in the cost, a rent made up of the interest on the original capital invested in the land and buildings, taxes on the same, insurance on buildings, and a replacement of the original capital invested in the buildings, according to the construction—much more for frame or mill construction than for that of steel or concrete. If there are to be permanent care-takers, and if heat and elevator service are to be furnished the tenants, these are also rent charges.

We find so many good business men do not figure rent into their cost because they own the property on which they do business. When they leave rent out of their cost, they are giving away values to the amount of what the rent would actually figure according to the method outlined above.

Whether a company owns or rents its quarters, the following make up its building expense group—rent, heat (unless in the rent item), janitor expense and repairs. These are the expenses for area occupied.

After the floor space has been accepted and must move in our plant and store equipment, and the expense items on the original capital invested in all tools, machinery and office and store fixtures, are known as the valuation expense group—the depreciation on the original capital invested, and interest at prevailing rates on the same, insurance and taxes. These are the expenses on the capital invested in the mechanical or physical equipments of the business.

The "load" is increasing, for now we must add the general office expense group—executive, clerks, bookkeepers and cost clerk salaries, telephone and telegraph, postage and supplies, organization dues and miscellaneous.

And still we are not through with the "burden," for now there looms up the selling and shrinkage expense group, such as salesmen's salaries, clerks, bookkeepers and telephone and telegraph operators (where a sales department has such service), traveling expenses, allowances and deductions, bad accounts, commissions, interest and discounts, and interest on commercial investments—such as interest on—now listen—raw stocks, manufactured goods, accounts and bills receivable, bank balances, and in case of manufacturing institutions, work in process.

And still we must "load" the poor product with expenses, for we face the stock storage group—items that are chargeable directly to each commodity handled, such as the packing, delivering, car fare, barn and wagon expense, cartage, etc.

In order to have some help with this "load" we must have light and power, and then continue to add department direct expense, department payroll, supervision and all spoilage items chargeable to a department.

This surely seems formidable, and it is. Doubtless many consumers, who as stated, pay all this, would be unable to see why they should pay the association fees of the wholesaler who supplies goods to the retailer who supplies them. Association fees would not go far to advance the prices of goods, perhaps, but with other items of the same sort the difference might be appreciable.

There is of course nowhere for the cost of selling to go except on top of the cost of the goods. The next buyer takes the goods with that cost of selling added, adds his own cost of selling and his profit, and passes them on to the next buyer. Where there are several middlemen, the total toll has undoubtedly become tremendous by the time the product reaches the ultimate consumer. But what else can be done? Some of the cost items, which the consumer pays, he gets benefit from, and should pay. The balance are mere extravagances and dead weights—the consumer gets no benefit from them and therefore should not bear them. The remedy is not to put them on somebody else, but to cut them out.

Our objection to the present cost system is the fact that so many buyers have to bear others' burdens. The buyer who pays cash and takes his goods away pays precisely as much as he who definitely multiplied. No such system of distributing goods can be fair—every buyer should pay for all the special services rendered him, and the buyer who gets no special service should not be charged for somebody else's.

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS KINDLY MENTION "MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD"

The Effect of Prohibition on Retail Business

Retailers From Various Sections, which are Now Dry but Were Formerly Wet, Tell How the Cutting Out of Liquor Affected Their Stores.

[Several weeks ago the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" announced that it had launched a campaign to obtain from retail merchants in all the sections of the Union which had recently gone dry, statements showing what effect this had had, if any, upon the regular retail business in staples. A number of these statements have been obtained and they will appear below from time to time. The letters may not appear each week, for collecting them from all parts of the country is a colossal task and will take some time.—Ed.]

By Walter Kingsley & Son, Plainfield, Conn.

Our business is best under a no license vote, although the vote is not enforced. Were the no license vote enforced as it should be we think business would be even better than it now is.

By Smith & Cummings, No. 305 N.
Main St., Barre, Vt.

We would say that our store is located right in the heart of where the license places were located. There was one first-class and one second-class in the first block at our left, and we had to do some work to keep one out of the block that we are in.

The people of the city knew just how we felt toward the rum question, and when they opened we cut out all of the credit that we thought it would effect and did a cash business as far as possible, and the people realized our position (we mean the temperance people) and they put themselves out to trade with us as much as possible (that is we feel that was the case) and our trade held up well.

We think we did fully more than the year before, but do not think as large a gain as we were having from year to year, as our business has gained, but no thanks to the rum question.

By George W. Sawyer, Franklin, N. H.

In my opinion my trade has been better under no license and collections have been easier, a possible indication that heads of families have more money for groceries when it is not expended in the saloon. Our city is not absolutely dry, as drug stores, hotels, and I fear pocket peddlers, do some business, but I feel sure much less is sold than under license. I have recently moved into the finest equipped store in this section and this may in part account for improved trade conditions.

By L. F. Koenig & Co., Pomeroy, Wash.

Our business has been increasing; cannot state if this is due directly to dry conditions. This community is a prosperous one and perhaps no unusual change is due to the changed conditions.

I can cite numerous individual cases where men who formerly had no credit and were poor providers, now purchase liberally of the necessities of life for their families, and either always pay cash or if given credit pay promptly. This refers especially to wage earners.

Peace and moral conditions are better, but not what they should be, as much liquor is brought in from out of town.

By A. L. Johnson, Orange, Mass.

In reply to your request, would say I am now in a wet territory since May 1st. Personally I am of the same opinion as yourself, and am opposed to liquor first and last.

While I could not give you a direct answer to your questions, have always claimed that money spent for liquor was diverted from the necessities of life and the proper support of the family, as I know in some cases families have to go without food and clothing because of money so spent, and I claim collections are not as good in license towns. Of course when you speak of dry territories we all have to admit that there is quite a little of the business done even if towns vote no license. The majority of town officials and many others give silent consent to speakeasies. For all that I claim conditions are better in no license towns than in license towns.

I will say this for my own town, that even with license it is pretty peaceful and quiet.

Hoping I have answered your request in a satisfactory manner.

By A. D. Newell & Co., Mahoningtown, Pa.

As a member of the firm of A. D. Newell & Co., I will answer your questions from a personal standpoint.

To your question as to effect of abandoning the sale of liquor, would say that it has had a good effect upon our business and think the same answer would apply to the general conditions of our town. As a whole, I think collections in our city have been better since we have been under prohibition than they have ever been before.

As to the effect upon the average sales to each customer, would say that that is a very hard question to answer, conditions existing as they are now in our city. Our trade is composed wholly of railroad people, as this town is a railroad center, and the business on the railroad has been very slack for the last year, bringing about conditions which makes it hard to answer your question.

As to the general peace and order of the town, would say that it has been much better since the saloon has been eliminated from our county. Personally, I am for prohibition first, last and all the time.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s
Department Food Stores, Dover, N. J.

Simplifying the Show.—An elaborate display of one thing in the ordinary size store at this time of the year doesn't pay.

But a simple display of twenty things does pay.

And these twenty things need not occupy a space larger than a table, or improvised table, 3 x 10 feet.

The amount of labor that the average clerks puts into his average display of summer goods can be cut down 75 per cent., and at the same time be at least 50 per cent. more effectual.

Follow me while I lay out your show. It will be quite out of the ordinary, and because it is out of the ordinary, in the first place is, perhaps the better reason why you should adopt it. Odd things attract, not freakishly odd, not odd in a clumsy sense, but odd in an attractive sense.

The table is ready and it's covered with white paper, not manilla paper. Top of it down go twenty dinner plates—ordinary plain, white, everyday plates.

Upon these you place your goods. All bottle goods, remember, and not over five and never less than two to a plate—one at least standing. Each plate, of course, must be represented by a price ticket.

It isn't necessary to tell you the variety of goods that should go on these plates. Bottle goods is sufficient—kind of bottle goods that appeal to people in the summer.

The man that starts this table—this "simplifying the show" idea—and keeps it in shape, will be constantly encouraged by the sales it will command and the nice comments it will bring from people who appreciate smart doings.

"Smart doings" are the life of a store. It needs changes of dress and change of style just as much as you do.

Make it responsive; make it a tempter; make it a big, successful silent salesman.

What a splendid chance a young fellow has in a good line grocery to tempt people.

A sign on everything; a display everywhere; new goods coming, old goods going.

From morning till evening you haven't an idle minute.

tax which has been levied on the grocers. The Allentown association is just effecting a reorganization.

Pittsburg grocers are making a strenuous effort to enforce the Sunday closing law. It is the foreign element that causes all the trouble.

Secretary C. A. Bell is working hard to make the grocers' picnic of the Pittsburg grocers a big success.

President Durlin, of the Pittsburg association, has just been successful in a contest, winning two electric cars and a cash prize.

Mr. Smedley addressed the Pottstown Merchants' Association on Monday, June 29th.

Kittanning has a good association and still growing. Mr. Smedley will visit this association early in July. D. A. Held, the secretary, is a hard worker.

Erie retail grocers will picnic at Conneaut Lake on Wednesday, July 15th.

Sharon business men have arranged for bargain days for out-of-town customers each week during the summer. On July 4th the merchants have arranged for a big fire works display.

The Erie Business Men's Association is investigating the Cleveland method of credit rating and collection.

Organizer Smedley visited the Pottstown association on June 29th and made an address which was apparently well received.

The Pottstown association is composed of the live wire merchants of the town and the members are enthusiastic in their efforts to make their work effective. It is expected that this association will affiliate with the State association before the State convention. J. Allen Brandt is president; William D. Stamm, secretary. The committee having charge of the meeting consisted of J. W. Glass, chairman; Harry J. Bahr, William E. Mills, Isaac Miller and Thomas A. McCaslin.

Sell KARO for Preserving

(Crystal White)

It makes better preserves than all sugar

In our extensive advertising, and in the "Preserving with Karo" booklet, we tell the housewife about the superiority and convenience of KARO for preserving fruits, making jellies, marmalades, jams, etc. It will pay you to follow up our suggestion and recommend this use of KARO (Crystal White), because your profit on KARO is much larger than your profit on sugar. You can be sure your customers will be not only satisfied, but delighted. KARO (Crystal White) is already extensively used for preserving purposes, and this use is increasing every day on account of the superior qualities imparted to the preserves, jams and jellies. KARO (Crystal White) is too profitable for you to let your customers use it simply as a table syrup; tell them to use it for cooking, baking and candy making, and you'll secure increased sales that will pay you many a dollar of extra profits.

Preserving booklets will be furnished to the grocers for distribution on request.

Standard Oil Co. Says It Never Freezes Competitors Out

Neither Does It Sell at Different Prices in Different Localities, Except Where Different Freight Rates Make It Necessary to Do So.

Certain newspaper articles recently published are in error in stating in the latter half of the year 1913 this company was admitted to the State of Missouri after having been ousted and kept from doing business in the State. This company never ceased to do business in the State of Missouri. There was a writ of ouster issued against us, but when the facts were all tried out before the Supreme Court of Missouri this ouster was cancelled. Pending the outcome of this ouster, this company continued doing business at the points where it had been doing business in Missouri, but it did not extend its operation, and when the writ was suspended, we began to put in stations over the entire State of Missouri where we formerly had not done business.

We will plead guilty to having reduced the price of gasoline and oil in the balance of the State of Missouri to a parity with the prices at which we had been doing business in the remainder of the State. This did result in giving the dealers and consumers a lower price in these sections, but it simply resulted in giving them the same price that the other dealers had been enjoying for years past, and which these dealers would have enjoyed had we been permitted to do business in the remainder of the State. This cannot be considered as a very great offense on the part of this company, but when put in its proper light should be a rather grave charge against other oil companies, who were apparently holding up the dealers in the section of Missouri in which we were not operating.

The statement is made that several independent oil companies have been forced out of business in St. Louis. I am unable to locate a single one that has gone out of business. It is a fact that when our last reduction on oil was made in St. Louis, that the price at East St. Louis was not lowered until a few days after the price went into effect at St. Louis; the reason for this being that East St. Louis is handled by a different division from the St. Louis division, and St. Louis being a main station, the market went into effect the moment our manager at St. Louis received advice of the decline, whereas in the case of East St. Louis it had to go through the channel of advice to the Decatur, Ill., manager, and by him transmitted to his agent at East St. Louis.

Various newspapers seem to be laboring under the impression that if our prices at Chicago is 6 cents, that our price in North Dakota should also be 6 cents. I am making this a little strong so that the point will be clearly out that the charge made against us as to discrimination seems to be based on the fact that these papers seem to think our price should be uniform over an entire State or district.

Our prices are uniform, but they are uniform based on the cost of transportation and handling charges. For instance, in the case of the complaint from Waverly as against our market of 7½ cents at that point compared with 6½ cents at East St. Louis. We should charge a higher price at Waverly than at East St. Louis, because we have to pay more freight from the refinery to Waverly than to East St. Louis, and also the marketing or cartage charge is more. These two items make up the exact difference in price between the two points.

The statement is made that it has always been the policy of the Standard Oil Company to cut and slice prices to a lower point than where independents can make a living profit. This is not and never has been true. The policy of the Standard Oil Company has always been to sell the best goods possible at the lowest possible price, and the hundreds of thousands of satisfied customers of this company is the best testimonial it can have. They know from experience that when they buy goods from this company they can depend upon the representation made as to the quality and quantity of the goods and that the price is right.

This article states that the fact that we cut prices below a living profit for the competitors was disclosed to the satisfaction of everyone in the progress of the ouster proceedings. This statement is not true; first, because this question was not involved in the case; and second, because there were no variations in the prices, except as were justified in the transportation between different points. There was at that time, and is now, a law on the statute books of Missouri known as the Anti-Discrimination Law, which law this company has scrupulously observed, obeying both the letter and the spirit of the law, to which fact every Attorney-General of Missouri will testify.

The explanation as to the difference in price between Hannibal and Huntsville is as explained above in the case of Waverly. Hannibal is a station town to which we ship goods in bulk. Huntsville is a small town outside of a station, to which we have to haul, and the difference in price of 1½ cents per gallon is made up by the difference in freight to the two points from the refinery, and the cost for cartage from the station town to Huntsville. In the case of Atchison, Kansas and Collinsville, Ill., the same is true, and it bears directly on the statement made above, that certain newspapers seem to be under the impression that we should make the same price all over the country, which obviously we cannot do, as we must take the transportation into consideration, and the Anti-Discrimination Law, above referred to, compels us to do so. We would be discriminating against one town that had a low freight rate if we did not charge a higher price at a town having a higher transportation charge. This explains the statement that is made that we have a different price on oil at practically every point of the territory. We should do so because the freight rates vary.

If at any time anybody feels that we are not dealing absolutely fairly with our trade, we will be very glad to have the facts put before us and we will demonstrate to their satisfaction that our prices are right, or we will make them right.

Goods That Are Being Advertised to Your Customers

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

The New York Letter

Work Under Weights and Measures Law. Jobbers and Manufacturers Combine to Fight Bankruptcy Frauds. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

New York, July 2, 1914.

It is likely that the retail grocery business in this city will soon begin to notice the effect of some work which has recently been started by Commissioner Hartigan, the new head of the city's Bureau of Weights and Measures. He is a strong believer in the theory that many articles are now sold in grocery stores by measure or count that could more fairly be sold by weight. So he has begun a movement to get such articles sold by weight.

The Commissioner has found an old and almost forgotten State law on the subject and proposes to bring it into force. It provides that the customers may require that various kinds of food shall be sold by weight instead of by measure or count.

It is proposed to make use of the public schools and other agencies in educating the public to ask the grocers to sell such foods by weight. The schools will be especially useful, it is expected, in reaching the large foreign population. The children are to be educated to ask for the foods by weight and it is believed that the parents will be led by the children to buy in this way.

In addition, it is intended to interest various associations of housewives so that they may insist upon the grocers selling by weight to a much greater extent than at present.

Eggs, fruit, potatoes and various other kinds of vegetables are included among the articles which the Commissioner believes should be sold by weight. He holds that the sales by weight are more fair and honest to all and also tend to give the consumers better quality in some articles, such as eggs. He says that as the inferior eggs are lighter than good eggs the sale by weight will call attention clearly to the differences in quality.

The new line of work will be pushed more actively in the fall when the schools reopen, but a beginning has already been made in various directions. The Commissioner has five women inspectors now going about the city, visiting the markets and stores and buying food in order to detect violations of the weight and measure law. He is also expecting to get authority from the Mayor to increase this staff of women inspectors. The women often disguise themselves so as to appear like housewives living in the neighborhood. One of the points to which they are giving special attention is the use of computing scales. It is claimed that in many instances they find that dealers read the scales erroneously by adding a few cents, this being especially the case in some of the city markets.

Jobbing and manufacturing companies in the grocery trade have effected an informal organization to follow up bankruptcy frauds and it is expected that the work will be put upon a permanent basis, as it is said that frauds of this kind have been greatly increasing in recent years.

The first result has been the indictment of S. Landau, H. Landau, George Lippman and Abraham Lippman, who were all in the retail grocery business at 336 East 103d street up to January last. The Landaus are father and son and the Lippmans are relatives. It is charged in the indictment, presented by the Federal Grand Jury, that the firm was engaged in a conspiracy to conceal assets from a trustee in bankruptcy.

After the firm went into bankruptcy a tentative settlement was made, the creditors getting only a small percentage of their claims. While the settlement was pending the creditors got suspicious and employed detectives to trace the movements of the members of the firm for some time prior to the failure since then.

The detectives obtained evidence which was placed before the United States Attorney who sent assistants to make a thorough investigation. It is stated that the investigators found enough hidden assets to pay all of the firm's indebtedness and leave a handsome balance.

According to the evidence, which was next placed before United States Commissioner Gilchrist and Referee William Allen, the members of the firm used a number of schemes to cover up the location of their assets. One was said to be a delicatessen store in which large quantities of food from the grocery were stored. More than a ton of paprika was found in the delicatessen store and large quantities of other food products, in some instances more than is usually carried by an ordinary jobber.

Among the creditors who instigated the investigation were: Austin, Nich-

Increase your sales

$3.00 per family—each month

The average expenditure per family for raw milk is 10c. per day or $3.00 per month. Some spend much more. By building up a sale of evaporated milk you can switch that $3.00, or more, per family into your cash drawer. Every time you persuade a customer to use evaporated milk instead of raw milk, you increase your sales by $3.00, or more, per month. You can, of course, most quickly increase the use of evaporated milk by handling the brand that is generally recognized as the best repeater.

CARNATION MILK

is considered the leading brand of evaporated milk. It is clean, sweet and pure and will appeal to your customers—it will be easier for you to switch them from raw milk to evaporated milk—if you offer them Carnation Milk.

Remember that unless you sell a customer the best evaporated milk you put farther away the time when that customer will use evaporated milk instead of raw milk—that you stand in the way of getting that $3.00, or more, per month which now goes to the raw milk dealer—so push Carnation Milk—the leading evaporated milk. Your jobber has it.

Austin, Nichols & Co. have taken a leading part in forming the organization which is to continue the work of following up frauds in bankruptcy cases. Many other companies are giving strong support to the movement and it is hoped to eliminate such frauds in the grocery trade, or at least reduce them to a minimum.

It is pointed out that the retailers have a strong interest in encouraging the movement by giving any information at their command, as such frauds are a factor in unfair competition and injure the legitimate retail business in various ways.

One of the wholesalers in talking about the matter said that the wholesalers are themselves largely to blame for allowing such frauds to go through in the past when more critical inquiries would have exposed their real nature. He said that the wholesalers have simply been careless or failed to realize the extent of the evil and how readily it may be checked by organized effort.

In other lines of business there are organized associations which have been upon a smooth working basis for years and have been instrumental in running down all frauds that were attempted, and as a result of their vigilance and activity the evil has been greatly checked in all such lines of trade, but the grocery business, it is said, has been backward in this respect up to this time, at least in New York. It is expected that the new organization will bring about much improvement in such affairs after this.

The Board of Managers of the New York Coffee Exchange this week approved the report of the special committee which formulated rules for trading in sugar futures. It is now expected that the plans will be put into operation nearly in August.

Von Bremen, Asche & Co. have moved into new and spacious offices which have been especially altered and fitted up for the firm in the Powell Building at Hudson and Franklin streets. The firm has warehouses for its fancy imported groceries in this and other cities. It has an olive packing plant at 228 W. Broadway and is interested in similar establishments in France and Italy.

President O. B. McGlasson, of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, has appointed the following Executive Committee, chosen from the directors of the association elected at the recent annual convention:—

O. C. Maturn, of Chicago; Warren Goddard, of St. Louis; B. B. Cushman, of Detroit; Joseph W. Bragdon, Minneapolis; Chas. Feilbach, Toledo; C. T. Wilson, Buffalo, N. Y.; Clarence E. Hanscome, Boston; James Hewitt, Philadelphia, and B. D. Crane, Fort Smith, Ark.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Spot coffee is quiet and prices steady. The country is buying only in a small way for current requirements and is not looking ahead. The quotations on Santos 4s are from 11¾ to 12 cents, according to quality. Rio 7s are quoted at 8¾ to 8⅞ cents. The mild grades are quiet, with only a small jobbing demand.

Teas are dull. The new arrivals of Japans, Formosas and Cougous are not awakening much interest. The quality of these arrivals has showed improvement in the last week or so, but the assortments here are still poor and full prices must be paid by the buyers when they need some special grade. The trade believes that a livelier market will soon develop as the result of the large crops.

Rice continues to sell only in a hand-to-mouth way. The general tendency of the buyers is to hold off and buy only for present requirements. Reports from the South indicate that the mills are asking full prices on stocks now on hand.

Spices are in fair jobbing demand and the demand is expected to increase next month. Peppers are firmly held and some varieties are scarce. Other lines are not getting any special attention.

Molasses is dull. There is little demand for grocery grades. Prices are steady, as there is no special pressure to sell.

There are moderate withdrawals of refined sugar. Most of the contracts at low prices have been closed up. There is occasional reselling of standard granulated sugar bought at 3.85 cents for an advance up to 4.15 cents or so. All of the local refiners are quoting 4.30 cents on new business.

Cheap peas are weak and unsettled, as the supplies seem in excess of the demand, although the reports have been indicating short crops. Holders are freely offering standard early June peas at 65 to 70 cents, with few buyers at these figures. In the medium and finer grades the supply does not seem excessive, so the market is steady, although quiet. In spot tomatoes most lots that are sold in this market bring 72½ cents for No. 3 Marylands, f. o. b. Baltimore. Occasional lots are sold at 72 cents, but the quality is said to be a little under strict standards. Corn, beans and other lines on the spot are getting little attention. There is not much doing in future tomatoes. Packers generally refuse to give any concessions from their prices, 75 cents for No. 3s and 55 cents for No. 2s, f. o. b. Baltimore.

In the new pack of California canned fruits little activity is now displayed in this market. Agents of the packers express satisfaction, however, with the total amount of business booked up to date, and the packers seem content to await developments as to further business. Southern canned fruits are firm. There has been more than the average amount of business in white cherries.

Sell Franklin Carton Sugar by the Container

Your customers know what sugar is and what it will do, and expect to keep on buying it and eating it as long as they live. The right thing to do when a woman asks for sugar is to sell her a SUPPLY instead of SAMPLE—sell her a WHOLE CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR instead of one or two CARTONS.

It's easy to show a woman the convenience of having a CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the house, always handy when she needs it.

Selling FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR by the CONTAINER is not only a convenience for your customers, but it saves you money, because you make one delivery instead of dozens. It gives you a wholesale outlet at a retail profit—you don't have to even open the CONTAINER to make your profit on every CARTON in it. When you sell a woman a CONTAINER of 30 two-pound CARTONS you make the profit on her purchases of sugar for some time to come; if you sell her one CARTON you leave an opening for competitors to sell her the other TWENTY-NINE. Lots of your customers buy flour by the barrel, potatoes by the bushel, canned goods by the dozen—it just as easy to sell them FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR BY THE CONTAINER. Try it.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is packed 24, 48, 60 and 120 pounds to the CONTAINER. Ask your Jobber for full information as to grades.

The Franklin Sugar Refining Company PHILADELPHIA

"Your customers know FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is CLEAN sugar"

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"Here's the right way to buy sugar, Madam—30 Franklin Cartons in a neat Container. It's a big convenience to have a supply of sugar in the house and know you won't have to run out every time you want a pound or two."

ment have been announced in the last week by the Associated Co. They are higher than the trade had expected. The local trade does not seem willing to pay the prices. Some of the brokers are said to be trying to put through business at special discount, but it is doubtful if the packers will accept such business. Little interest in future dried prunes is displayed by local buyers and the market here seems very easy and irregular. Quotations on 40s to 60s for October shipment, range from 5½ to 6 cents for the four sizes, f. o. b. Dried peaches are dull. Dried apricots are selling slowly for forward shipment, but the coast market is reported to be firm.

There is a moderate business in canned fish of various kinds. Spot pink salmon is selling well in lots of 25 to 100 cases at firm prices. Buyers and sellers seem apart in their views as to values of medium reds, There is not much demand for red Alaska, but it is rather scarce and firm. The reports indicate that sockeye and chinooks are scarce and firm. Sardines of all kinds are scarce.

Flour has declined in price and is now more active. It is said that some of the big baking companies have been replenishing their supplies at the lower prices. Most of the sales of old crop spring wheat patents have been within a range of $4.20 to $4.25 for flour in jute. There are said to have been some sales at still lower prices, and, on the other hand, favorite brands have been bringing prices a little above the general range. New Kansas flour has been moving slowly at prices ranging from $3.75 to $3.95 for straights in sacks for July-August delivery. For new soft winters in wood, tentative prices from $3.90 to $4 are quoted, but there is not much doing as yet in this flour.

Trading in butter is cautious. There are fair sales of receipts for current consumption, but speculative buyers are proceeding slowly. The top grades are steady. On creamery extras the prices range from 27 to 27½ cents, the inside figure being for qualities that score about 92 points. The strictly fancy lots bring the outside figure. Fine firsts bring 26 to 26½ cents; there is a free movement of the medium to fine grades at 23 to 25 cents. There is an increased demand from out-of-town buyers for these grades. The supply is liberal, however, so all demands are met promptly. There is considerable butter of fairly good quality to be had at 23 cents. Process is quiet and steady, with the best grades quoted at 20½ to 22½ cents.

Eggs are quiet. The really fancy grades are scarce and firm. There is a plentiful supply, however, of grades that answer ordinary requirements. The medium and lower grades are urgently offered at irregular prices. The fresh-gathered Western extras range from 23 to 25 cents; extra firsts, 22 to 22½ cents; firsts, 20 to 21½ cents; seconds, 18 to 19½ cents. Fancy fresh nearby eggs are bringing somewhat higher prices, the large white bringing from 24 to 28 cents and other nearby eggs having a wide range from 20 to 26 cents, according to grading as to size and color.

Have You Got Any Goods You Don't Want?

Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Your Wife Can Help You Sell Baking Powder

¶ You personally can't know whether Rumford's Powders are better bakers than others, but your wife can. Why not let her test Rumford's and two or three others, and tell you about it? With that information you can sell baking powder and sell it right. We are perfectly willing to abide by the result.

¶ She has probably seen in some of our advertising that Rumford's contains only phosphate, starch and soda, but it won't hurt to be sure that she knows it when she makes the test.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week and comparatively light demand, except that new teas are still coming forward and are still wanted. Prices show no change for the week, either in old teas or new teas.

Coffee.

The coffee market is very dull. Options have been quite uneasy and weak during the greater part of the week, but actual coffee of the better grades, at least, shows no change. Good roasting grades of Santos coffee are selling quite well, and command a steady price. Ordinary grades are easier, and concessions could probably be obtained upon them. Mild coffees show no change for the week; demand moderate. Java and Mocha unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

Early in the week raws weakened somewhat and sales were made at a slight decline, but later the market advanced again, and the situation is now rather firm, and refiners are talking an advance in refined, though this, if it takes place, will almost certainly not take place until after the holiday. All refiners are unchanged on the same basis as a week ago. The consumptive demand for sugar is good.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose and all sweets are dull and unchanged. Compound syrup, sugar syrup and molasses are practically not wanted at all, except for manufacturing purposes, and all rule at the same prices as last reported.

Fish.

Prices on summer caught Norway mackerel are now obtainable and some sales have been made at comparatively low prices, but this grade of fish is not wanted, as the quality is poor. Autumn caught fish are not yet offered, but will be before long. Irish mackerel is unchanged and only in fair demand. Shore mackerel in fair supply at moderate prices. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and dull. Salmon is in good seasonable demand, without further change in price. Domestic and imported sardines are all firm and unchanged, speaking particularly of future domestic.

Butter.

The receipts of butter are about normal for the season, and the consumptive demand is good. The proportion of fancy butter is about the same as usual, and there is some demand for storage purposes. The market is in a healthy condition at the present range of quotations and likely to remain unchanged, while the quality is running fancy. The flush of butter is about over, and no change in conditions is looked for in the near future.

Eggs.

The receipts of fresh eggs are about normal for the season. Owing to the extreme weather, the bulk of the receipts are showing heat effects. The percentage of fine eggs is very light, and the market is very firm at an advance of 2 cents per dozen on the finest eggs, while there is an abundance of eggs around that have to be sold at concessions, according to quality.

Cheese.

The make of cheese is increasing, and the market is steady at about 1/2 cent per pound lower than it was a week ago. The average quality arriving is very good, and there is some little demand for speculation. Very little change is expected in the near future.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line is firm at 1/2 cent per pound advance over a week ago, due to the holiday demand. Stocks are reported to be about normal. The market is in a healthy condition and no change is looked for in the immediate future. Pure and compound lard are steady at unchanged prices, with a fair consumptive demand. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats are unchanged and steady, with an increased demand.

Canned Goods.

The market on tomatoes, both spot and future, is unchanged and very little interest is being shown by the trade. New peas are coming in from New York State and Wisconsin. The quality is better than last year, but some reports are to the effect that the crop is likely to be short. This, however, has caused no change in the market. Buyers are awaiting deliveries of future purchases, and are not much interested in the spot offerings. Corn is unchanged, with only a fair spot demand and no interest in futures. Apples unchanged and moderately active. The general naming of prices on California canned fruits has produced a considerable volume of business, although some packers are making concessions from the opening figures.

Beans and Peas.

There has been an exceptionally light demand for both pea beans and marrows. Prices are low, but there has been no decline for the week. California limas moderately active at ruling prices. Green and Scotch peas quiet.

Dried Fruits.

Dried fruits are dull, and practically no interest is manifested by the trade. Spot prices are unchanged and practically nothing is doing in futures. New prices on August-September shipment of seeded raisins have been named, with a guarantee to be delivered December 31st, but the business booked several weeks ago has practically supplied the trade with their requirements.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

In spite of disturbing conditions, in general, trade in our line continues quite satisfactory, and while incoming orders are not very large as a rule, they show a good hand-to-mouth demand, and the orders are not very large, but quite frequent.

The writer of this, our Mr. Gustave Porges, has just returned from a ten weeks' stay in Europe, after visiting principally the sardine centers where we are interested.

Mr. Porges spent a good deal of his time in the fishing centers in Norway. Unfortunately the catch of sardines in Norway has not been as good as expected, and while some fish has been taken, and while the quality has been improving every week, so far the catch is far from satisfactory. At any rate, it is gratifying to report that we are at least getting some sardines, and sardines of very good quality, indeed, so that the scarcity which has prevailed in Norwegian sardines is somewhat relieved. There is still hopes that we will have a fairly good catch, although no matter how good the catch, it cannot have very much influence on prices of Norwegian sardines. Of course, the fish that is being caught now is of the very finest quality, which is also very gratifying.

In France the catch of sardines has only begun, and the fish caught are really too large to use for the American trade. We shall have to wait until smaller fish appear. The French manufacturers have enormous difficulties on account of dissension between them and the fishermen, and it is not likely that they are going to be settled very shortly, so under no circumstances can we look forward to a large catch of French sardines, and certainly not for low prices.

In Portugal there is only a fair catch. Trade in sardines of all kinds continues very good, indeed, and if we only had the goods we could sell a great deal more sardines than we ever did before.

Stockfish.—The catch in Norway is somewhat better than at first anticipated, but it still falls far below the average. Stocks of old fish are entirely cleared, and we shall have to reckon with high prices this year, both for round and split fish.

Sprats, which have been rather a slow seller of late, are selling very nicely now, particularly in the South, where the trade seems to be reviving. The catch of sprats this season has been rather short, principally because lots of very poor sprats are on the market, which our people did not wish to pack, wishing to maintain a high standard of quality. This will create a short supply of sprats this season.

New York.

Standard Canned Goods.

The long drought in this section was broken during the week by several rain storms, which were too heavy in some places and too light at other points. The places that needed rain the most either got too much all at one time, or else too little, but the general results were beneficial to the tomato plants. Extremely hot weather followed the storms, and it remains to be seen whether or not the benefits of the rain will be overcome by the scorching sun. The rain came too late, however, to help the crops of peas, string beans, wax beans, spinach, strawberries and cherries, because they are, practically, all in the cans now. Blackberries and raspberries are coming in, but the demand from the shippers is making them cost the canners much more than had been expected. The canning season here, so far, has been a series of surprises for the packers. Further unfavorable weather conditions would cause more disappointment.

There were only small dealings in future tomatoes again this week. The canners show less disposition to push their sales because of the unfavorable weather conditions, and they will not entertain offers at a small concession from their asking prices. On the other hand, jobbers continue their policy of buying futures only as they need them. When the prices for spot delivery and futures come together on a level the buying of tomatoes for future delivery will be active enough. If present indications are worth anything, the prices of spot tomatoes will move up to the quotations for futures.

Spot tomatoes were again active this week, and they were distributed to nearly all sections of the country. Had the buying orders during the last two weeks been as large as they usually are in the month of June, the market prices might have advanced a peg. As it is, they are a wee bit firmer, but not higher than they were last week. They may advance a fraction without much notice should the demand increase next week. Possibly, had the drought not been broken, they would have advanced this week.

String beans was the feature this week in this market. Because of the long drought the early arrivals were light instead of being plentiful, and the shippers out-bid the canners. In consequence, the prices for both green and wax string beans advanced, with strong indications of higher prices coming before the end of the early season for canning them. The fall crop comes on in October. Peas were again active in small lots this week, and our canners are carrying light stocks of all grades. There was a better demand this week for spot corn, especially of the low-priced grades of Maine style and whole grain. There is the usual everyday buying of other vegetables, without much increase in the size of the orders, all for prompt shipment.

There is more doing in canned fruits and the market looks strong ahead. All kinds of cherries and berries are active and firmer as to prices, except gooseberries, which are not so scarce, and the price is easy. White wax cherries were plentiful and the low prices for them immediately attracted numerous orders, which still continue. They are worth looking after. Strawberries are strong and active. During this month there has been an increasing demand for future peaches, and they will do to buy at to-day's prices. Pineapples are selling in small lots. Pears and apples are inactive. No. 10 fruits of all kinds are likely to be scarce again this season. Blueberries are unpopular with the Baltimore canners, and the pack of them will be very small.

Cove oysters are dull, but firm as to prices.

Spices.

The market continues fairly active, white peppers, red peppers, cassias and cloves being in steady demand. All are firm in price and the trend is no doubt toward higher prices.

Pepper.—The market, especially for spot goods, is active and steady. Futures are slightly lower than prevailing prices for spot goods. Stocks here are small. The demand for pepper is likely to increase over the next two or three weeks and higher prices are probable.

Cloves.—In more active demand, at firmer and higher prices.

Mace.—In very active demand, at steady prices. These spices will sell well over the summer months.

Nutmegs.—Unchanged for all sizes. Demand fair at present values, which are safe.

Cassias.—All grades in increased demand both for spot and nearby stuff. Prices are steady and likely to go higher.

Gingers continue dull and unchanged. Present prices being very low.

Green Ginger Root.—The first arrivals are in and stocks were quickly bought up. It is likely high prices will prevail for this article during the summer months.

Tapiocas.—Somewhat firmer and in only fairly good demand.

Paprikas are dull, but generally steady. Prices show little, if any, change.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Celery rather firm and an advance probable. New Dutch poppy is firmer on account of unfavorable crop reports. Cummin has advanced sharply during the week. Other articles unchanged.

Booming Coffee For Icing Purposes.

The National Coffee Roasters' Association of New York is conducting a campaign in the interest of increasing the consumption of coffee. A circular has just been sent to all members, suggesting that a special boom be made on coffees for icing purposes. A part of the argument is as follows:—

Has it ever occurred to you that, by a concerted educational effort, it might be possible for us to eliminate from our experience (with respect to coffee) the duller season of the year, that upon which we are now entering? All of you have observed that during the heated term your sales of coffee are somewhat diminished. Why not let's enter upon a campaign to impress upon the public at large that iced coffee is a most delicious summer beverage.

It is a matter of only a generation ago that iced tea was regarded as a novelty and a fad, and we believe that through diligent and emphatic effort we can persuade the consumer to give a fair trial to this same method of serving his coffee and that a general introduction of it into the homes of the land would produce the most satisfactory results to all concerned. Iced coffee is now being served to a great many people and is by them preferred to other beverages; why not make the preference general?

We recommend that you direct your salesmen to agitate the subject and to preach this doctrine vigorously to your customers. Have some placards printed with something like the following:—

ICED COFFEE

The Most Refreshing Summer Beverage

Serve with Cream, Sugar and Plenty of Ice

Our Coffees Especially Adapted for This Use

.....(firm name)

or words to that effect. It will mean that before the season is over several hundred thousand of these cards will be attracting the notice of patrons of grocery stores throughout the whole country. There is a good deal in the power of suggestion. There are many people who really dislike milk or iced tea, yet want a cooling beverage. We may not accomplish much during the first year of a campaign

STOLLWERCK Gold Brand Cocoa

Pleases Your Customers and Increases Your Cocoa Business

STOLLWERCK'S GOLD BRAND COCOA is the highest grade Dutch process cocoa on the market, and the Dutch process produces cocoa of the finest flavor and easiest to digest.

Think of those two points! First, its flavor will please your customers; second, Stollwerck's will not disagree with them—they can drink as much as they wish.

Not only will STOLLWERCK'S GOLD BRAND COCOA sell readily because of our extensive advertising, and keep selling because of its fine flavor and quality, but it will also help you sell STOLLWERCK'S MILK CHOCOLATE, and STOLLWERCK'S PLAIN CHOCOLATE, and STOLLWERCK'S GOLD BRAND COOKING CHOCOLATE—all high-grade, profitable, customer-pleasing goods. WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS like this, although we believe it will have some material effect; but eventually a substantial increase in the use of coffee during the summer months may be accomplished by this method. At any rate it costs only a trifle to try it. Cards like the foregoing can easily be made at your local printing shop and the expense ought not to exceed a penny apiece.

"STOLLWERCK'S COCOA won't disagree with you because it's made by the original Dutch process which brings out the flavor and makes cocoa perfectly digestible."

If any of you have special recipes that will produce good results in iced coffee, we will be glad to have them passed along to this office and we will duly notify the trade. Our own experience is along the line of suggesting that the coffee be made a little stronger than when prepared for drinking hot; this to allow for the reduction attendant upon icing it. The tumbler should be filled with ice and the hot coffee poured over it, then cream and sugar added. Of course that, too, is a matter of taste and that the consumer will have to develop for himself.

If you are not familiar with this beverage, try it yourself and induce all your salesmen to try it.

A Loan on a Life Insurance Policy.

Dear Sir:—How much money can a party get loaned on a $1,500 life insurance policy with which to get through college, the premium being guaranteed. Please explain. Thanking you, we remain,

This of course depends upon the date of the policy—how long it has been in force. Without knowing this we could not even guess at it. Write the insurance company and they will tell you.

An Answer to a Recent Article.

Chicago, June 25, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have read with interest the article in your June 22d issue, in which you mention our advertising on the Stewart tire pump and the fact that our branch in Philadelphia did not have any, though the advertisement in the "Saturday Evening Post" told prospective purchasers to apply there.

I have been in the advertising business too long not to know the truth of your argument as it applies generally. But I also know of one case a few years ago where a concern advertised a certain article at a certain price several months ahead of their getting such an article out and thus prevented tremendous competition by stalling the formation of a big company to put out a similar article. This is no explanation of the situation which you criticised, neither do we feel at all hurt over your criticism, so everybody's satisfied.

Boots—Shoes—Findings

Proven Rule for Reducing Selling Costs.

Concrete examples of carrying on a shoe business with and without advertising of some sort or other are not lacking in point of numbers. The preponderance of evidence, as the lawyers, say, is always for the affirmative when one gets "down to brass tacks" in the argument. It would therefore be superfluous for the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" to offer any fresh proof of this proposition beyond quoting the few facts set forth in a most illuminating manner in the text below. The "story" is in the form of an advertisement that appeared last week in the "Public Ledger" to prove a point in an impersonal way. To be sure, the data quoted relates to a large city shoe store, but the deductions are applicable to the activities of the small town merchant as well as the manufacturer, as follows:—

The absorption of "the cost of advertising"—a certain well-managed shoe store did approximately $100,000 worth of business in one year. Its costs of doing business were roughly as follows:—

|-------------------------|------------|
| Rent | $9,000—9% |
| Sales wages | 8,000—8% |
| Miscellaneous | 4,000—4% |
| Advertising | 4,000—4% |

Total $25,000—25%

The manager discovered that by doubling his advertising appropriation he could influence more than double the number of people. His sales the next year bettered the $200,000 mark. His costs of doing business then became as follows:

|-------------------------|--------------|
| Rent | $15,000—7½% |
| Sales wages | 14,000—7% |
| Miscellaneous | 7,000—3½% |
| Advertising | 8,000—4% |

Total $44,000—22%

His total selling expense was reduced from 25 per cent. to 22 per cent. of his net sales. The principle involved in this example applies to selling in the vast majority of particular instances. Whether the selling is local or National, of a retailer or a manufacturer, a full appreciation and use of effective advertising nine times out of ten brings results analogous to this striking example.

Increasing the advertising outlay may often be counted on to decrease the percentage of selling cost, the so-called "cost of advertising" being absorbed by the selling economies it affects. "The trade" is but a combination of unit stores. What is true of the units must be true of the whole trade. The cost of advertising—planned and executed intelligently—will disappear in the savings it makes in selling costs.

Emphatic Opinion on Colored Shoes.

Every season the merchant handling shoes is in a quandary about colored shoes. Will they sell in a way to justify stocking them up to the usual quantity or otherwise? Manufacturers are also perplexed, unless a determined course is adopted; and, naturally, the retailer is furnished with such advice as might be expected under the circumstances. Just where the report originated that colored shoes were in the discard no one can say, but for some reason or other it got abroad that manufacturers were discontinuing the sale of this description of footwear. Several prominent shoe manufacturing concerns have favored the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" with their views on the subject, and another letter from a leading New England factory is appended:—

Marlborough, Mass., June 25, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Regarding the tendency of manufacturers to discourage the making of colored shoes, we beg to advise you that this is a matter in which we are not competent to give sound advice. It is a fact that last season the retail merchants bought very lightly on tan and white shoes. In some manner they appeared to have received the idea that these shoes would not sell. On the other hand we stocked nothing but tan and white shoes. The fact that we have 25,000 pairs ahead of our stock department at the present time is pretty good proof that, regardless of what manufacturers or merchants may decide, the average American is prone to make up his own mind as to what he or she wants.

Yours very truly,
ASHBY-CRAWFORD CO.

New Ideas From the West.

Handsome shoes are turned out by the shoe factories in the Western centers, as might be expected of men or organizations than whom none are more progressive and enterprising in the country. They are not one whit behind in originating new ideas along ultra practical lines as well. For instance, a seamless shoe for boys' wear of particular merit is being manufactured this season by a Wisconsin concern of reputation and standing. It is made in imitation welt, and the only seam in the upper is where the lines of the blucher pattern appear. The same company is also responsible for a seamless shoe in button style. Both patterns are stylish in appearance, are well made and serviceable.

Of these shoes an expert says: "The lined seamless shoe, instead of being impractical, has proven an even greater seller than the unlined seamless shoe. This may be due to the fact that there is a strong demand for sturdy, rugged school shoes for boys. A boy's shoe gets more abuse and wear on the seams than a man's shoe does, and the fact that there are no seams to rip makes this an ideal shoe for this purpose.

"The shape and appearance is just as good and neat as a shoe with seams. The crimp in the back of the shoe is so reinforced with two strips of canvas stitched in with panel stitching that the curve will remain as long as the shoe lasts. The lining pattern, instead of being one piece, is the identical one used for cutting linings for the regular seam shoe. A shoe of this kind would be an ideal army shoe, for it would abolish troubles arising from chafing, which is due to seams entirely."

"Amfelt" is a new material for soles, that is expected, so the originators say, to take the place of both leather and rubber in shoes. It is the result of much research and experimental work, covering a period of years, by a New York firm. One of the chief advantages of these soles is that they are so light that a pair of shoes made with soles of average thickness weigh a pound less than when rubber soled.

The felt product is very flexible and will not slip, even on icy pavements. This, it is expected, will make them well adapted for winter street wear. The soles are water-proofed by a special process and are adapted for street wear at any season of the year, as felt is a non-conductor of heat.

A feature of the product is that the soles, while flexible, are firm and cut with an edge like leather, the result being obtained by scientific felting and the use of high-grade material. It also comes water-proofed or not, as desired. "Amfelt" is made in white, tan and black of different thicknesses. It is sold by the pound in sheet form. Heels are made from the same material, of any desired thickness. This new shoe sole material will be exhibited for the first time at the Shoe and Leather Fair, one of the big shoe events of the year, Boston, Mass., this week. Dealers should not overlook this new material in making up their fall order.

Smart Shoes for Men. An Annual Meeting.

An authority says the shoes men want most are dull, black calfskin, straight low oxfords, with blind eyelets, and broad, low heels. They are the smartest shoes for men this summer and the most in demand. As usual, there are differences of opinion, that are usually created by the stock in hand.

Commencing to-morrow (Tuesday) and continuing until Friday, the National Leather and Shoe Finders' Association will be in annual convention at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York. The so-called "pure shoe" bill now before Congress will come in for marked attention, and a series of resolutions against it will be passed.

Happy Future for a Shoe Buyer?

While the subjoined promulgation, though decidedly serious in tone, also has its humorous side. It is the "call" of a leading mail order house, devoted to apparel for the female species, about to add a shoe department in which women's shoes will be handled exclusively:—

We wish to secure the services of an experienced shoe buyer. The man to fill this position must really know the shoe business, the market resources and be able to buy at right prices. This position is to take charge of an important part of the work in what we believe will prove to be one of the fastest growing shoe businesses in America. The department has at its head a thoroughly competent man, and while the business is new, it has already come to the point where we require a very capable man to be associated with him. Unless you are a merchant, a worker and full of enthusiasm and energy, you will not be happy in this organization.

Should the "buyer" be engaged he will be given a number, like a convict, and his future will be a sealed book, so far as his success is concerned, open only to the firm. There isn't much chance to be happy under such circumstances.

Enlarging Capitalization of a Chain Store Proposition.

As a chain store proposition the Emerson Shoe Co., Boston, Mass., "has consented to the use of its name" by a new corporation with $500,000 capital, comprising 2,250 first preferred, 1,000 second preferred, 1,250 third preferred and 500 common shares. Preferred is 7 per cent. cumulative; $61,272 first preferred represents cash in full; $46,727 first preferred, $38,973 second preferred, $101,623 third preferred merchandise and bills receivable; after deduction liabilities to be assumed by the corporation $28,698 second preferred represents real estate; $23,328 second preferred machinery; $50,000 common, patent rights, trade marks, good will and copyrights, and $7,376 third preferred represents prepaid items. "Has consented" is good, and it is hard to suppress a smile in reading it. The Emerson Co. is a well-known concern, exploiting a medium price shoe—men and women's—in its own stores chiefly. The corporation mentioned is an offer of stock to increase capital and make a "little money on the side" by its promoters.

Not Working for Fewer Styles.

The following excerpts would be, like many other news reports appearing in carelessly edited newspapers, of which "Printers' Ink" is not one, important if true:—

The National Shoe Retailers' Association has started a movement in favor of fewer styles. The object is to make it easier for the dealers to keep stocked up, and to assist in concentrating demand on a few well-defined styles, instead of a great many which have little individuality.

Local associations all over the country are being interested in the plan, and if it works out as expected, members of these associations will confine their purchase to styles which have been approved as standard for the forthcoming season.

While many sales are now made on the strength of novelty in design, the movement would really assist the manufacturers and jobbers, many of whom, it is said, are at sea with respect to style tendencies.

When the above was shown to A. H. Geuting, secretary of the National Shoe Retailers' Association by the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," he said: "Not a word of truth in such a statement, which is absurd on its face. A report of this kind is equivalent to the allegation that the association had recommended the use of lace in preference to button shoes, circulated early in the year. There is no movement of this nature on foot, and there never will be one. Changes of styles in shoes is the life of the trade, and while it may appear burdensome and unnecessary to the unprogressive shoe man, be he little or big, it has been the means of placing American footwear in the lead of the world. It is just as essential for the shoe manufacturers to originate new models and to make improvements, both along artistic lines in fine goods and that for comfort, in staples, as it is for the season's changes in millinery and furniture, for example. They stimulate buying and broaden the trade by creating new designs and fresh wants. Whoever is responsible for this story did not know what they were talking about."

Is Your Stock Clean and Profitable?

A Western manufacturer, who claims to carry a $2,500,000 stock of shoes—750 different styles (think of it), makes the following announcement to the dealer:—

Keeping your shoe stock clean and profitable? Can you accomplish it by waiting 60 days to have shoes made up, and by buying five or six lines, each of which will naturally have its quota of "dead ones"? Or—can you do it better by concentrating your business on one line, carried in stock for you, so that you can order proven styles at a time and in the quantities you need? Can you successfully advertise six different lines of shoes? Think this over.

Food for thought is contained in the foregoing emanation. The style of the statement is to be commended for frankness, terseness and, above all, eloquent brevity. It also provides material for the merchant's cogitation along safe and sane business lines, especially as to "proven styles." What course should a general merchant pursue? This is the question that should make one pause. Whatever conclusion is reached, avoid "orphan" merchandise as the hardest to handle, because the merchant must create his own trade, at his own expense, energy and trouble.

Dry Goods Notions Knit Wear

Does It Pay to Over-price Goods?

As a general proposition, the merchants outside of the larger cities are a pretty square bunch of business men. Occasionally a "smart Aleck" will endeavor to put across some questionable stunts on his customers, but when detected, which he invariably is, loss of confidence is reflected in reduced sales. When a general merchant stoops to tricks and misrepresentation of his goods the public is not long in getting his "number," and the subsequent proceedings need not be related—the standing of that man in his community is nix, as the philosopher observed. An illustration is offered of a retailer who over-priced a lot of women's garments. The average merchant makes reasonable charges, but it appears that in this case the reverse occurred. By the cancellation of part of an order by a dealer, the manufacturer ascertained the excessive prices at which the merchandise was to have been sold.

A comparison of the figures revealed the fact that the merchant had marked up one garment as high as 300 per cent. above cost. A garment sold to the merchant at 75 cents was marked $3, or over 200 per cent. above cost. A garment for which the merchant paid 75 cents was ticketed for retail at $2.50, or a profit of over 200 per cent. A garment sold at $2.25 was marked to retail for $8, a mark-up of over 200 per cent. Another one bought for $1.38 was marked to sell at $6, or over 200 per cent. above cost. A garment bought for $3 was marked to sell for $12, or 300 per cent. above cost. Still another, bought for $1, was marked to sell for $3, or 200 per cent. above cost.

After narrating the above figures, the party cognizant of the transaction concluded by saying: "The merchant who was guilty of attempting to obtain an unwarranted profit in the manner described was not only doing an injustice to his customers by misrepresenting the value of the goods, but he was also placing the manufacturer in the unen-

Current Demands. Accepted Fall Styles.

In their weekly review the Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co., St. Louis, say:—"Business continues favorable. The extreme hot weather has brought about an increased demand for mid-summer merchandise. Crop prospects continue favorable, and a feeling of confidence, as regards the outlook for the approaching fall season, is becoming more general. Cotton goods continue firm, with a tendency towards higher prices. White rattines are in very good demand, rice cloths a close second, followed by voiles. A fair call prevails for white crepes.

"In women's ready-to-wear, until the present merchants have been somewhat skeptical as to placing orders, owing to no assurance as to the proper styles. Early lines of suits were shown short in lengths, 28 to 30 inches, but the later styles, which are correct, and will be shown in the month of August, are from 32 to 48 inches. Lengths will vary from 32 to 40 inches, and the redingotes will be very popular for fall. Skirts to suits will be made with long Russian tunic and pleated effects. Broadcloths, men's wear serges and fancy weave suitings are the preferred materials, and the favorite colors green, plum, navy and the new shade of brown called tete de negro.

"The call for summer underwear remains very strong, and in excess of past seasons, and excellent evidence of retailers' minimum stocks. The season differs from previous years in that the demand is for both the high and low grades of goods, while previous years the demand was for the lower grades, wanted chiefly for July clearing sales."

Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, speak of the dry goods trade as follows: "In view of the failure of a large Eastern dry goods house (H. B. Claffin Co.) last week, it is timely to state that conditions in the dry goods trade generally are fundamentally sound. Prices have ruled strong for the past six months, with an upward tendency at the present time, and retail selling throughout the country has continued very close to normal.

"Stocks of merchandise are conservatively low, and as buying has been in small quantities as needed (which is the most profitable way of operating), it is expected that the inventories now being taken covering the first half of the year will show satisfactory profits for merchants in all sections. As buyers have not anticipated their fall requirements to any great extent, heavy demands will undoubtedly be made on wholesalers who have the stocks to deliver during the coming months. Road sales for the past week show a gain over those of the corresponding period a year ago."

Returned Goods Problem Pronounced an Incurable Evil by President of National Wholesale Dry Goods Association.

During the past two months the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has frequently referred to what is known and spoken of as the "returned goods" problem. Correspondence expressing the opinion of leading jobbers and wholesalers on the question, together with personal interviews with trade notables, has been published at various times in this journal, and more than usual interest has been thereby aroused. Retailers have also contributed a quota of information and ideas from their point of view, which has in almost every instance been the opposite of those who have charged them with unfairness, if not violence of standard business methods, whatever that may mean to different men of differing processes of reasoning. So much was heard from the jobbing end about merchants taking advantage of circumstances and trade relations to impose upon houses in this respect, that action on the part of associated business bodies was looked for at no distant day.

Probably with this end in view, the members of the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association have been exchanging views on the "returned goods" situation in an informal way. It is not likely this correspondence will be regarded other than confidential, and in connection therewith Calvin M. Smyth, president of the association, said to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" last week: "There has been no change in the returned goods situation, and there is not likely to be so far, at least, as any official action of the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association is concerned. There will be two meetings in July, but beyond what an exchange of personal opinion goes, no formal resolutions dealing with the matter will be adopted. There has been, it is true, quite a little correspondence between the members in all parts of the country—the leading wholesalers and jobbers—and I have looked over a number of the letters. Various methods of dealing with the problem were suggested, but the consensus of opinion is that returned goods, from the retailer, as such and of itself, is an incurable evil.

"In other words," continued Mr. Smyth, "each one must deal with and settle the difficulty to suit themselves. It must be admitted that the jobber is at fault in many instances. By this I do not mean that any malice is shown, but in many, many cases the action of shipping what is deemed suitable, salable and seasonable merchandise to a dealer under some circumstances should be charged not to the head, but to the heart. A merchant is very often gratified by receiving goods which he may not have specifically ordered, but are good sellers at the time, and that were sent him solely on the responsibility of his jobber or wholesaler. This practice, which is quite common and is followed by every first-class house in dealings with merchants of unassailable credit, does not always work out as designed. Possibly our judgment is wrong and the goods do not move, then, of course, the dealer returns the merchandise and we suffer the cost of shipping each way, besides the unfavorable criticism thereto attached.

"Salesmen on the road are to blame also; although their judgment about recommending goods is more or less of a speculation. In addition to booking the regular or legitimate order of a merchant, on his own responsibility he will have his house send along numbers in different or special lines that he believes the dealer can handle to advantage. Very frequently the buyer appreciates this attention, as he has had no opportunity to look the material over; that is, if it moves. If the other thing happens, then he writes in that the salesman has 'stuffed' his order and the goods will not be accepted, but returned at once at our expense. At the same time the dealer may have a stock of 'stickers' on his shelves—an accumulation, if you please, of bad buying judgment on his own part—these are also sent back at the same time, taking advantage of conditions.

"When the salesman is called upon for an explanation he meets the situation by instructing his house to charge the amount to him, relying on future sales of this very kind to reimburse him before the season closes. Usually he wins out, and is ahead of the game. Mind you, the salesman just sizes up his man, the possibilities of saleable merchandise, and takes a chance. It is a speculative proposition, is recognized as legitimate, and, as I said, in many instances his judgment is often warmly praised by the merchant and his foresight is commended by the house. You know, to 'err is human, to forgive divine,' or words to that effect, although it cannot be said a jobber is in such a frame of mind when a lot of goods come back from a merchant with no reason for complaint excepting his own faulty judgment in selection or overbuying. However, after careful thought and consideration, we must set it down as an incurable evil, and let it go at that."

Another angle is furnished to the "returned goods" controversy by the attitude of the Ribbon Manufacturers of the United States, Division E of the Silk Association of America. Secretary Peugnet, writing to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," says:

New York, June 29, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In reply to your favor of June 25th, would state that the Ribbon Manufacturers' Division did not take formal action on the question of "returned goods." For your information I would state that the consensus of opinion was that all manufacturers should take individual action in flagrant cases, and refuse to accept goods that have been returned unless defective or sent other than ordered. The more publicity we give this matter the more it will help in educating the manufacturers to the necessity of being firm in resisting unreasonable demands of buyers.

RAMSAY PEUGNET,
Secretary Silk Association of America.

This line of action was determined upon at the meeting of the ribbon manufacturers in New York about three weeks ago. While not concerted, it is a positive declaration nevertheless, and is doubtless in line with what the Wholesale Dry Goods Association and the Jobbers' Association of Knit Goods Buyers will follow.

Trio of Jobbers' Conventions.

Next week three important meetings of the selling trade will be held at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York. Monday the Jobbers' Association of Notion Buyers will convene, and the following subjects will be discussed:—

"Best Plan and Most Accurate Method of Stock Inventory," "What Advantages Accrue Under the System of Classifying Merchandise Under Special Numbers, Grouping Similar Items Together?" "Spool Thread Situation," "In What Manner Can the Conditions Surrounding the Sale of Spool and Skein Linen Threads Be Improved?" "Freight Allowance on Silk Thread," "Cash Discount."

The following day the Jobbers' Association of Fabric Buyers will get together at the same place, and these are the topics to be considered, besides "cussing" the National political administration:—

"Report of Members on Dress-Making Instruction Plans," "Has the Reduction of the Tariff Created Greater Competition in the Way of the Production of Finer Textiles Between America and Europe?" "Will the Increase in Railroad Rates Affect Business to the Extent That it Will Create a Better Feeling in the Distribution of Merchandise as a Result of Enormous Crops?" "In What Manner Can the Returned Goods Evil Be Minimized?" "Use of Miniature Head Ends in Sampling."

Wednesday the Jobbers' Association of Knit Goods will assemble at the Waldorf-Astoria, as per schedule, and take up the following topics:—

"How Can We Best Encourage Our Salesmen to Sell Profitable Merchandise?" "Premiums and Bonuses Paid Salesmen for Selling Certain Articles of Merchandise." It is also planned to invite some large manufacturer who spins his own yarn and turns out the finished product, to give a moving picture exhibition covering the process of manufacture from the raw material to the marketable merchandise.

Trades Disturbed But Not Uneasy.

It is generally admitted that the failure of the H. B. Claflin Co., New York, has been a shock to the entire dry goods trade. To be sure it is not the first time this institution—for such it really is—has been in financial difficulties; but it is such and always was so important a factor in wholesaling and mill distribution that its collapse would be a calamity. This is the feeling prevalent in mercantile and financial circles at present, and, judging from what is heard, the company will be reorganized and put on a sound basis in a brief time. The effect, however, of the mix-up will be felt for several months. With this in mind, the "Journal of Commerce" may be quoted as reflecting conditions in the primary market:—

At the close of the half year there is much less to say in a comforting vein than any merchant was looking for at the opening of the year. The overshadowing influence of the failure of the largest dry goods mercantile institution in the country, which has left the trade in the air, so to speak, is hardly a matter of comfort to consider, as the books are being closed. There are rumors a-plenty and they all hinge about the lack of confidence in business legislation that is now going on. Whether it be for good or ill in the long future, the fact is established that leading dry goods merchants lack confidence in the ability of the present body of legislators to make the changes in laws that are deemed necessary.

The mid-year finds depression more or less universal in many lines of goods. Raw material values are very high in relation to the selling prices of goods and merchants find it most difficult to secure returns for mills that will stimulate production. This applies to cotton, wool, silk and flax.

In the silk markets, while it is admitted that agents have hardly 75 per cent. of a fall business on their books compared with a year ago, there is business being done to the satisfaction of some mills. The styles in fabrics are variable and puzzling and no manufacturer feels warranted in going ahead on stock goods of any kind. Satins, taffetas, velvets, some messalines and various other cloths are being bought, but in no overwhelmingly large quantities.

Arnold, Constable & Co. Redivivus.

One of the best-known Eastern firms, Arnold, Constable & Co., New York, was incorporated Tuesday last with a capital of $2,500,000. They do both a wholesale and retail business, and in the latter is considered one of the old-time "exclusive" stores of the metropolis, though its present location is some distance from the new shopping district. Its lines are rated the very best by merchants everywhere, and while the change from a partnership to its new form is a surprise, perhaps, as a matter of fact, the ownership remains in the same hands. The company maintains permanent foreign offices in Paris, Manchester, Chemnitz and Lyons, its silks and dress materials generally being rated in the A 1 class.

For many years its advertising methods have been peculiar, to say the least, smacking of the '50s in style and space. Recently a more liberal, up-to-date policy has been followed and the improvement in the business is noticeable. The wholesale branch has been steadily successful and is in a "healthy, fine condition," as one of the company stated last week.

Hardware Tools Specialties

Guaranteed as Against Fake Paints.

Cheapness is pretty nearly always the factor that controls in the buying of ready mixed paints to the average user. Therefore the offers of the catalogue houses are given more consideration than they are entitled to on the merits of the goods. In a recent talk with G. B. Heckel, secretary of the Paint Manufacturers' Association of the United States, in relation to paints sold by the retail mail order houses, he said:

"At one time we believed the mail order houses would cut in on our regular trade. They are in a position to sell a vast quantity of goods. Consequently their operations were regarded as of some consequence. As you know, our association is to not only look after general trade interests, but also to investigate and, when requested, analyze the character of paints placed on the market. With this end in view we took particular pains to investigate a certain brand of paint marketed by a prominent Chicago company—"Sersco," if you want to know the name by which it is sold. The result was not a bit disquieting to the manufacturers of paints whose brands are known from one end of the country to the other. We recognized that paints sold by this particular crowd would command a large sale, but only to people unacquainted with the real quality of what we may call reliable ready-to-use-paints, of which tons are sold every year."

Quoting from the catalogue in question, this is what the mail order house has the assurance to say:—

The paints listed in this catalogue are manufactured under our own supervision in our own factory, one of the largest paint factories in the world. Every ingredient used in their manufacture is thoroughly tested by expert chemists employed in our paint department. By putting every ingredient to a chemical test we insure a uniform quality of paint, nothing being used that fails to come up to our standard of quality. These paints are made according to our own formulas and are combinations of materials that produce long wearing paints, as has been proven by years of weather tests. They are high-grade scientifically prepared paints that measure up to our guarantee. We will furnish new paint free and pay the transportation charges if our paints are found other than as represented. By manufacturing our own paint we secure a quality so high that we can safely guarantee it.

This bold assertion, as Mr. Heckel characterized it, is a "fake pure and simple. We are satisfied that this particular brand is cheap stuff. It is guaranteed because the buyer at retail has no means how he shall proceed legally to expose the fraud, let alone the expense of such an action. Consequently he suffers the injury and makes his own resolves as to what he will do when it comes to buying paints in the future. To sum the whole thing up, the paint manufacturers of the country, whose products are well known, have reached the conclusion that if the public wish to be deluded by the goods put out by the catalogue houses as 'guaranteed,' that is their privilege. If whitening and water is accepted in lieu of white lead and linseed oil and is 'guaranteed a paint to give complete satisfaction,' why it is up to the consumer to say whether he is 'stung' or not. The manufacturer of reliable paints now knows that the consumer

"Then again the proposition of another retail mail order house is equally misleading. It quotes what is designated as the 'biggest spread, a long-lasting, 100 per cent. paint.' This is another fake, pure and simple, and we have no hesitancy in denouncing it to the trade. There is one other matter I would like to mention and that is 'neutral oil.' This article is being urged as a substitute for linseed oil. It is a fraud for what it is recommended, in our judgment. Cleveland is the headquarters of this product and the paint manufacturers are doing what is possible to caution the public against its use in the connection for which its qualifications are entirely unsuited. General merchants who are stocking ready-to-use paints should at least make some inquiry as to the main constituent parts of the goods, or place their order with houses whose reputation is, like Caesar's wife, above suspicion."

Price Maintenance a la Extremes.

If the National legislators can fathom the true inwardness of the commercial mind they are good ones. What one will recommend as a solution of a vexatious problem, another will denounce as absolutely impracticable. Truly, this is not remarkable, because it is only a manifestation of the complete character of human nature, and in such an event it is probable the majority opinion will sway, as against an individual expression, no matter how strongly presented. For an illustration of this precept, if such it may be called, is the recent action of the American Iron, Steel and Heavy Hardware Association, which held a meeting in Cleveland.

Naturally, the Stevens bill, now before Congress, came in for a general discussion. This measure is to establish a resale price maintenance, in which the hardware dealer in any situation is and ought to be concerned, when the tremendous price cutting shadow of the retail mail order house looms up in the distance—or nearby, as the case may be. This supposed high shouldered organization proposed as an amendment that there should be a proviso for redress on the part of the manufacturer against a dealer selling goods at less than the established price; it should permit the establishment of different prices in different sections to cover transportation charges; it should define the words "dealers at wholesale," "dealers at retail" and "the public." After a reasonable time for reflection one might candidly say, when the whole purpose of the bill is considered, "Now, will you be good." This special scheme of making merchandising a proposition to be governed by statute law is a joke which even the cynical Omar, of old, would appreciate, and if living embody in a new quatrain.

Again the Mail Order House Method.

Manufacturers of the average class are busy discussing who are the "sinners" who sell to mail order houses, to the detriment of the ordinary dealer. It is a condition capable of rectification, in the minds of men wholly honest. The retailer of hardware in a large city may not be sensible of his loss of trade by these modern distributors of merchandise at a price. The small town merchant, however, feels the competition by compelling circumstances. The retailer with nerve, good credit and a little versatility, meets this debilitating factor with his face to the morning, and in readiness to "show up" the untenable position of these worry makers in prices and sound arguments.

This disturbing element in the hardware business is what may be termed an "old story," but is a menace which must be met and, while it cannot be overcome, may be met with equal conditions. As a rule, a community favors a contestant with bowels; and while the present-day catalogues of these establishments are formidable and frightening to the timid retailer, to the man with a head on his shoulders there is an avenue of escape, even if the parcel post does favor them seemingly. The P. P. is an accepted accommodation to everybody, and the sooner the adverse criticism so prevalent in the trade, individually and through organizations, is dropped, the better. In other words, there is nothing to it.

Starting New Chain of Grocery Stores in Louisville, Ky.

The Jones-Hughes Co., has been incorporated in Louisville, Ky., with $200,000 capital stock for the purpose of operating a chain of grocery stores. The members of the company are Lawrence Jones, Robert E. Hughes, Saunders P. Jones and Warner L. Jones. The company will operate stores known as Quaker Maid Groceries. All goods will be sold for cash. None be delivered, and reduced prices will prevail. It is said that the system will be modeled along the lines of the Bowers string of stores in Memphis, Tenn. The new company has already put eight or ten stores in operation, and expects ultimately to have between 75 and 100. It has started selling bread at three cents a loaf.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—I am sending you a copy of a book of advertising material which has been offered to me. Please give your opinion on it and then send it back. It contains, as you will see, ready made material for advertising—"catch phrases," and I should think it would seem better for such uses as window signs and store cards than for regular display advertising. Do you approve of such matter, and do you think the users can derive any benefit from it? Please answer in as early an issue as possible.

Yours truly,
R. K. CORNING.

The book which this correspondent sends in is "One Thousand Advertising Catch Phrases," published by the "Advertising World," of Columbus, Ohio. It is just as its name would indicate, and to give an idea of the matter, I will reproduce one page here:—

Another point for your consideration.

Over and over—the same bargain story.

Our up-grade goods at down-grade prices.

If you can stand the price, they're worth it.

Economical, but that's not the only advantage.

"I think these things are all right, but I should confine their use mainly to signs and placards. A good crisp window sign, accompanied by a price, often attracts attention and leads to a sale. An advertisement ought to consist not of epigrams, but of meat. Of course, there are a lot of these catch phrases that could be worked into an advertisement, and which would be all right there, but it would probably be easier to go ahead and write the advertisement yourself than to laboriously work in somebody else's catch phrases. For signs, however, they are excellent. Some of them are somewhat commonplace, but enough good crisp phrases are here to use to considerable advantage.

CCLXVI.—What Good Will Means, and a Correspondent Who Is Not Helped By Getting It.

Here is a problem that comes to me from Albany, N. Y. Doubtless it has had a counterpart in the experience of many readers hereof; certainly it is likely to unless watchfulness is exercised:—

Last April, 1914, we purchased from the former owners the retail department store business which we are at present conducting in this city. We paid a good round price for the stock and fixtures and a price which I personally considered—though my partner did not—excessive for the good will. There was but a short agreement of sale, and finally a bill of sale.

It was our understanding when we bought that the owners of the business—there were two brothers—intended to go West for the health of one of them, and start a dry goods business somewhere on the Pacific coast. We were astonished, therefore, to learn from good authority, which we have confirmed, that they have rented another store here and intend to open even a larger business than they had before, on or about August 1st. If they are allowed to open, of course it will make so much more competition for us, and some of our trade will be lost, as they are well known in the town, while we are strangers. I have examined the bill of sale, and it mentioned good will as part of the assets for which the price was paid. Is there no way in which we can stop these people from opening up again? Does not the term "good will" mean an agreement not to open up again for a certain length of time?

I very much regret that I can say practically nothing which can help these people out of their difficulty, but I can offer their example as a warning to other people who may be about to buy a business.

Except in Ohio and New Jersey, "good will" does not mean any such thing as this correspondent hopes it does. Here is a standard definition of good will:—

The advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment, beyond the mere value of the capital, stock, fixtures or property employed in it, in consequence of the general public patronage which it receives from constant or habitual customers, or on account of various factors, such as good location, or good reputation, etc.

A shorter and better definition is "the probability that it will continue to do the business it is doing now." For this, under the name good will, buyers of businesses pay a sum over and above the value of the stock and fixtures, and it is worth it, for a going business, making a profit every year, is surely a different proposition than so much stock and so much fixtures.

The good will of a business passes to the buyer when the business is sold, whether it is expressly mentioned in the bill of sale or not. It would of course be possible to sell a business without selling the good will, but very unusual unless its assets were sold at auction.

But the mere sale of the good will does not carry with it an obligation not to go into business again, except in New Jersey and Ohio. It ought to, and does under the old English rule, which Ohio and New Jersey have adopted. Certainly if I have bought "the probability that a store will continue to do the business it is doing now," I have a right to demand of the person who sold it to me that he shall not reduce that probability by re-engaging in the same business and attempting to get the same customers. That is so fair a rule that it seems strange it should not be the general rule. But in all States but the two named a man who sells his business, and with it the good will, may open precisely the same kind of a store next door the very next day. Of course provided there is no stipulation in the agreement that he shall not enter the business again for a certain period. There should always be such a stipulation, for it constitutes the buyer's only protection against the situation which is now confronting this correspondent.

The man who has sold a business without such a stipulation, even though he has charged for good will, can go even further than merely to open a store—he can advertise it and can even solicit his old customers for it. Neither in his advertising nor in his solicitations, however, must he represent that it is his old business he is advertising or soliciting for, but that is cold comfort, in most cases.

There is but one thing to do—tie up your seller with an iron-clad stipulation that for a certain time he shall not re-engage in the same business in your neighborhood.

Prohibition Against Saccharine Declared Invalid in Missouri.

The Supreme Court of Missouri has handed down an unanimous decision holding that the law prohibiting the use of saccharine in soft drinks passed by the State Legislature three years ago is discriminatory and declaring that saccharine is not deleterious to the health. The court dismissed the case of the State against the Empire Bottling Co., of St. Louis. The Monsanto Chemical Works, of St. Louis, are manufacturers of saccharine, and with the assistance of State Food Commissioner Frick made a test of the prosecution against the Empire Bottling Co. to prove the validity of the law. The law passed by the Legislature prohibited the use of saccharine in soft drinks, but permits its use in foodstuffs. The opinion of the court is as follows:—

According to the proffered evidence, one would need to drink about thirteen pints of the defendant's soda water in twenty-four hours before he would get to the danger point in the use of saccharine. If such is the case, the amount of saccharine in defendant's soda water is not deleterious to health, for we cannot imagine one so addicted to its use as to consume that much. But, independent of the question as to whether such use of saccharine is deleterious, we think that the statute is an arbitrary discrimination against the makers of soda water. It may be taken for granted that saccharine is or may be used in foods and drinks which are non-alcoholic. Whether it is deleterious to health or not, it is certainly an arbitrary distinction to prohibit the use of saccharine in non-alcoholic drinks and not prohibit its use in other foods and drinks? If it is deleterious in one case, it would be so in the other. If it was the purpose of the Legislature to prevent the use of saccharine in soda water, not because saccharine is deleterious, but because it sweetens the soda water, then it is an arbitrary discrimination in favor of those who sweeten soda water with sugar. If the Legislature regarded saccharine as deleterious to health, it should have excluded it from all foods and drinks, and not merely from non-alcoholic drinks. If the purpose was merely to prevent the sweetening of non-alcoholic drinks, it should have prohibited the use of any kind of sweetening in such drinks.

We regard this as too plain a case for a long citation of authorities. It falls clearly within the principles enunciated in State vs. Miksick, 225 Mo. 561, 1. c. 572.

The judgment is reversed and the defendant discharged.

Most Rigid Food Laws in the World Fail to Cure Food Adulterations in Germany.

According to Official Reports Adulteration Still Goes on. Even Baby Rubber Nipple Found to Contain 40% of Zinc.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

July 1, 1914.

It is said that the most rigid food laws in the world are in Germany; it would appear from something I ran across this week as if, rigid as they are, they have not cured the evil of food adulteration. The following was published by a German paper; it was made up from a number of reports from German officials in charge of the enforcement of food laws:—

The use of artificial butter grows from year to year; it is even being used in the country. In spite of this increasing consumption there is much uncleanness where it is produced, and there is great necessity for purifying the raw products used. Tallow is often confiscated because it contains hair, flies, splinters and other foreign substances. The manufactured butter is also sometimes confiscated because it contains a large percentage of soda. Margarine manufacturers are still using benzoic acid and sulphuric acid as preservative agents. Up to the present time the penalty for using such adulterants has not been clearly defined, because the law has not been properly explained. Mixtures of lard, beef fat and artificial fats are often made. Vegetable fats are being more and more used, especially in the form of hardened oils.

Flour and bakery products also need careful supervision, because of the mixture of inferior products, sand, weed, seeds and mites. In many districts it has been found that talcum was used to adulterate flour, and that there was uncleanness in the storerooms and in the manner of manufacture. Mites, worms and spiders were found in the flour bins. So-called egg mixtures often resemble eggs only in color, and that is given by a coal-tar product. Fruit juices are also artificially colored—often with poisonous coloring matter.

In a sparkling fruit wine advertised as free from alcohol, 7 per cent. of alcohol was found. The green color of canned vegetables was found frequently as the result of the use of salts of copper. In one kilo (2.20 pounds), 132 grams (4.65 ounces) of copper salts were found. Marmalade and fruit jellies were found often to consist almost entirely of artificial ingredients. Coffee was most frequently adulterated with pulse or lupine seeds.

In many instances malt coffee was found to be simply unmalted, roasted barley. Adulterated vinegar is said to have caused two deaths. Wines were less impure, owing to the strict supervision exercised over the wine industry, but in the manufacture of beer, much is to be desired in the matter of cleanliness. Twice brandy was found to be adulterated with methylated spirits. Lead was also used for coloring utensils and vessels in daily use. A substitute advertised for nickel was found to consist of a strongly poisonous quicksilver solution. In a baby's rubber nipple 40 per cent. of zinc was found.

BEST FOR BABIES

Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk

Ever since 1857 Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk has been the leader for nursery and household use. It is an ideal food for babies, being rapidly and completely digested by the infant stomach. Thousands of people, who as babies, were successfully reared upon Eagle Brand, have grown up to rear their own babies upon it, and use it also for table use because of its unequalled quality and purity. You have no article upon your shelves which has a better reputation with consumers than Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk, and none is more widely known. Recommend it to your customers, reminding them that every can is guaranteed to them.

Borden's Peerless Evaporated Milk is the great standby of the American housewife for cooking and general household purposes. It is richer and better than most raw milk, adds a rich creaminess to gravies, soups and sauces; enriches and increases the food value as well as the flavor of every dish. All Borden's Brands, both sweetened and unsweetened, are made from the highest grade raw material, by the most modern method of manufacture, and are guaranteed absolutely pure.

Working a Bum Rule Both Ways.

You know I've always stuck up my perfect nose at these schools that teach you how to sell goods by mail. I say to learn how to sell, you've got to go out on the road and buckle down. You can read yourself full as a tick of stuff how to do it, but when it comes to putting it over, you ain't there.

Sizing people up don't come in books. Put a pin in that.

I have a good customer that is taking a course from one of these schools, up in Buffalo. They filled him full of the big money the crack-a-jack salesmen pull, and said they could teach him a few little tricks that would double his business. He fell for it—sent 'em $20 for twenty-five lessons! He showed me some of 'em—they were sure the limit. One lesson told him how he ought to look in the customer's face when he was trying to sell him something! "Firmly, compellingly but pleasantly," it said. Ain't that punk, when you think of it? I can see myself getting a kick in the pants if I tried to look into some of my customers' maps that way.

As it happened, I saw this customer fall down flat trying to put one lesson over. He had been talking to me about it just before he tried it, then the store got full and he had to go out and wait on people, and I got tired and went out and saw him get licked.

"I've learned one good thing already from this course," he said, "and if I don't get anything else, that alone will be worth the whole $20. It's not to ask the customer whether she wants a thing, but to tell her she does. They call it suggestion. If you ask her ten chances to one she'll say no, but if you tell her she does, you're apt to land her. See?"

"I see what you mean all right," I said.

"I just learned that last night," he said, "and I haven't had a chance to try it yet, but I'm going to do it at the first opportunity."

Just then he had to go out and wait on trade.

When I strolled out he was waiting on two women. When they'd given their order he must have thought of the lesson.

"Mrs. Jones," he said, "I want to show you something that you absolutely must have. You need it. It's a new thing for washing clothes and the very best thing of the sort I ever saw. It's a thing every woman absolutely must have."

While he was saying this, I saw him looking into Mrs. Jones' face "firmly, and compellingly but pleasantly." He overdid the thing a bit, seemed to me, for he gave her the look that went with "you're a liar and you dassent back it up!"

She didn't say anything, and he went and got a package of the new stuff. When he handed it to her he talked some more about "absolutely must have it."

"You'll simply have to buy that, Mrs. Jones," he said, "you can't afford not to have it."

One of the clerks called him over about something, and he heard Mrs. Jones say to the other woman:—

"He needn't think he can tell me what I want and what I don't want. I know what I've got to have, I guess."

When he came back he said:—

"I'll just put a package in with your order, Mrs. Jones."

Then he laid it over with her stuff that he had been putting up for her.

"No, I think I won't take any this morning," she said, "maybe another time. Send the order by 11 o'clock, please."

He was all ready to tell her again that she absolutely had to have it, but she was out of the store by that time. He put the package back and happened to see me. I had on the widest grin

I wear, which is some wide, but I didn't need to say anything. "What's eating you?" he said suspiciously.

"I only wish that correspondence school chap had been here," I said. "I'll bet he would have been tickled to pieces to see how badly his scheme worked. It was wonderful, old man, I never saw anything like it. You just told her what to buy and by gum, she up and didn't buy it! I wouldn't have thought it possible, honest I wouldn't!"

"You don't think I'm going to learn the whole thing all at once, do you?" he said, but I could see he was a little bit dashed.

Then I started in to sell him goods. One thing I wanted to sell him he didn't rise to right away and we had some argument about it.

"But you've got to have it, old man," I said, "you need it! You've got to have it! It's a line you simply can't do business without! You've got nothing like it now, and it's been a great seller everywhere I put it! You absolutely must have a little!"

"Do you think you know my business better than I do?" he snapped. "I tell you I've got too much of that kind of stuff in stock now. I've got to cut it down before I touch another thing."

"But this is something that you absolutely—" I looked at him firmly and compellingly, but pleasantly, putting my warm and sweaty mug within three inches of his while I did it. Then he got on and went red, while I let out a merry giggle.

"You've wasted enough of my time to-day," he said, "now get out; I've got work to do."

I got out, with the same hunch about correspondence schools that I always had—there's nothing to them.

Come, See Us Make READYMAID SOUPS

(CONCENTRATED)

The doors of our factory are always open to visitors. If you can come to see us, Mr. Grocer, we'll gladly show you every nook and corner, because we're proud of its cleanliness.

We'd like to show you the fresh, prime meats, the fresh clean vegetables and carefully cleaned spices we use in READYMAID SOUPS, because you are an expert judge of all these articles and would realize immediately that it is impossible to make better soups than READYMAID SOUPS.

The cleanliness, fine quality and absolute purity of all ingredients used in READYMAID SOUPS gives them a natural taste.

If you'll push the sale of READYMAID SOUPS you'll have a bigger and more profitable soup trade than you can build up on any other brand—your customers will taste the difference immediately.

MONEY FOR THE GROCER

Instead of charging you a high price for READYMAID SOUPS and spending part of the money in magazine and street car advertising, we give you a low price and a chance to make an extra good profit. Our name is a guarantee of quality; we wouldn't put it on a product that did not have superior merit. READYMAID SOUPS are guaranteed all the way to the consumer's table.

Starch Sale.

This terrible heat makes plenty of limp linen. Everybody will need a supply of starch and this is a good time to have a display and sale. This display is arranged in the following manner: First cover the bottom of the window with a light blue crepe paper. Along the front place some collars and cuffs that are just fresh from the laundry. At each side of the window, on the bottom, place a large pyramid of lump starch, with a little tag stating price, and in the center place a large sign card with the lettering as illustrated. Make a slant of boards across the rear, cover it with the blue crepe paper. Now get long strips of pasteboard, about two inches wide, cover the long strips with the blue crepe paper, bend them to form letters to spell the word "starch." Now pin the letters fast to the slant, with strong pins placed in slanting. When the letters are all secure, fill them with starch. Finish the top of the window at the rear with three-inch wide strips of the blue crepe paper, as in illustration, and the display is complete.

Grape Juice Trims.

Grape juice is a very good article to sell just now, but if you want to double your sales just make a neat and attractive display of it. To arrange this trim, first make a lattice work of laths in the upper rear corners and cover them with white crepe paper. Wind some artificial vine and grapes around it. This done, cover the bottom of the window with crepe paper, and along the front place some of the smallest size bottles. Place three paper napkins, about in the center; on the end napkins place several medium-size bottles, and in the center place a glass of the grape juice, a plate of fancy little cakes and a spray of artificial roses. Place three large bottles at the rear. For a background run some of the white crepe paper across the bottom at the rear and finish at the top with some of the grapevine.

Bought Simply Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Why We Can Guarantee Against Spoilage

The filthiest thing on earth is rennet if made carelessly and under unclean conditions.

If you could see some commercial rennets made you wouldn't let them enter your store.

We guarantee to the absolute limit the perfect cleanliness of James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet, but we have other proof that it's clean—we guarantee it not to spoil. We wouldn't dare guarantee an unclean rennet that way.

James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet will also coagulate milk in 2—5 minutes, and in every way will satisfy your most exacting customer.

Costs you $1.50, sells for $3.00. Order some now, before you forget it. All jobbers.

This Tells the Tale

A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

Awards in Grape-Nuts Ad-writing Contest

The number of advertisements submitted in this contest exceeded the number submitted in the Dromedary Cocoanut contest, and like the latter, were not easy to judge.

Owing to the very great amount of labor involved in putting all these advertisements in type, a few of them—some of the late-comers—could not be set in regular display form.

The three capital prizes are awarded as follows:—

First Prize, $20—FRED JAEP, Philadelphia, Pa.

Second “ $10—L. DOUGHERTY, Gettysburg, Pa.

Third “ $5 —WILLIAM T. LAMB, Camden, N. J.

The following are awarded Honorable Mention:—

F. M. Root, Newark, N. J.

M. Van Ness Braman, North Adams, Mass.

Oliver Sheppard, Penn Yan, N. Y.

J. W. Boyd, Manheim, Pa.

C. J. Woods, Corry, Pa.

FIRST PRIZE

Free Trip to Wellville!

To all persons using GRAPE-NUTS we make this offer: Many are looking for Wellville, and we have opened the road, so that all can reach it. We do not furnish a return trip. This you take at your own expense—but we feel assured that when you reach Wellville you will have no desire to return.

Many travel this “Road to Wellville” on the GRAPE-NUTS special—but they don't come back. Why?

There's a Reason

GRAPE-NUTS, good for one way only.

The one condition of this offer is to use GRAPE-NUTS as directed and read the book, “The Road to Wellville” (attached to package).

We make this offer on the strength of

Grape-Nuts

It has been on the market for years. Many cereal foods have sprung up, but in GRAPE-NUTS “There's a Reason.”

Composed of the natural nutritive elements of wheat and barley, the two greatest of nature's food products, thoroughly cooked by scientific baking, it offers you not only a food of strength and nourishment, but tasty and ready in an instant. It is economical, as a very small quantity contains a satisfying strength not found in any other food.

Use GRAPE-NUTS and begin the day right. At all grocers.

“THERE'S A REASON.”

Submitted by Fred Jaep, care of John Jamison,
3 and 5 S. Water St., Philadelphia, Pa.

SECOND PRIZE

Grape-Nuts FOR BREAKFAST

of course. Who has not begun many a day right because of the dainty and substantial breakfast which included a bowl of Grape-Nuts? But

Grape-Nuts FOR DINNER

Perhaps you have not thought of that. Try a Grape-Nut Pudding for dessert. It is a delicious combination of Grape-Nuts and Fruits. Easily prepared and always enjoyed. Ask your grocer for the recipe for Grape-Nut Pudding.

THIRD PRIZE

Mrs. R GRAPE-NUTS

I now recall a Mrs. R who was advised by her physician to use

Having stomach trouble she subsisted on Grape-Nuts alone for eleven months, finally coming up to her normal condition. She describes this cereal as her savior. The writer was induced by her to try Grape-Nuts and to my surprise I found I could subsist on this cereal and perform my labor for four or five hours at a time. So personally I can highly recommend Grape-Nuts for run down or delicate people—for a tasty dish in the morning—for well people—for economy. You only need half the quantity as other cereals.

It is free from worms and has increased its sale because of that. The contents also have a keeping quality about it that builds up and puts vigor and go into life.

and disaster results whether it is on the railroad, in the counting room, department store, on the farm, or in the corner grocery.

The cause? Was the switchman overworked, overfed, or was it a case of plenty of food which was poorly cooked—indigestible?

We look for the cause, why not look for a cure? If a case of overwork—less work and more rest. If a case of too much food, eat less. But if a case of improperly cooked, indigestible food, which is often the case, switch on the right track, begin right eating, get a sound stomach, clear vision and a cool brain.

Big Preparations for Coffee Week

To be Held Next October 19-24 Under National Coffee Roasters' Association Auspices. Elaborate Literature and Advertising Matter will be Distributed to Retailers Everywhere.

Readers hereof have heard something about the forthcoming "Coffee Week" which is to be held throughout the whole United States next October 19th to 24th under the auspices of the National Coffee Roasters' Association. Elaborate preparations are being made for this event, and the committee has begun to distribute literature to the wholesale and retail trade all over the land.

The primary object of the "National Coffee Week" is the strengthening of the retail dealer as a distributor of coffee and the increasing of his efficiency and service to the consumer by furnishing him with authentic information about coffee and about the various processes, such as grinding and brewing, etc., and to stimulate him to talk and "think" coffee, making his place of business the coffee headquarters it naturally should be.

Some of the literature, cards, advertisements, etc., which have been prepared for use in retail stores is quite handsome and elaborate. First there is a colored poster 20 x 30 inches, printed in three colors, and bearing the wording: "Coming, Coffee Week, October 19-24, 1914. Ask for Booklet." There is also a colored window trim, made of heavy material designed to form a sort of frame for the window. On the top it bears the words "Coffee Week," and some designs of coffee cups. Slogan cards are also a part of the propaganda. They are colored show cards bearing catchy matter exploiting coffee. There are also pennants to hang in stores or store windows.

The most elaborate piece of literature, however, is a pamphlet "From Tree to Cup with Coffee," a good-sized little booklet 3 3/8 x 6 1/4 inches. Below is a summary of the contents; it is to be distributed to consumers by grocers:—

1.—Growth. A brief and concise description of the coffee tree and berry, the botanical origin, size, appearance, cultivation, picking, etc., written in popular vein.

Illustrations: Coffee trees with pickers at work.

2.—Drying, Hulling, Etc. A short narrative of the curing, hulling and cleaning processes, showing the care and skill spent and the favoring influences of the air, sun and dew.

Illustration: Drying bed with coffee spread.

3.—Roasting. Emphasizes the function of the wholesale roaster: first, as a skillful cup tester, grading coffee by drinking quality for the consumer; and secondly, as a scientific roaster. Describes the care and skill necessary to a perfectly manufactured product. Also mentions the useful educational service for the consumer by the National Associated Coffee Roasters' Association from scientific researches, etc.

Illustration 1: A cup tester at work. Illustration 2: A roaster at work.

4.—Grinding. Explains the vital relation of granulation to quality and strength of brew, and the efficiency of various degrees of granulation as shown by investigations reported to the National Coffee Roasters' Association. Describes the cellular structure of the bean, etc.

Illustration: Microscopic view of a grain of coffee.

Center Pages.—Brief statistics including the small yearly imports reported by an ancient coffee market report dated 1823, in comparison with the enormous import of the present day.

Per capita consumption figures showing the increase of the consumption from 1900 to 1910, and 1914. Compiled from warehouses, deliveries and United States Census figures.

5.—Brewing. Reviews the fundamental principles of correct brewing, as shown by scientific researches, the efficiency of water at the boiling point, the proportion of coffee tannin produced by different methods as shown by chemical analysis, etc.

6.—Dietetic Value. Mentions the latest discoveries by medical and scientific authorities of the health value of coffee as proved by tests in universities, etc., and convincingly summarizes the evidence of the beneficence of coffee as a National beverage.

Illustration: University building.

7.—The Retail Grocer, the Efficient Distributor of Coffee. An appreciation of the retail grocer as the most competent distributor of coffee and the consumer's most reliable dependence of quality, purity, service and authentic information.

Illustration: Up-to-date grocer taking telephone order.

"How the Supply is Maintained," "Brief Story of the Pacific Salmon," and so on.

Perhaps the main portion of the book consists of salmon recipes. There are fifty, most of which reveal salmon in new and unheard-of roles. There are probably a larger collection of salmon recipes here than could be found in any cook book in the world.

Pittsburg (Pa.) Grocers Say City Government Discriminates Against Them in Favor of Foreigners.

Has Public Safety Director Summoned by Councils on Charge of Allowing Foreign Stores to Violate Sunday Closing Law and Sidewalk Restrictions, While Enforcing Same Against American Retailers. Washington Co-operative Store Collapses Through Absconding Manager.

Pittsburg, Pa., July 9, 1914.

Attorneys representing the Pittsburg Retail Grocers' Protective Union appeared before the City Council July 2d to complain against what they charge is discrimination against the grocers in favor of the foreign fruit dealers and confectioners. The Department of Safety, according to the grocers, has ignored these merchants repeatedly. Safety Director Charles S. Hubbard was called before the Council. He denied emphatically that he had intentionally practiced discrimination, and furnished a statement showing that he had, since last December, made 85 prosecutions, in 38 of which cases the offenders had been penalized; 35 were discharged and 17 cases are still pending. The association attorney asserted that the 15-inch occupancy law regarding sidewalks was enforced only against grocers, while foreign fruit sellers and others used as much of the sidewalk for display space as they wanted. He asserted that in the commission district there were 8-foot sidewalks where the merchants used all this space except 15 inches, literally turning the law upside down in this respect. He complained against the hawking of peddlers and hucksters, which is in violation of the city ordinance. This measure seems to have been utterly ignored by the police.

The following statement was submitted to Council by the grocers:—

We have had the matter of Sunday selling up with the Department

Trying to Boom Salmon as a Substitute for Meat

Department Reports Small Circulation for Pamphlet Recently Issued With the Above Object. Suggests Fifty Ways Salmon Can be Cooked.

Washington, D. C., July 9, 1914.

The Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce reports a rather small circulation so far for its pamphlet "Canned Salmon: Cheaper Than Meats and Why. Including Fifty Tested Receipts." The pamphlet is an effort to show that the people can reduce the high cost of living by eating less meat and more salmon. Here is the core of the argument:—

The cheapest food is that which supplies the nutriment at the lowest cost. One pound of canned red salmon of the best quality will cost about 16 cents. The same quantity of bone, muscle, blood and brain building material and body fuel in other foods would cost:—

| | Cents. |
|--|--------|
| Eggs, strictly fresh (at 34 cents per dozen) | 36 |
| Steak, sirloin (at 27 1/2 cents per pound) | 33 |
| Mutton, leg (at 19 cents per pound) | 32 |
| Chicken, average (at 25 cents per pound) | 21 1/2 |
| Ham, smoked (at 18 1/2 cents per pound) | 13 1/4 |
| Pink salmon, canned (at 9 cents per can) | 12 1/2 |

Ham is apparently cheaper than the other meats because it contains more fat fuel, the cheapest of nutritive ingredients, which can be supplied more cheaply by the vegetable food which should accompany the meats or fish.

All species of the Pacific coast salmons are canned, all are highly nutritious, and, so far as the canned products are concerned, they differ from one another principally in the color and relative firmness of the flesh and the proportions of fats. The chinook has an excellent flavor and generally red flesh; the sockeye, or red salmon, equals it in flavor and is always red fleshed; the coho, or medium red salmon, has an excellent flavor, but is paler in color; the humpback, or pink salmon, is still paler and its flesh softer; and the chum salmon is quite pale, soft when canned, and its flavor is inferior to any of the others.

The best grades of canned salmon are richer than meats in body-building materials and contain about the same amount of fats. Pink salmon, which is a cheaper grade, is better than meats for making flesh and bone, but has less fat. Either is as digestible as the best sirloin steak, there is no waste, and nothing has to be thrown away except the can.

There is considerable other matter in the pamphlet. The following headings will show the scope: "Magnitude of the Industry," of Public Safety, trying to procure an enforcement of this law since December 27, 1913. We claim that at least 90 per cent. of the violators of this law are not Americans, but foreigners, who show an utter disregard for all laws of our city and country and apparently are accorded privileges that our law-abiding citizens do not enjoy. Some time ago the Department of Safety took a list of the places in our city selling on Sunday, and if we remember correctly there were 876 stores open and doing business. Although there have been some orders issued by the Director since then, by personal observation and inquiry among our members, we believe there has been but little improvement in these conditions since. We understand that officers have made numerous reports of violators, even making purchases themselves on Sunday, but no information or prosecutions followed. We also desire to call attention to the fact that, although merchants in other lines have been granted the use of 15 inches of the sidewalk to display their goods, that the Director has notified all grocers that they could not use any space whatever, and to remove their goods at once within their buildings. Furthermore, that foreign fruit stores on our leading streets are occupying a part of the sidewalk, apparently with the knowledge and consent of the officers of this department. We ask why this discrimination, and insist that if this law be enforced, it be done impartially and with favor toward none. We also call attention to the fact that the grocer is compelled to cover or screen in glass cases, the fruit, etc., the displays, while the hucksters, and peddlers selling the same on our streets are not obliged to cover any of their wares from the dust, dirt, flies, pollution, etc., and we ask again, why this discrimination? Goods in wagons in the streets are more subject to contamination than the grocer's are in his place of business.

The one co-operative store in Washington, Pa., has gone out of business. Washington is a suburb of Pittsburg and has a large foreign population. They organized the Polish Co-operative Store Co. and a large number of the miners and employees of the tube works bought stock. The store did more than $500 business last Saturday. It was learned Sunday that Albert Pictrzak, who had charge of the money, had left for parts unknown. When the news spread through the town all the men, women and children whose families owned stock descended upon the place and literally cleaned it out. They carried away more than $2,000 in stock and left only the shelving.

Attorneys for Crawford & Bunce and other fruit and produce dealers in Pittsburg have filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission a protest against the increase in rates East of Pittsburg on the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroads.

WITH THE EDITOR

At the annual meeting of the Housewives' League of Providence, R. I., the following was brought forward as the platform on which the women should stand in buying food:—

Some New Rules for Members of the Housewives' League.

Organized to uphold the enforcement of laws which affect food supplies, the family health, the cost of living and to secure further legislation, when necessary, toward that end.

Members are requested:—

To insist upon full weights and measures.

To insist upon cleanliness in the handling of food.

To protest against the exposure of all food to contamination from dirt, flies or other infection, and to refuse to purchase such food.

To read carefully all labels on canned and bottled goods and to report any violation of the pure food and drugs act.

To make personal investigation into the sanitary condition of their markets, grocery, bakery, dairy, laundry, delicatessen and confectionery stores.

To, as far as possible, refuse to purchase cold storage poultry, fish, butter, eggs, fruit, etc., which have been held to the detriment of condition or advancement of price.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" unhesitatingly endorses all this as being theoretically good. Of course much of it is not practical, because it sets the women tasks which they could not possibly perform by reason of ignorance of conditions. However, it does no harm to "hitch your wagon to a star," as Emerson, we believe, expresses it.

But there are a few other things that might be added to these rules, such as:—

Do not paw over and squeeze perishable fruits and vegetables, so as to hasten their decay.

Do not handle meats.

Do not insist upon quick deliveries of small articles at all hours of the day and night.

Do not insist upon the dealer giving you more than he thinks is good measure.

Do not insist upon the best of everything, like apples or tomatoes, being picked out for you. The good, bad and indifferent must be equally and fairly divided—you are entitled to some of each.

In a word, don't be unfair, don't be unreasonable, don't be swinish. Do unto the grocer as you would like him to do unto you if you were a grocer.

The average woman is the most cantankerous grocery customer imaginable, and there is no evidence as yet that joining the Housewives' League makes them any different than they were before. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" suggests that in addition to its present rules of conduct for members—all of which imply some fault on the part of the grocer—they add the few suggested by this paper, the intent of which is to remedy some of the faults of the women themselves.

And now a Coffee Week. There have been Canned Goods Weeks, Oyster Weeks, Raisin Days, and Salmon Days, and the latest is What Will Coffee Week Accomplish?

Coffee Week, which the National Coffee Roasters' Association is to exploit next October 19-24. Of course the object is to sell more coffee. Will it succeed? Perhaps, and perhaps not. The writer believes its success will be very much harder to achieve than the success of Canned Goods Week, Oyster Week, Raisin Day or Salmon Day.

The reason for that opinion is this: Every other product which has been exploited through "weeks" or "days" has been susceptible of a wider use—a use for new purposes. The woman who had been using salmon cold for supper could be taught to make croquettes of it as well. The family who used no canned goods because they thought they were unhealthful or unclean, could be educated to understand that they were neither. So with all the other products—every present user of them could be made a wider user.

But is the same thing true of coffee? It would seem not. Every man and woman in the United States knows coffee, and all those that like it drink it already—except those who abstain because they think coffee hurts them. Coffee Week will not change the latter's prejudice, because it is based on personal experience, and it cannot possibly make the others drink more coffee than they do. How then can Coffee Week increase coffee consumption? It might achieve some other results. It might for example educate some consumers to use better coffee, or it might induce some grocers, by pushing their coffee departments, to sell coffee to consumers who before that were buying it of somebody else, but none of these things would increase the consumption of coffee.

However, it will do no harm to try, and retailers ought to do all they can to help.

The writer proposes now to respectfully suggest a plan by which any reader hereof can make some extra money out of salmon. In the average store salmon does not amount to one of the best sellers. The purposes for which the average family buys it are few and mostly only occasional. That is probably because consumers are ignorant of the many uses to which salmon can be put. The writer's plan is to tell them of these, with the help of the United States Government.

The Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce has issued a little book on "Canned Salmon: Cheaper Than Meats and Why, Including Fifty Tested Recipes." As told in detail in another column, its purpose is to show consumers the very many ways, outside of the few conventional ways known to the average person, in which salmon can be prepared for eating. Also to show that it is very much cheaper than meat and other foods. Undoubtedly the pamphlet is calculated to sell salmon. How it is distributed the writer does not know—the Government charges for some of its bulletins, while others are free. It is likely, however, that any reasonable number of copies of this pamphlet can be obtained free of charge.

One can easily see the possibilities of increased business from this pamphlet—special window displays, including some of the dishes described; store demonstrations of such dishes; distribution of the Government pamphlets, a copy of which could be pasted on the glass of the bulk window; special advertising matter, and so on. It can scarcely be doubted that salmon could be sold by this plan, and that many of the new customers thus obtained would stay on. As we have said before, the air is full of chances like this to keep a store alive and increase its business. They simply need to be looked after.

We take from the Philadelphia "Ledger" of last Wednesday the following item of Camden, N. J. news:—

Louis Weisban, a grocer of Twenty-eighth street and Polk avenue, Camden, was arraigned yesterday before Recorder Stackhouse on a charge of violating the Sunday ordinance by selling goods. Policeman Harry G. Newton charged that Weisban had sold him a scrub brush and soap powder for 13 cents. Recorder Stackhouse imposed a fine of $10 on Weisban. When the court announced the penalty Attorney H. C. Kramer, counsel for Weisban, gave notice that he would take an appeal to the Supreme Court to test the validity of the ordinance.

No doubt Weisban, when he talks about taking "an appeal to the Supreme Court," feels like a hero, but to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" he seems like a swinish fool. He is a fool because he refuses to realize that the man who works for his living must have at least one weekly day of rest, or he will go to pieces. There are men who can work every day in the year, and work hard, without apparently impairing their powers, but they are the rare exceptions. The average man goes to seed very quickly without weekly rest and change.

Weisban is swinish because the course he is adopting destroys other men's contentment on their day of rest, and may prevent some of them from resting at all. No man can close his store with a clear mind when his nearby competitor keeps open. Therefore Weisban is not only mean to himself, but he is mean to everybody else. And for what—13 cents' worth of powder and brush! No retail grocer in the average community can do enough on Sunday to make Sunday-selling worth the while, everything considered. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" is glad to see Weisban fined $10, and we hope he will lose his appeal in the Supreme Court.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s
Department Food Stores, Dover, N. J.

"I Don't Care."—Don't you? And why don't you care?

Is it because you have a grudge? Do you mean to say that you can accept your envelope Saturday night with a clear conscience and feel that you don't care who steals stuff or who wastes stuff, who deliberately knocks the store and who persistently "does up the boss"? Wrong! Doubly, deadly wrong, sir, to allow any crooked proceeding to pass with the "I don't care" feeling. Likely the "grudge" is imaginary, but even so act the man and under no circumstances permit, without your private or open rebuke, any person to take advantage of the man who thinks enough of you to place you back of that counter and who puts bread and butter on your plate. Shame on the fellow who says "I don't care."

Importance of Cleanliness.—In the modern food store the entire surroundings must be clean. The counter, the goods displayed on the counter. The scales. The shelf goods, and maybe most important of all, you yourself. To approach a customer with the expectation of selling goods a man's finger nails, hands and store frock ought to be clean. Not necessarily that your hands or your clothing are coming in direct contact with the articles sold, but the wholesome impression that personal cleanliness makes is most valuable.

A woman instinctively shuns the unshaven, unwashed, unlaundered man. It is a curious thing that the average salesman is apt to grudge 50 or 75 cents a week for a laundry bill that really proves a most important asset in his business life.

Respectful Distance.—Familiarity with a customer while you are back of that counter is bad business. Makes no difference how intimate your social terms may be. While your manner in such cases should be easy, your distance should be respectful. The parlor conversation is out of place in the store. Women, and especially girls, who are untrained in business, do not always fully realize this. You should.

Shoving Things Away.—Let daylight into your stock. No dark mysterious corners should be brought to light at stock taking nor inspection times. Out with everything. Pity the man that works contentedly back of a counter while at his feet lies a conglomeration of dirt, soiled labels, broken packages and disorder enough to give a system man the jumps.

Add Twice.—Let no checker find your addition wrong. Nor your extensions wrong. Add twice. First from the bottom to top. Then from top to bottom. Error in addition, in no matter whose favor, cheapens a fellow. It makes you feel like the foot of the class.

It Is a Small Matter.—Never mind, see it through. What difference does it make to you even though it may be boys' work. You—you and you only—are asked to do it. There's a bigger thing for you later. But that little thing now with a whole heart. Let me tell you something. The failures to carry out these simple orders by young men, many, many times lies their failure of advancement. The big men of to-day have their eyes on the man that is doing the small things well. No matter if it's washing scoops. No matter if it's cleaning scales or carrying a bundle across the street—do these things not only cheerfully, but with as much thoroughness and earnestness as though they were an important part of your success—which they are.

"Growing Big."—Every one of you men back of the counter that has any red blood in his veins wants to grow big. Bigger mentally, bigger intellectually, bigger socially. Every little thing you attempt to do that is higher than the thing you have been doing is a step in bigness. Every time you balk and say, "What's the use," you're cutting off just so much energy to attain this bigness. We grow by doing.

Saturday Morning.—The man that hasn't his stock in shipshape opening time Saturday morning is not in love with that stock. There's no two ways about it, Friday night is the time to do it, and if you grudge an hour or two after hours to do that work, it is a sure indication that your interests aren't where they belong. To be proud of your store is to have it in shape at busy hours.

To be indifferent to it is to go backward.

Advance of pay nor advance of position doesn't come to such a man.

For remember—we do our own advancing. The boss doesn't do it. He only indorses it.

37—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because selling them saves your breath and your time.

☞ Talking takes time and consumes energy. Goods that everybody knows of need no talking—you save breath, you save time, you save energy by selling them. As labor saving devices there is nothing like nationally advertised goods.

☞ The merchant who starts to sell an unknown brand to people who never heard of it, but who have heard of a nationally advertised brand, is in for a talk fest which before it is finished will take energy from him that he needs for something else. The only remedy is to sell nationally advertised goods that need no talking.

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

XXIV.—What Coffees to Buy to Sell at Various Popular Prices.

By WILLIAM B. HARRIS.

It is a difficult matter to state definitely as to the exact cost of the different coffees or blends of coffees that the retail dealer should carry in his coffee department. There are a number of points to be considered in connection therewith, as for instance, the freight charge to destination and the package that the dealer proposes to use. This all adds to the flat cost of the bulk coffee. It is possible, however, to arrive at an approximate cost, and the dealer can then figure above or below this point as he may desire.

There are on the market certain low grade coated and water-soaked coffees that are sold to the dealer at a very close margin of profit. These coffees are made up for a price. They have no merit, and it would be far better for the trade as a whole if they could be eliminated entirely.

The lowest priced coffee on today's market that is at all satisfactory is a Rio that can be sold at 17 to 18 cents and should cost the dealer about 12½ cents roasted.

The 20-cent brand is either figured with a Rio costing in the neighborhood of 14 cents roasted, or Santos at a cost of about 16 cents roasted.

The 25-cent brand can be made up of a combination of Bogota and Santos costing between 18 and 19 cents, or in certain sections where a different flavor is desired, the combination could be Maracaibo and Santos, at a cost of between 17 and 18 cents.

The 30-cent brand is best figured with combinations of Bogota and Bourbon Santos at a cost ranging between 19 and 21 cents.

The 35-cent brand can be secured from combinations of Bogota and Guatemala, or combinations of Bogota and Mexican, at a cost of from 24 to 25 cents. From this grade of coffee it is better to eliminate Santos, although a percentage of fine old crop Santos can be used to good advantage both in the 30 and 35-cent brands of coffee.

A 40-cent brand gives us a wider range of combination. Particularly satisfactory blends are found in combinations of Padang, Bogota and Guatemala, or Padang, Bogota and Mexican, or Padang, Bogota and Mocha, at a cost ranging from 26 to 28 cents. It is also possible at this price to carry a brand of genuine Java and Mocha at a cost of approximately 28 cents.

Blends of coffee ranging in price from 45 to 50 cents have only a limited demand, particularly here in the East. On the Pacific Coast a number of blends are sold at this figure, and some of them command a price of even 60 cents. Of course many of these are advertised package brands and include an additional cost for the container. Where there is the demand for a coffee selling at from 45 to 50 cents, the dealer can secure a blend of Mandhling coffee, from Sumatra, which is probably the highest type of coffee produced in the Dutch East Indies, and genuine Arabian Mocha, costing between 32 and 35 cents.

Retail dealers of course have very different ideas as to what their percentage of profit should be in connection with their various grades of coffee, but the above figures will be found to be an average from which definite results can be worked out.

Health Board after Dirty Stores. Plans for Coming State Convention. Housewives' League Co-operative Store Fails. Newark Retailers Talk Buying Exchange. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

New York, July 9, 1914.

The Board of Health has been taking more and more interest in the way in which food is protected in stores and restaurants from contamination by flies, dust and human handling. The investigations made by the board's inspectors are said to have revealed the information that necessary precautions and ordinary rules of cleanliness are ignored to a great extent.

Rules which the board have adopted from time to time have been getting more and more stringent. In the last week the board has promulgated new rules that contain more specific requirements than ever before. It is also announced that the board will see to it that the rules are strictly enforced. In fact, there have already been several arrests for violations, so that it will be advisable for every storekeeper selling any kind of food to comply most carefully with the new regulations.

As to groceries, the new regulations provide that all foodstuffs must be protected by a fly-proof and dust-proof wrapper, or they must be protected by a covering or cases of glass, metal, wood or close mesh wire screening, which will shut out flies and other sources of contamination.

It is provided in general that no kind of food, except fruits and vegetables that are peeled, pared or cooked before consumption, shall be kept, sold or offered for sale, or be displayed or transported, unless protected from flies, dirt, dust and other contamination. The word "food" is construed in the regulations to mean every article of food and every beverage used by man. All kinds of confectionery are included.

Special regulations are provided for keeping meats in markets and bread and cakes in bakeries under suitable coverings.

It will be noted that the regulations are especially broad in covering all cases in which the food is kept, displayed or transported. It will not be necessary to prove that the food is actually sold in order to get a conviction. If the inspectors of the Health Board enter a store and find food uncovered, that is sufficient evidence that the law is violated.

This feature will, of course, make it much easier for the inspectors to get convictions. As they are going about all parts of the city constantly, sometimes in the guise of women living in the neighborhood, the danger to the storekeepers who neglect any of these precautions are obvious.

Already there has been an increase in the business of companies selling covered cases, glass counter cases and similar supplies. The marketmen have been among the largest buyers of such supplies, as the board has been after them for some time to keep meats under cover. Smoked meats, with a permanent covering, are not affected by the new regulations.

One of the arrests this week was of a dealer who left his bread uncovered on a counter. In former times this was common enough, but it is not now allowed.

The co-operative store started at Flushing, a suburb of New York, a year or so ago by the Housewives' League of that town, has closed its doors and one of the local jobbers is taking back the stock. Assets are placed at $600 and the liabilities are said to be about $2,500.

This is the latest addition to the long list of co-operative stores that have been started in this city and vicinity in the last two or three years and have failed to make the success that was expected and confidently predicted in each and every instance. The stores are always started with considerable noise and many promises, usually with lovely articles in the newspapers about all that the store will do to cut down the cost of living, but the end usually comes quietly. The daily newspapers scarcely mention the closing of such stores. The newspapers are only interested in the opening of the enterprises, because there is the opportunity to tell of the great profits made by grocers and middlemen which the new enterprise is to eliminate. It is always promised, too, that the new store is only the beginning and that after it is well started the idea will spread to other communities, so that there will be similar stores everywhere and living will be again as cheap as in the good old days.

The stores of this kind do not spread out, however, but on the contrary have a brief and troubled career and the end is written in the books, if not in the newspapers.

The explanation given in the trade is that the co-operative stores find that the work which the middlemen and grocers do is not to be eliminated. The public demands just such services in the delivery and distribution of food. The co-operative store cannot do the work as efficiently and as economically as is done in the regular trade.

Another phase of the situation is that because of the howl about the cost of living, the professional promoter has turned his attention to the grocery business to an extent that was not formerly known. He has organized a lot of companies, co-operative and otherwise. As he is a promoter and has no training in the grocery business, many of his enterprises have come to grief. There are quite a number of promoters who have been active in such ways.

In some instances the promoters have made some money in getting a business started, but nobody else has done so. Most of the other people connected with the enterprise have been losers. The Flushing store was not of this kind, however, as it was undoubtedly started by a number of housewives and other with the best of intentions, but without a proper knowledge of the problems which they were facing.

A proposition has been started to form a new buying exchange among the retail grocers of Newark, N. J. A meeting was held recently in the rooms of the Newark Board of Trade, at which about 25 retailers agreed to subscribe $200 each to the capital stock of such an exchange, to be known as the Newark Wholesale Grocery Co.

Henry L. Gotham, of Brooklyn, prepared the plans and is expected to be the manager. He has enjoyed wide experience, it is stated in the furniture business, wholesale and manufacturing.

It is announced here that the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes Co. is to develop the market for certain of its products in Canada. It will not sell corn flakes there, however, as the rights to that product in Canada are in the hands of a Canadian company of the same name.

W. S. Weir, formerly a merchandise broker in Detroit, Mich., has been appointed Canadian manager of the Battle Creek company and will open offices in Toronto. Among the products to be pushed in Canada are Krumble biscuits and Drinkit, the cereal coffee product.

Schedules have been filed this week in the assignment of Frank Crawford, Inc., wholesale dealer in butter and eggs at 15 Harrison street. Liabilities are $40,941; nominal assets, $27,178; actual assets, $7,416.

The Marmor & Boral Bros., Inc., receivers of butter and eggs, at 190½ Duane street, made an assignment this week to J. L. Honigman. Liabilities are said to be about $8,000 and assets $3,500. The company was incorporated in October last with a capital stock of $5,000.

A provision merchant in Brooklyn advertised that he had received from the Board of Health the first prize for "the cleanest establishment in the city and for the purest food products used."

Other provision merchants have called the advertisement to the attention of the District Attorney, who is investigating the facts. It is said that the advertiser will be prosecuted under the new law against false advertising.

The officials of the Board of Health say that they have not given the advertiser any prize and have not authorized any such advertising, so that it is false in its statements and tends to mislead the public.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Spot coffee is quiet, with no developments of importance. Orders are mainly for current requirements and it is apparent that the country is not at all disposed to anticipate its needs. Prices are steady. Mild grades are about as quiet as Brazils, with buying in small lots and prices steady. A sale of Santos 4s is reported to have been made at 11.40 cents. Rio 7s are quoted at 8.40 to 8.60 cents.

Teas are selling in a routine way, but the total volume of business seems

Sell KARO for Preserving

(Crystal White)

It makes better preserves than all sugar

In our extensive advertising, and in the "Preserving with Karo" booklet, we tell the housewife about the superiority and convenience of KARO for preserving fruits, making jellies, marmalades, jams, etc. It will pay you to follow up our suggestion and recommend this use of KARO (Crystal White), because your profit on KARO is much larger than your profit on sugar. You can be sure your customers will be not only satisfied, but delighted. KARO (Crystal White) is already extensively used for preserving purposes, and this use is increasing every day on account of the superior qualities imparted to the preserves, jams and jellies. KARO (Crystal White) is too profitable for you to let your customers use it simply as a table syrup; tell them to use it for cooking, baking and candy making, and you'll secure increased sales that will pay you many a dollar of extra profits.

Preserving booklets will be furnished to the grocers for distribution on request.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"Try KARO (Crystal White) for preserving. The recipes are in the 'Preserving with Karo' booklet; sent free on request. You'll find KARO (Crystal White) will produce the best jams, jellies and preserves you ever made."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants to be sufficient to give encouragement to the trade. Increased interest is showed by the country buyers, although they are not at present buying beyond requirements.

Refiners report an increased demand for sugar. This is due to the increased consumption in various ways because of the summer season. All of the refiners quote 4.30 cents for standard granulated.

Distributors are buying rice in fair quantities and prices are well sustained. Spot supplies of Honduras and Japan are said to be small.

A fair degree of activity in spices is reported. The trading is mostly in small lots. The tone of the market is firm. It is said that the dealers throughout the country have only light supplies.

All grades of molasses are steady, but the demand is light, as usual at this time of the year.

Jobbers are buying canned vegetables as rule only in a hand-to-mouth way. The prices are generally steady, however, showing a strong undertone to the market. Little attention is given locally to canned tomatoes, but it is said that the interior is buying more actively. The packers are unwilling to shade 72½ cents for Maryland No. 3s, f. o. b. Baltimore. Any sales under this price are said to be of supplies below the full standard. The general quotation of No. 2s, packers' label stock, is 55 cents, although there have been some sales at 52½ cents on the spot. There is considerable inquiry for standard peas, but buyers are not usually willing to pay the prices that are asked. There are some goods held out to be standard that may be had at 65 cents, but it is said that peas, really up to standard, Southern packing, are not to be had for less than 70 cents. Medium and finer grades get little attention. The distributors believe that there will be big crops and that buying can be done to advantage a little later. Spot supplies of standard corn are moving slowly and holders are inclined to give slight concessions. On Southern corn, Maine style, the nominal price is 57½ cents and State corn is Harvard College Will Tell Grocers How to Find Costs.

Through Its Bureau of Business Research, University Begins Exhaustive Investigation Into the Condition of Retail Grocery Business. Preparing a System of Accounts for Grocers Which Will be Published When Complete.

As a result of preliminary study, the Graduate School of Business Administration, Harvard University, has undertaken through its Bureau of Business Research, a thorough-going, country-wide study of the retail grocery trade. It has been found that some grocers do not know what it costs them to do business. Others fail to realize that they are losing money. A still larger number have inadequate stock-keeping systems, or none at all. For these reasons, amongst others, the death rate in the retail grocery trade, as shown by the number of failures, is higher than in any other line of retail trade. In 1913, the 2,774 failures in the grocery trade in the United States constituted 25 per cent. of the total number of commercial failures. These failures seldom help competitors, and in the long run they are a burden to the consumer. Obviously a more fertile field for business research could not have been chosen.

This study of the grocery trade will be carried on in co-operation with the retailers themselves and will parallel the University's well-known study of the retail shoe trade. Detailed figures, on a uniform system of accounting, will be collected, in strictest confidence, from grocers in all parts of the country. The accounting system will enable the retailer to learn where he stands. The normal standards, established through the collecting and summarizing of these figures, will show the grocer where he ought to stand. There will also be an exhaustive inquiry into stock-keeping systems and other special problems of the grocery trade. As a non-competing and trusted third party, the University has a particularly strategic position for conducting such a co-operative study. The Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration will utilize this information for the scientific teaching of business.

More failures occur in the retail grocery trade than in any other line of retail trade. One-fourth of all commercial failures during 1913 were in retail groceries. Because of this remarkable "death rate" among grocers, and the startling evidence of bad business methods it has already come across, the Business Research Bureau has begun this systematic study of the retail grocery trade in co-operation with the grocers themselves, similar to what it has done so successfully for the retail shoe trade. In this the Bureau has established a uniform system of accounting, which has been adopted by hundreds of retail shoe dealers, including some of the largest firms in the country. They make regular, confidential reports to the Bureau of their figures under about twenty headings of expense and profit, and the retail shoe trade has thus far for the first time been put on a scientific, comparative basis. Many economies, and a decided increase in the efficiency of capital invested, have resulted. This study is now being extended to the marketing of shoes by wholesalers and manufacturers.

Need and opportunity for similar work in the grocery trade was disclosed by some preliminary work done by instructors and second-year students in the Harvard School of Business Administration. One of these students, given access to the books of an apparently prosperous concern, found that the business was being run at a loss—unknown to the proprietor, who had to be "shown," but was finally convinced that he hadn't known what his business was doing. The same student devised for another firm a stock-keeping system that has been in successful operation for some months.

To train students, but mainly to get material for teaching in the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration, is the purpose of these studies. It is a remarkable circumstance that the facts of retail business are not known widely and accurately enough to give a basis for scientific instruction. In the grocery trade, for instance, as in the shoe trade, the importance of stock-keeping and rapid turns of stock has not been fully recognized, because accounting methods were inefficient. The notable success of chain-store systems is due to these two things, and the Harvard Business Bureau is now putting these and other better methods into retail trade. MELVIN T. COPELAND,

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

No change has occurred in the tea market during the past week, with the exception of a few unimportant fluctuations in certain grades of old teas, due to scarcity. New teas are coming forward and are moving out. All teas appear to be higher this year than last.

Coffee.

The coffee market is dull. Everybody seems to lack confidence in the situation and to be holding off, awaiting the new crop coffees, which will be available in a few weeks. The market has a somewhat easier undertone, and the chance is that a good order could obtain a slight concession. The best demand is for good roasting grades of Santos. Mild coffees are also wanted to some extent at unchanged prices. Java and Mocha unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

Refined sugar is exactly where it was a week ago, all refiners being on a uniform basis of 4.30 cents for granulated. The raw market has developed a slight weakness during the week on account of an indisposition on refiners' part to buy. The consumptive demand for sugar is good, however, and indications are not for any material decline in refined.

Syrup and Molasses.

On account of the weakness in corn, glucose declined to points during the week. Compound syrup in bulk declined about an equal fraction. Tinned syrups are unchanged and in light demand. Sugar syrup and molasses are seasonably dull at unchanged prices.

Fish.

Prices on late-caught Norway mackerel have not yet been named and probably will not be for several weeks. Early caught mackerel are offered, however, at prices which a good part of the trade consider too high. The demand is not large. Irish mackerel are in fair demand at moderate prices. Not for several years has the supply of shore mackerel been so good and the price so low. Fishing this year has been much better than for a long time and the fish are freely offered at relatively low prices. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and dull. The fishing so far has been quite good. Salmon of all grades unchanged and in fair demand. Domestic sardines are about where they were a week ago, the catch being fair; prices unchanged. New pack, imported sardines are beginning to appear, although new French prices will not be named for some little time. Prices on Norwegian smoked sardines, however, have been named by some packers on a basis of about 90 cents above last year.

Canned Goods.

Spot tomatoes are a trifle higher than a week ago, and it looks as if the market would remain steady to firm during the balance of the season. Probably the advance amounts to about $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents. No. 2s are especially firm. The rains in the producing sections have improved crop prospects materially, and packers are easier in their minds. The demand for futures is light, and prices unchanged. The outlook for peas is now better than it was some time ago, but it is entirely impossible to give figures with any accuracy. New pack peas are selling freely at low prices, as compared with last year. Corn is unchanged and quiet. Apples show no change for the week and in light demand. California canned goods, meaning futures, are considerably demoralized, owing to the secret discounts which are being given by almost all packers. It is said that some orders have been taken this year at below the cost of production. Small Eastern canned goods are unchanged and moderately active, string beans being particularly scarce and firm.

Dried Fruits.

Spot prunes are neglected at unchanged prices. Futures are also unchanged, price being fairly well held. Nobody is particularly interested in future prunes. New apricots have advanced about $\frac{1}{2}$ cent during the week, but the trade is not especially interested. Peaches are very cheap, and considering this, it is remarkable how dull they are. There is no indication of any special advance. Holders of raisins have named prices on old goods for delivery within the next two months on a basis of $\frac{1}{2}$ cent below the regular price. The trade are not interested, because independent packers have cut the price on these goods 1 cent. Currants and other dried fruits are quiet and unchanged.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are unchanged from a week ago; the demand fair. Marrows have declined and are now quiet at $3 in a large way. California limas are dull and unchanged. Green and Scotch peas quiet at unchanged prices.

Butter.

The receipts of butter are about normal for the season, and the quality is fully up to the standard, as conditions have been very favorable to the making of good butter. The market is healthy on the present basis, and the consumptive demand is reported better than a year ago. The situation is not likely to change materially unless the weather becomes hot and the quality deteriorates.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm. Prices are unchanged from a week ago, and arrivals show a much better quality. The percentage of poor eggs is not so great as it was some time ago, and the entire market is very healthy and steady.

Cheese.

The consumptive demand for cheese is very good, and the market is active. The make is fully up to the standard, both as to quality and quantity, and the general situation is firm. If there is any change it will probably be a slight advance.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are steady and unchanged and in good consumptive demand. A good demand is also noted for pure and compound lard, both grades showing an advance of about $\frac{1}{8}$ cent. Dried beef, canned meats and barreled pork are all steady to firm, and all show a slight advance over a week ago.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Spices.

The market is fairly active, though there are few changes to report either here or in foreign markets. The tone, however, is firm and supplies are small. Any great increase in demand will have a tendency to advance prices.

Peppers.—The market is quite steady and slightly firmer. White peppers are in active demand, especially for the grinding trade. All grades are in small supply here.

Red Peppers.—In better demand. Supplies are exceedingly short, especially Mombassas and Japans. Prices are likely to go much higher between now and early August.

Nutmegs.—In active demand at generally unchanged prices.

Cloves.—Quite steady and in fair demand. Prices are firm and hardly likely to advance.

Pimento (Allspice).—Unchanged. Still selling at unusually low prices, which, in our opinion, are safe.

Cassias.—The demand has been more active during the week. Prices, however, are practically unchanged.

Gingers.—Neglected and without change. Present prices are safe.

Green Ginger Root.—Arrivals are quickly bought up. The article is firm and will be higher this summer.

Paprikas.—Without change. The trade demand is routine in character.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Imported Oil Sardines.—Cables from our agents in France report that there is some little fishing going on, but the fish caught are all very large, and not suitable for the American trade. It is hoped that the fishing will be fairly successful this season. No fishing so far in Portugal, but to-day's cable reports that there is some fishing in sight, and we hope to soon have further cables advising that the fishing has started. Portuguese sardines are badly needed here, as the stocks are very much depleted. In Norway they are catching some sardines daily. The quality of the fish is very satisfactory, but the fishing on the whole is very poor as yet, but there is still hope, as the principal fishing season is now at hand. The quality of the lots of Norway sardines lines which we have received so far proved very satisfactory indeed. The demand for sardines in general is very good, and the sardine business could be called exceptionally good at the present time if there were stocks here to supply the demand.

Our agents in Norway report that the cod fisheries may now be considered as closed. Total results of Norway cod fisheries this season are as follows:—

1912—80.8 mill pieces, hereof prepared for stockfish 17.2 mill pieces.

1913—74.8 mill pieces, hereof prepared for stockfish 17.5 mill pieces.

1911—64.4 mill pieces, hereof prepared for stockfish 25.2 mill pieces.

Of split stockfish, there has been prepared in Norway this season 1,309,200 kilos, against 1,578,500 kilos in 1913, against 2,861,000 kilos in 1912. This shows quite a considerable shortage. Last year at the beginning of the season there were large quantities of old fish remaining in Norway. Consequently prices surely will not be lower than last season. On the contrary, we may have to figure with higher prices this coming season.

MARKET NOTES.

Georgia peaches are coming regularly forward at $1.50 to $2.25. There are a few Jerseys at 50 to 75 cents, but they are poor. Most sections report a good peach crop this year.

California cantaloupes are slightly higher—$2.50 instead of $2. The quality is good. Cantaloupes from Florida, South Carolina and North Carolina range from $1 to $2.

Watermelons are coming from South Carolina, Georgia and Florida and range from 15 to 25 cents. The demand is good.

Raspberries are plenty and cheap—canners are paying 3 cents and the jobbing range is 3 to 6 cents. Blackberries are going to the canners at 5 cents and jobbing prices are up to 8 cents. Near-by huckleberries range from 9 to 11 cents and North Carolina 10 to 12 cents.

New Jersey corn averages 90 cents. Southern corn is scarce and poor.

Lima beans from North Carolina and South Carolina range from $2 to $2.75. The quality is only fair.

Jersey eggplants are in and bring $1.50 per basket.

Jersey cucumbers are worth $1 per basket and are selling well.

Delaware apples are in and range from 50 cents to $1.25 per bushel. Jersey apples are also available and command $1.25 to $1.50 per truck basket.

Potatoes are high—$1.10 per basket; they were 85 cents.

Tomatoes are plentiful, Jersey having begun to ship in large quantities at 90 cents to $1.50. Mississippi tomatoes range from 25 to 50 cents. Floridas are cheap—50 cents to $1 per crate.

held at 65 to 70 cents. Fancy corn on the spot is in small compass and firm. String beans are in only moderate demand, but prices are strong.

Spot canned fruit is quiet, but stock are said to be closely cleaned up, and the market is firm, especially on the more popular brands. On the 1914 pack of California canned fruits the representatives of the packers seem quite well satisfied with the business already booked, and some of them report that the total volume of sales is larger than at this time a year ago.

There is only a slow movement in future dried fruits. Buyers are paying a little more attention, however, to forward shipments, but are seeking concessions of a half cent or so from the quoted prices. On October shipment of the new crop of Santa Clara Valley prunes the packers are not inclined to offer anything at less than 5½ cents f. o. b., for No. 4 size bulk basis, the assortments covering 40s to 60s. It is said that some packers have offered equal quantities of 30s and 40s at 5½ cents, f. o. b. shipping point, but even such offers, if made, have not attracted much business. There is no demand for forward shipment of sizes under 60s. There is some demand for spot choice peaches, but buyers are paying little attention to the new crop for forward shipment. Apricots are dull, both on the spot and future. Spot seeded raisins are in limited supply and firm. There is little doing in future raising since the packers agreed not to allow extra discounts. Currents are steady.

Both mills and buyers are showing a cautious policy in the flour trade. Buyers are wondering if the present prices really represent the bottom level. The mills are said to be working mostly on export business and for their local trade. So buyers think that possibly there may be more pressure of supply later. Bids have been made at $3.75 for fair lines of Kansas straights and it is said that none of the mills have been willing to accept such bids.

Butter is moving quite well and the grades are firm. The extras are quoted at 26¾ to 27 cents. The best lots of firsts sell at 25½ to 26 cents, but some very good lots have been sold for as low as 24½ cents. There is not much demand for seconds and prices are irregular, ranging from 22 to 24 cents. Process is selling only in a routine way for regular trade, the best grades selling at 20½ to 22½ cents.

Eggs are irregular. There is a scarcity of really fine grade eggs and much complaint about the quality of the arrivals. So, on most of the eggs that are shown, trade is quiet. Few of the candled and graded lots from northern sections bring more than 21 to 22 cents and many lots have to go at 18 to 20 cents. The great bulk of the supply consisting of ungraded or slightly assorted eggs, sell from 16 to 20 cents with a large proportion at 17 to 19 cents. Nearby eggs are fairly steady, with range up to 25 to 29 cents for fancy white hennerly eggs.

A Plea for Your Wife

If not for economy or even for health's sake, at least for the sake of your wife, don't demand a more generous, hot cooked dinner on Sundays than on other days. When the wife and mother has to prepare the Sunday dinner, it ought to be a simpler meal than usual, not a richer one.

Rather than oblige the good housewife to spend several hours on what should be her day of rest, in preparing an elaborate hot meal while the men are taking it easy, why not depend on raw fruit, salads and some healthful cereal food like

Cape Craze Not so Pronounced.

Much to the surprise of those who were exploiting the cape craze, it is not making such a sweep as primarily predicted. Cloths for capes are being sold, of course, but it is not superseding the popularity of the balmacaan out of the running in the orders so far booked for fall delivery; and it is not disposing of the business for cloaks and suits, as the weisenheimers were sure would occur. This feeling seems to be gaining ground that suits may come in stronger than buyers in the merchant grades are prepared for. Some stylists believe that fine velours will come in for capes later on. This opinion is based on the fact that heavy satins and similar fine merchandise are being used abroad, and it seems likely that some reflection of those materials will be seen here also. Velours in capes offer much as a suitable and handsome fabric. Merchants who either buy direct or otherwise, would do well to follow this new development.

Increase of Yardage—High Price Silks.

As previously mentioned in this journal, the yardage for women's dress materials will be larger than for several seasons; or since the advent of the snug fitting skirt, and silk manufacturers are specially pleased. Women are not inclined to part with this becoming fashion—those of the right figure and appearance—without a protest. The bouffant effects recently seen may be all right for the slim feminine, but it is anything but graceful or becoming to her sister inclined to embonpoint. The tunic is running its course, as it is suitable for any figure short of the grotesque in outlines and tendencies. What merchants are particularly interested in, however, is that more material is required, hence their hearty approval. This increase in yardage is estimated at 10 or 15 per cent.

The new skirts are not so much wider, but the tunics, flounces, etc., account for the increase. Next to this larger yardage, the feature of the coming season's buying concerns the position of satins. Sample lots show the predominance of soft silks on the satin order and with bright finish. Heavy satins, such as liberty satin in widths from 40 to 52 inches for suits and capes, shown in the primary markets last week, are prominent. Next to the satins, all silk failles, poult de soie and cords of different kinds, are shown, some as heavy as bengaline. Taffetas still hold their own here and abroad. The new satins and faille weaves are expensive, and will be priced from $2 a yard up at retail.

Small Town Merchants' Dress Goods Stocks.

General stores do not indulge in special sales as frequently as the retailers in the large towns and cities, but they feel the slowing down of business about this time of year. A few so-called "bargain" sales may be inaugurated by the more enterprising and energetic, but the tendency is to hang fast to stock until it moves out, in not a few instances, "in a cloud of dust." Merchants of this pokey order are not readers of newspapers, trade or otherwise, excepting the county organ, so as to keep in touch with the gossip of the community, and thereby act as further purveyors of the neighborhood news. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" reaches a higher class of small town dealer, one who prides himself on keeping close to the market and knowing what is selling and is suitable for his trade. Quite a few are men of standing and pretty well fixed financially. They do not class with the chap "The Stroller" told about in his droll, philosophic way recently, and what is going on in the wholesale and primary markets he generally knows.

As might be expected, dress goods are quiet, the buying for future deliveries centering around serges, panamas and broadcloths principally. Less attention is being given by merchants to fancy weaves in crepes and rough effects; but cloths like gabardines, poplins and failles are wanted. The garment manufacturers, who frequently are a guide to the retailers of the interior towns, and their buying should not be overlooked or disregarded when reported, are confining their purchases to the staples—broadcloths and serges—and in other instances the specialties they are ordering are of superior quality or novel design. When it is profitable or the trade can be attracted by the exercise of judgment and proper display in the store, it is a paying venture to carry a line of women's ready-to-wear apparel. It is less risky than men's suits, but even they can be handled to advantage also. Small stocks and replenishing often go a great way toward making such a department successful.

Only the best qualities of plaids are selling now, with the snap out of Roman stripes. Novelty crepes are quiet.

Economical Merchants Making Money?

Many causes have been assigned for merchants buying cautiously and repeating this and for the season to come. Some are calmly awaiting a price, others are wary for other reasons, but Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of trade conditions, have advanced a novel idea in explanation of the conservative buying so noticeable for the spring and summer ordering, to wit:—

"Retailers are keeping as little capital invested in stocks as possible, and are endeavoring to make every dollar earn more profits by purchasing in smaller quantities and turning stocks oftener. The cooler weather of the week has effected retailing unfavorably, but more buyers have been in the market than during the same week a year ago. A scarcity of merchandise is predicted in most all lines, as manufacturers have not made up as many goods in anticipation of future business as usual."

The advances noted in the primary markets are on various dress goods lines, competition keeping prices as formerly quoted, according to Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co., St. Louis, in their weekly review of wholesale trade, who also say: "Retail trade continues to operate in a conservative manner. Orders received are not large, but greater in number than the same period of last year, indicating a desire to keep up stocks and replace merchandise as required. The extreme hot weather, together with the July clearing sales, has improved retail business, and with the present favorable crop prospects, there should continue a steady demand for merchandise. Sales of staple linens, such as table damask, towels and crashes, show improvement. Plain white dress linens have also been in better demand during the last week. Ratine continues first favorite in white goods, followed by sheer rice cloths. Voiles in plain and fancy weaves remain strong, while organdies and similar sheer fabrics are ready sellers.

"Orders on woolen dress goods are coming in very freely, considering that a great many merchants have already made their initial purchases. The outlook for increased sales as the season advances on such goods as granites, crepes, serges, broadcloths, tussahs, plaids and Roman stripes, is very encouraging and indications are the demand will far exceed the supply. Little advances that have been put on fall dress goods by the mills recently have not changed the market price to the retailer thus far. Keen competition among jobbers has enabled retail merchants to place orders at a figure they will not be able to duplicate late in the season."

From another Middle West source, John V. Farwell Co., Chicago, it is learned that "Prices in cotton blankets, domets and canton flannels are ruling firm. A growing demand is noticed for 17-inch and 27-inch embroidered flouncings. Shadow laces are in tremendous demand, and great difficulty is being experienced in securing sufficient quantity from the mills to meet requirements. Prevailing styles are bringing in increased calls for sash silks and Oriental pleatings."

New Staples Being Shown.

In the New York market last week a novelty crinkled seersucker stripe on a gingham ground was shown to sell at 10½ cents a yard. This is different from any cloth of gingham construction now on the market. Another line of ginghams was opened to sell at 6½ cents in 26 and 27-inch widths. It was noticeable because of the many novelty weaves and the distinct colorings in intricate pattern effects for so low a price.

A new line of 32-inch white goods, double fold and rolled, at from 10½ to 13½ cents a yard was opened up. It included dimity cords, figured fancies, satin stripes, granite ground fancies and Bedford cords. They were notable for their superior character in weave and finish.

Taffetas for Tone and Tunics.

Taffeta silks continue the leading fabric for smart wear. It is seen everywhere worn by the best dressed women in all the new styles, and with the graceful, soft, falling draperies to which it lends itself so well. Reliable reports are to the effect that silk manufacturers have modified the texture a little. While still preserving its softness, they have given it a little more weight, making it resemble faille, and have given it the name of "taffetas gros de Londres." One commences again to see the shot taffetas, which assuredly have style, but as yet not sufficiently popular to replace the favorite colors—navy blue and black. However, one sees happy combinations of the changeable taffetas with checked silk in the same tones.

Keen Buying by General Merchants.

Advices from a leading wholesale house in Cleveland say that their business for the month of June exceeded any similar month, and the semi-annual inventory sale, which was held on the last two days of June, brought in the largest number of retail merchants ever in the store at one time, and included some of the keenest general merchants in New York State, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Michigan.

When the sales were taken off for the last day of June it was found that they exceeded any other single day's business in the history of the house. The firm states that this does not indicate any great depression in their part of the country, and is a good barometer of the condition of stocks in the hands of retail merchants, every one of whom reported their trade good. The result of the clearance sale was particularly gratifying, as the announcement for it was sent out without quoting a price on a single item. This does not appear as if a great quantity of returned goods will follow such brisk buying.

Darker Shades in Ribbons Coming

Dark shades in ribbons—blacks and dark moires—for fall wear are receiving more attention at the present time by first hand buyers than any other. The new season is getting under way, the Western buying contingent being strongly represented in the Eastern markets looking over the ground and watching developments. The small town merchant, who is in close relation with the wholesalers, will soon receive the tip as to what will be the proper lines to stock. With the changing and changeable styles, and the intelligence displayed by the consumer in knowledge of the right goods and their artistic possibilities in home-made millinery and personal adornment, the general merchant should not commit the folly of making commitments for but a short time. Jobbing stocks are too easily accessible for any one to buy much beyond immediate needs, or he will place a lot of stickers on his counters before the season is well started.

A leaning toward satins is also noted. Velvet ribbons show slight advances, amounting to an eighth to a quarter of a cent a ligue over a year ago on the cheaper grades. This will doubtless be increased considerably by the time the general merchant is reached. Higher priced ribbons are reported the same. The immediate sales are still largely for moires. The earliest delivery date for staple ribbons for the fall is for the end of August or early in September.

Originators of New Style Overalls.

Two concerns now claim to be the originators of articles, made of gingham, and an improvement upon or successors to the ever popular rompers, designed for children's use. The stories of both manufacturers—one on the Pacific coast and the other in Massachusetts—are now out. One goes into details of how he got the idea from watching his little girl at play. It is unnecessary to say that stories of this kind lack originality, as children are "made to stand" for a lot of stuff of merit and the other thing in every line. The kid is not to blame, but liars are many and few were chosen. Even Edison says the suggestion of commercial value in his phonograph was given him by a small boy, his son. The other concern is not handing out any "fairy tales," but is selling their product to an eager trade—both concerns use this term to describe how "hungry" merchants are for each other's goods.

No singularity is attached to either product, the lines being staple, excepting that origin of construction is a coincidence. For example, the Eastern manufacturers say they "discovered" their garment last year, and that it was received with furore. Good word in the hands of an advertising agent, who blows hot or cold, according to his client's appropriation. There was such a rush for the line—"house was swamped with business," to be exact—that it was necessary to withdraw the lines before they were distributed. The offerings of the new model "aprons" include a combination house dress.

The perfection of manufacture is sought in the goods. Buttons are sewed on firmly, every seam, in the cheapest and the costliest goods, is felled and not left raw, and all trimmings, as well as all materials in the groundwork of the garment, are made of guaranteed fabrics. The jobbers have the inside track on their distribution.

On the coast the so-called inventor has a more luxuriant fancy, because it is related in a professional advertising vein. The goods seem practically the same in purpose, and the sale is so far confined to the territory West of Denver. The plan employed was to stock the trade in advance on the strength of the advertising proposals, then use posters thirty days, discontinue thirty days and then come back for thirty days more, running newspaper space the ninety days straight. The firm making this line have "generously" offered to give playground apparatus to any city that will put their advertising on it. This is a reminder of a certain San Francisco patent medicine manupoint to the fact that so far as retailing is concerned, the individual store personally supervised by the owner is the business that will remain. Some have thought the day of the individual merchant was passing away, but a close study of the situation so far as Grocery and General Stores are concerned would surely indicate that the personally managed store is really the most necessary and successful. You must keep in mind the fact that perfect business conditions can never be brought about by Legislation, nor by any other means. In all business atmosphere there will always be what you might term unsatisfactory elements, and the winner is the man who solves the problems, and finds a way to increase his sales as well as his profits while his competitors are kicking and going behind. The old saying, "grumblers seldom work," holds good to-day, the cheerful optimistic merchant is the worker and he continues to make good and find opportunities where none existed. In a long experience with thousands of retail merchants, the records show the bulk of the money they lost was in experimental adventures and investments outside their regular line of business. It is strange to relate, merchants who would buy any old flim-flam stock, pay cash for it and get nothing but an attractive stock certificate with a promise that it would increase ten fold or a hundred fold, would at the same time scrutinize their Coffee, Tea, Spice and other necessary purchases to the very limit. You take absolutely no chance when buying from Parke. Every pound of Coffee, Tea, Spice or gallon of Extract we sell represents so much good money and can be cashed at any time during the same season either at our Philadelphia or Pittsburgh House, with the single understanding that the goods are in the same salable condition as when you received them, and every merchant reading this ad. knows the Parke guarantee is good.

Effect of Claflin Failure in Dry Goods Circles—Chain Stores and Dealers' Antagonism.

It is remarkable what apparently little effect the $30,000,000 failure of the H. B. Claflin Co., New York, has had on the general dry goods and allied trades. Retailers all over the country have, at one time or another, had some accounts with the firm, as they were widely known as the largest single wholesaling house and mill distributing agency in America. The Claflin Co. finally worked into the chain store proposition, and at the time of the collapse owned or controlled fully 35 department stores of differing sizes from coast to coast. Naturally this aroused bitter antagonism among merchants of all degrees and of greater or less importance everywhere. A factor of this kind cannot be disregarded or ignored with indifference and the inevitable occurred when the embarrassed concern's credit was impaired by over-trading.

There was a time when such an institution as H. B. Claflin Co., would not have been permitted to go to the wall—if it does even now. Wholesalers of magnitude and in considerable numbers may be found in every section, and the merchant finds it more convenient to buy from his nearest jobber, if the stock is sufficiently representative, than follow the methods and practices of years gone by. Calvin M. Smyth, president of Young, Smyth, Field Co., referring to the Claflin mix-up after it occurred, said to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World": "Trade will be quiet until toward September, and merchants are ordering charily. Business is depressed beyond doubt; and it is real and not psychological by any manner of means. The Claflin failure will cause a feeling of uneasiness, to be sure, but already its effect has been discounted. The general merchant is no longer dependent upon a few wholesalers, as in years ago; for every good size city has several jobbing houses which can fill orders promptly and satisfactorily. The Claflin trouble was caused by the exhaustion of their credit. For a number of years their profit did not exceed 1 per cent., and even that when you consider their business, is quite a respectable margin; but it should have been no less than 2 per cent."

"Their retail stores, while operating under a so-called holding company, were really Claflin enterprises, as the trade all know. The buying for many of these concerns was neither wise nor judicious. The buyers were instructed to place orders for everything possible with the parent house, but not infrequently neither the prices nor the goods were right. We had a personal experience of this kind in underwear when Wanamaker was in the wholesale business. The buyer in that line in the retail insisted on placing an order with us for obvious reasons and delivered an ultimatum in accordance with the facts. Probably similar conditions prevailed throughout the entire Clafin chain."

A peremptory sale of the merchandise on hand, with some reservations, is announced by the receivers of the Clafin Co. for to-day (Monday). An unprecedented attendance of merchants and jobbers is anticipated. This stock is valued at $4,000,000. It is not regarded as a large amount, considering that the bankrupt concern's annual distribution of goods reached $22,000,000. No authoritative statement has yet been made relative to this famous firm's future. The disposition, however, is for its continuance.

Style Guaranteeing a New Kink.

In business ingenuity and resourcefulness are assets beyond price, it is generally admitted; but when these wonderful attributes are put to a questionable use they are differently classed. At least this seems to be the opinion when expressed regarding the proposed action of certain cloak manufacturers in the guaranteeing of styles or patterns. The matter was taken up by the Credit Men's Group of the Silk Association of America Wednesday last. The situation is fully explained in the appended resolution adopted:—

Having been reliably informed that certain cloak manufacturers are guaranteeing styles and shipping goods subject to return for the coming season, and that such practice, in our judgment, would work havoc to this trade, as it has in others; be it therefore

Resolved, That the Executive Committee of the Credit Group of the Silk Association of America advise its members to scrutinize carefully any and all concerns who adopt this unwarranted practice.

It was further resolved that a copy of the resolution be forwarded to Philip Frankel, secretary of the National Cloak, Suit and Skirt Manufacturers' Association, Cleveland. This organization includes in its membership practically every cloak maker of any standing East and West, and it is hardly believable such a body would approve, let alone indorse, such a proposition on the part of its members. So far as the general merchant is concerned, it is a new kink and not a bad idea from selling considerations. It would be nothing more or less than handling consigned goods. While this practice is not unknown by any means, in nearly all lines where marketing conditions are difficult, still it is condemned as unsound and demoralizing, according to accepted commercial standards, and doubtlessly dangerous besides.

Berating the Jobber Roundly.

It is something of the fashion in mercantile circles these days to "pound" the jobber. Of course, the ways of the jobber—sometimes, at least—are past finding out. It has been charged that he wants the best of everything, and seldom, if ever, has the far end of the stick when it comes either to buying or selling. The jobber, as an entity, insists he is not only the guide, philosopher and friend of the merchant and manufacturer, but also a very present friend in trouble when shaky finances are discussed. When those prize essays are released, then, and not until then, will the world at large know just how large, important and essential a factor the jobber really is to the commercial community. In the meantime, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will repeat the conversation of a textile traveler, "with extensive connections," who has been meandering through the West for a fortnight, as follows:—

Mills are very busy. They are out for yarn and are selling goods. The spirit of optimism in the West is in the air—it is everywhere. Everybody is keyed up over the crop prospect and are going right ahead.

Asked why Western knitting mills are busy, while in the East it is the reverse, the textile man said: "One explanation is that the mills out there sell to the retail trade; here they sell to the jobber. I fail to appreciate the need of the jobber in the knitting trade in particular."

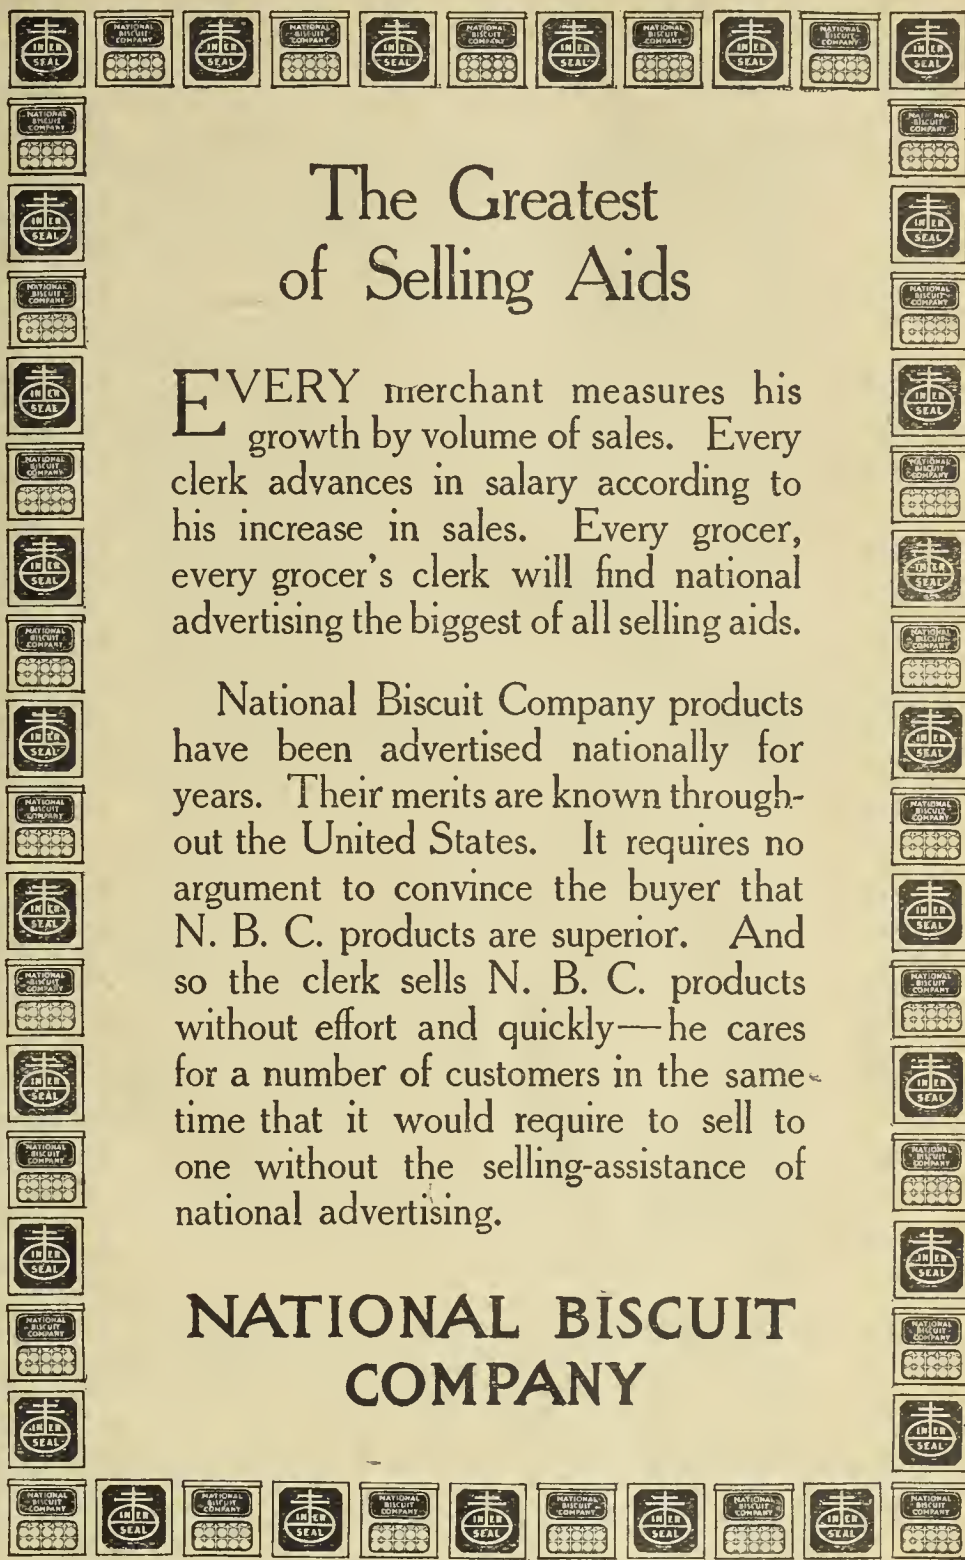

The person quoted looks for no great improvement before September. "Then," he continued, "there is going to be big buying, and I'll tell you that if these Eastern mills don't wake up, get out of the piecemeal selling rut to jobbers and pile up some stock, they are going to miss a part of what ought to be coming to them in the fall."

If the textilist had added, "if these mills would make their product better known via the advertising route, which is absolutely necessary these days to be independent of the jobber," his deliverance would receive one hearty indorsement, at least.

Higher Prices for Silks Announced.

Price uplifts in silks have been reported from time to time during the late spring and early summer, but now they are materializing in a matter of fact way. It is significant of the security that is felt in a good fall season that price advances on leading staples are being announced. Several lines of messalines were marked up last week 1½ to 2½ cents a yard. Colored messalines that sold earlier at 63½ cents are now advanced to 65 cents a yard. Manufacturers have exhausted their lower priced stock of raw silk, bought some time ago. Therefore they are now pricing their goods nearer to the cost of raw material today, which is considerably above that of a year ago. Merchants have not felt the advances so far, as the jobbers, owing to the keen competition for orders, have been selling at the old figures.

Picking the winners for the fall is now reduced to a sporting proposition, the favorites being taffetas and satins. Bright faced satins of wide width have been settled upon by the knowing ones for the new suits and especially for the capes. Five yards of material is said to be necessary in the 42-inch cloth for the capes. The lining of the capes, according to the same experts, will use up a large amount of silks in the various weaves, such as brocades,

The Greatest of Selling Aids

EVERY merchant measures his growth by volume of sales. Every clerk advances in salary according to his increase in sales. Every grocer, every grocer's clerk will find national advertising the biggest of all selling aids.

National Biscuit Company products have been advertised nationally for years. Their merits are known throughout the United States. It requires no argument to convince the buyer that N. B. C. products are superior. And so the clerk sells N. B. C. products without effort and quickly—he cares for a number of customers in the same time that it would require to sell to one without the selling-assistance of national advertising.

moires, chiffons, etc. The velvet capes will likewise call for silk linings. A wool back satin is also being considered for the much-talked of capes, the wide use of which is already being questioned. Some new silk lines for next spring are already being shown, in which small hair-line stripes and small checks are the distinguishing features.

Boots Shoes Findings

No One Misled by Leather Substitutes.

Leather substitutes have been under steady discussion by shoe men since alleged "pure shoe" legislation has come to the front. Members of the different State Legislatures and even of Congress have delivered speeches on the subject in their usual blatant style when they are talking buncombe for the consumption of their constituents. Merchants selling shoes know what this means, and should they be compelled to conform their sales strictly to the letter of such legislation, they would take steps to have it repealed at the first opportunity as impracticable, not to mention its sumptuary character. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has published letters from manufacturers and dealers, who have expressed their views more or less practically. The following is an enlightening contribution from one of the best-known and largest manufacturers in their special line:—

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—It is not hardly right for us to criticise any one shoe manufacturer's method of advertising, but it does seem to the writer that the method of this Western manufacturer is not only expensive, but very ineffective. He does not believe that the manufacturers are selling shoes to-day to retailers without telling them exactly what there is in the shoes. The time has gone past when they will substitute a fiber counter for a leather counter, with the retailer thinking he is getting a leather counter. The retailer is more conversant with the inside of a shoe than he ever was, and we think he is in a position to specify what will go into his shoes. The last statement that this Western manufacturer makes about the retailers desirous of telling his customers the truth is all tommyrot.

At a meeting of manufacturers and retailers held in Washington before the Interstate Commerce Committee, the question was brought up whether the retailer was desirous of informing his customers just what a shoe contained. Every retail organization that was represented at that meeting stated that it was impossible to tell the customers what was in a shoe, as they would not understand it afterwards and it would increase the cost of selling. Their claim was that the customers expected the shoes to wear, and depended upon the retailer to purchase shoes that would give service. As a general thing the customer did not care whether there was a "horn fiber" counter or a leather counter in the shoe as long as it gave the proper service for the money expended.

Very truly yours,
MOUSAM MFG. CO.
Leon B. Rogers, President.

Tan Shoes for Men Big Sellers.

Perhaps some shoe manufacturers, who are on the wrong side of the leather market, are doing what they can to lessen the sale of colored shoes. But, as one shoe man, in charge of a general store's department, said: "There is nothing to it. In our modest way we have sold more tan shoes this season than ever before, and there is not the slightest indication the demand will decrease. The fall styles, now being shown by the road men, contain the usual number of tans—of heavier construction, to be sure—but still strongly in evidence. It is said that in factories where medium and cheap shoes are made colors are selling far less than for a number of years past; and that a higher price must be had before any quantity can be sold to advantage. I doubt this statement very much. The quality may not be there, but the color decidedly is, as may be easily ascertained by looking over a stock of that grade.

"There was a movement on the part of the manufacturers of high-grade shoes—those retailing for $6 and upwards—to discourage the sale of colored calf, but it was a fizzle, evidently. It was only an attempt to bear the market. The true significance of this may be gleaned from the fact that makers of high-grade men's shoes were trying to market exclusive styles in which price would control. Manufacturers of such shoes are strong in the opinion that the high-priced leather will help to make such merchandise so exclusive that it will appeal to the better dressed men, who are always seeking for shoes that are not too closely imitated for sale to those whose means are more restricted.

"Every once in a while something similar is heard of in the trade. Samples are made up, prices fixed and a preliminary selling campaign decided upon, but it has always come to naught. Possibly it is thought the small town merchant carrying shoes is not concerned in such campaigns; but they are nevertheless. If a demand for a high-price shoe of the kind referred to can be created, he wants a share of the so-called exclusive trade. Don't you ever believe the small town general merchant is not up to date. Salesmen of any kind of merchandise besides shoes who have this idea in their 'kokos' would do well to get rid of it, for it is all wrong and he is losing his time trying to load up the merchant with back-number or provincially designed and constructed merchandise."

Believes in the Fallacy of Fixed Retail Prices.

Friday last A. H. Geuting, secretary of the National Shoe Retailers' Association, and one of Philadelphia's most progressive dealers, delivered a formal address at the annual convention in Boston. He dealt specifically with the cost of doing business and the fallacy of fixed prices at retail. Mr. Geuting's views on various interesting trade topics have appeared from time to time in this department of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," and his opinions are always worthy of careful consideration and serious reflection.

Hardware Tools Specialties

Is European Cutlery a Factor?

The charge is repeatedly heard that so far as the present tariff is affecting retail prices on a revision downward, not anything of the kind has happened. At least so far in hardware lines. The most urgent plea is that sufficient time has not elapsed to tell what has actually occurred. Manufacturers, who would be supposed to know what is going on in their own line, are loath to talk of the subject excepting along political lines—one way or the other. Merchants handling cutlery say no change has occurred in prices from either jobbers or manufacturers. The daily newspapers write all around the matter, according to their political bias, as might be expected; for precious few of them understand the question excepting in the same light of ranting politicians, and what they do not know would fill a few good-size volumes in small type.

It is really a pity a more intelligent grasp is not had by people who should be really interested from a daily living point of view. Nevertheless, their knowledge is almost as futile as that of their employers. James G. Blaine, in his "Twenty Years in Congress," declares that tariff legislation, as affecting different sections of the infant Republic, was as broadly and wisely debated in the first Congress under the new Constitution as it has been in any of its successors to this day. However that may be, the following "news story" is from one of the leading dailies of the country, and is in a position to get the right "dope," if it is looking in any spirit of sincerity, and has a bearing on the cutlery situation:—

German cutlery is fast displacing the productions of American factories, it is said by local importers, and the prediction is freely made that importations of knives and shears will materially increase when the public gets back to a normal buying basis. A house, that not long ago received 15,000 pieces of cutlery from Germany, is reported to be contemplating an order for twice that quantity. Cutlery made in this country is regarded as superior to the imported, but costs dealers so much more that they turn to the foreign makes.

The lower price of German cutlery is the prime factor in its attractiveness, it is said. Then, too, many persons appear to derive a great deal of satisfaction from being able to say of an article: "It is imported, you know." Among others, an official of the Edward K. Tryon Co., admitted that much foreign cutlery is coming in. "We always did import some articles in our line," it was said, "articles not made in this country in sufficient quantity to supply the trade. On these goods the Germans advanced the prices immediately the tariff was reduced, absorbing the difference."

This government, whilst losing the revenue, it was pointed out by a large dealer, did not work a reduction in the cost to the ultimate buyer, but "enabled the German manufacturer to increase his profits." Fish hooks, brought in largely from Norway, also underwent a price advance after the duty was reduced. The dealer is not affected, except in so far as he suffers from the general business slump, while the angler must pay more for his hooks.

Not long ago the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" published almost directly the opposite of the foregoing, and from what was considered a thoroughly reliable source. On the cheapest cutlery it was admitted the foreign maker would increase his sales, but in the finer grades and on shears and scissors competition would cut no great figure. So far as can be ascertained, such advantages as the European manufacturer has gained under the tariff he has absorbed, affording the ultimate buyer no reduction, but depriving the American manufacturer of a certain percentage of profit. Of course, trade-marked or branded cutlery or goods of any kind, if known to the public, need fear no competition from any one or anywhere. Prices have been established by their makers, and so long as the quality for which they are recognized and purchased is maintained, no tariff schedule can affect their standing in the selling markets.

Why Paint Peels.

Proper handling of paints by a general storekeeper with a line of these goods "on the side," is of prime importance. If the merchant buys his stock of ready-to-use goods from a reliable paint manufacturer, he may rest assured the merchandise is dependable from any and every point of view. The management and display of the stock is not to be overlooked, and information on this score may be had for the asking. Other matters concerning the application or use of the paints dealt in under unusual circumstances are also of direct moment. For example, why paint peels, should the question be propounded by a customer, calls for an answer, for which every dealer is not prepared. Much valuable information on this question is furnished by G. B. Heckel, in his little booklet bearing that title, and in part is as follows:—

"The paint dealer and through him the paint manufacturer, is often called upon to 'make good' a case of defective painting, where, as a matter of fact, the paint was in no way at fault. Why should the consumer demand that a defective coat of paint be replaced if the defect is clearly traceable to abuse or improper use of the paint in question? As a starting point, it may be affirmed that paint that will not peel when it ought to peel is not fit to paint with.

"Perhaps the chief cause for the peeling of paint is moisture. If there is moisture under the paint it will eventually try to escape. If it escapes outward it must either pass through the paint or push the paint off. If moisture will pass through the paint from the wood into the air, it will also pass through the paint from the air into the wood. Since the principal purpose of painting wood is to keep the moisture out, paint that allows moisture to pass through it in either direction is unfit for use. Therefore, as has already been asserted: Paint that will not peel when it ought to peel is unfit to paint with.

"The question of peeling is not a question of differences in the materials of which the paint is made. Generally speaking, the poorer the paint the less likelihood there is of its peeling. Kalsomine and water paints do not peel; 'emulsion paints,' containing water and alkali, do not peel; and paints overloaded with benzine do not peel. Peeling is encountered with pure linseed oil paints of the best quality.

"Making a claim on the dealer after paint has peeled is the proverbial locking of the stable door after the horse is stolen. The time to prevent possible peeling is before putting the paint on. Remember always that the better the paint the more likely it is to peel if conditions are favorable for peeling. 'An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.' Apply paint properly under proper conditions and peeling will not occur. Peeling is commonly traceable to one of a few preventable causes, and to prevent these causes in the beginning is to avoid trouble in the end.

"The commonest causes are: 1. Dampness in the wood. 2. Dampness back of the wood. 3. Ochre-priming coats. 4. Old paint, loosely attached to the wood and not thoroughly cleaned away. 5. Fatty, resinous wood not properly seasoned or prepared for painting. 6. Boiled oil.

Exchange Department Pulls.

Waterbury, Conn., July 3, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Please discontinue ad No. 18 (Exchange Department), as I have disposed of same through "Modern Merchant and Grocery World." The offer came the same day the journal was issued and I have more inquiries since. Respectfully yours,
M. J. WALL.

Have You Got Any Goods You Don't Want?

Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

that butterine if made properly is pure, wholesome and nutritious and has as much food value as butter.

is made under the watchful eyes of our own and Government experts, from the entrance of the raw materials into the modern sanitary building until Belmar Butterine is packed in sanitary cartons and sent direct from churn to you.

which is distinctive in Belmar Butterine alone and is one reason why thousands of butter critics use it.

by absolute care and cleanliness in churning and handling, and by testing each churning for flavor and texture.

the poor class, that would eat butter if they could, but take butterine because it is cheaper and a great deal better than the butter which could be bought at the same price. The second class is the class perfectly able to afford butter, and which really prefers butter. Inducing the second class to buy butterine means convincing them that butterine is actually better than butter, while it is much cheaper. This is some job, if I may use a slang description of it.

I do not believe that it is possible to properly appeal to both of these classes in one advertisement, unless it be divided into halves, and one-half be addressed "To the Consumer Who Needs to Count Pennies When She Buys Butter," and the other half addressed "To the Consumer Who Can Afford to Buy the Best Butter, but Who Would Take Something Better if She Could Be Convinced of it." The appeal to the first class ought to be something like this: "Here is something which is actually better and purer than butter, and which is much lower in price. For the price we ask you for butterine you cannot get butter that is fit to eat. Every pound of butterine sold now goes out under Government approval. It is not an imitation butter, it is butter, for it contains the same fats and the same ingredients, combined and prepared under infinitely more cleanly and healthy conditions than even the very best butter. Taste it once and see if you can see any difference." The appeal to the second class cannot be on the ground of price.

It should be on the ground that when they buy butter they don't know what conditions it has been made under, or whose hands have touched it, or whether the cows that gave the milk had tuberculosis or not. From beginning to end the production was practically under no supervision or restriction. On the other hand, butterine is made under strict Government supervision, the ingredients that go in it are all selected and Government inspected, and every detail of the process is carried out under the most sanitary conditions. It might be added that the fats that enter into butterine are identical with the fats which are in butter except that they are not derived from milk.

If I were exploiting butterine, I should give a lot of it away. I should have a lot of ¼-pound prints, or even ⅛-pound prints, put up especially for the purpose, and put them where they would do the most good. It is exceedingly hard to get a consumer who has used butter all her life to buy the first pound of butterine. If you can introduce her to it without any expense on her part you can much more easily get her to try it, at least, and then it is up to the product to make good.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

Typographically this is a good-looking advertisement and I have no doubt showed up well in the paper, whether it appeared among other advertisements, or in the midst of reading matter. But does it convince? I feel sure it would not convince me that I ought to eat butterine instead of butter. There are two classes of possible customers when it comes to selling butterine. One is

BURK'S Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—In fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

CCLXVII.—A Case of Liability for Injury to an Employee Which Points Several Morals.

Here is a communication that comes to me from a Georgia department storekeeper who has a number of allied manufacturing interests. There are two points involved in the case which I shall press home: 1, furnishing employees with a safe place to work; and 2, the enormous comfort and advantage of carrying employer's liability insurance:—

Briefly, we conduct a general merchandise business, including a wood yard, and we operate this wood yard with a steam engine, a saw and a splitter. About two or more years ago we employed a man and two sons to work at this yard, one of the boys apparently about sixteen years old, the other about fourteen, so his mother told us. We only run the wood yard about two days a week, and this man and his boys worked here "extra" when not employed elsewhere. The youngest boy operated the splitter—light work, requiring no special skill, but requiring quickness to turn out the work.

The father insisted that we work this youngest boy regularly, as also did the boy's mother. We finally put him to work driving a wagon, delivering wood, etc., with the understanding that he would operate the splitter whenever we operated the yard. He worked on this basis until about last September, when he got caught in the belt that runs the splitter in trying to throw the belt on the pulley after it had run off. He had been continually warned by the manager of the store about the necessity of carefulness in operating this splitter, and had also been warned by a fellow worker who runs the saw, and was in fact shouted at by this fellow worker just a moment before he was caught, as he had gone on to the wrong side of the belt to throw it on. He was caught, his arm broken in three places, and his face cut open. We immediately gave him every medical attention available, secured the services of two physicians, had him made as comfortable as possible, and continued to have this surgical attention given him at our expense until the doctors released him. We also paid his wages right along, telling his mother that while we did not feel that we were to blame, it was our policy to take care of our employees, and we did not want them to lose by his accident.

We were given to understand by these people that they attached no blame to us, and that they would not give us any trouble about the accident. Since then, however, the man and his wife have had trouble between themselves and have separated, the boy who was hurt going with his mother. The boy is still at work for us, never having lost a day's pay. His mother tells us that his father brought suit against us for the reason that she had left him, and had taken the boy and that he thought this would force her to return, as it would probably throw the boy out of a job, and he is her main dependence. We were served with a writ showing that we had been sued for $7,000 by the boy's father, as next friend, for loss of services, etc.

The boy lost no time and was put to no expense for medical aid. The physician who attended him will swear that his arm is as strong as ever and he has suffered no permanent disability.

The father alleges that the work was unfamiliar to the boy, that he was employed for other services, and that he was at work at the wood yard without his knowledge and consent, while as a matter of fact we can establish the fact that the boy was hired to us by the old man, that the old man worked with the boy at the wood yard, that he knew all the time that we had him employed to split wood and to drive a wood wagon, and do other work at wood yard, or wherever we needed him, and that he was familiar with the work, as he had been at work there for a year or more, and that the old man and the boy's mother had continually insisted upon us employing him, asking when we were "going to run the wood yard," and can further establish that the old man had practically refused to support the family for quite a while, and had quit them, and that the boy's mother drew his wages, and was known by us as the head of the family, and the account with us was in her name, as the old man refused to pay the account for the support of the family.

We think the mother will support us, as will the boy, but we anticipate a hard fight and an expensive one.

We have given the writ to an attorney in order to file a reply and the case will come up for trial next January.

We will be very grateful for an expression from you through the columns of your paper, and we also wish to call the attention to other employers of the necessity of having an insurance policy covering employer's liability. We have it now, but we didn't have it then, and it is likely to cost us quite a sum to find out that we should have carried it.

Several practical lessons can be drawn from this case for the benefit of all other persons, firms or corporations, large or small, who employ people to work for them. These amount in brief to the following:—

1—The need of getting a release of all claims from people who are injured, at the very earliest minute expedient to do it after the accident.

2—The danger of employing people so young that they may not clearly understand instructions given them, or who may be too careless to obey them if they do understand them.

3—The fact that employers' liability insurance is the only protection against cases like this.

First let me say a word for this correspondent's comfort about this case. In my judgment this boy's father hasn't a leg to stand on, unless on one ground, which I will refer to later. This case and all other similar cases analyze like this: It is an employer's fundamental duty to provide for his employees a safe place to work, and safe and proper tools to work with. If an employee is injured through the employer's failure to do this, the employer is liable in damages.

It is also an employer's fundamental duty to properly instruct his employee in the use of any machinery which he orders such employee to operate. If he does not do that, even though the place and the tools may both be safe and proper, and the employee's consequent ignorance betrays him into injuring himself, then a suit for damages will lie there also.

Generally speaking, if the place is safe, the tools are safe, and the instructions to the employee are proper, the employer is not liable no matter what happens to the employee. So far as this correspondent's statement of the facts indicate, this is his case. There is no evidence of any negligence on his part, except as to the one point which I referred to a while ago, and which is this: This boy was on fourteen years old. It may be that he was too young to comprehend the instructions given him. It may be that his extreme youth made it wholly improper to trust him to run such machinery as this even after instructions. If this is so, then the employer is liable even though he gave the boy instructions which would have been adequate for an older person. It is a well established rule in damage suits that where an employer has employed a person too young to understand and apply instructions, he is liable if such an employee is injured, instructions or no instructions.

Of course I do not know whether this rule will operate against the correspondent. Was this boy intelligent enough to understand what was told him? Was the machinery given him to operate too complicated for the average 14-year-old boy to operate? These are matters of fact. If this correspondent can produce evidence to make the answer to the first question yes and to the second one no, then the rule will not operate against him. The question of the boy's age is the only one in the case, in my judgment, which he needs to fear.

Now as to getting releases in such cases. When an employee or a customer is injured on your premises, you should not rest night or day until you have settled the matter, if you can, and obtained a release from the injured party. If you wait until he or she has had time to get a lawyer, there is probably nothing to it but a lawsuit which will cost you money whether you win it or not. There are plenty of lawyers who will take damage suits that they know positively they cannot win, merely because they know the average man would pay out a small sum rather than be sued, even though he was not in the least liable. Suppose this small sum is only $50, which would be an exceedingly small settlement. The lawyer divides it with his client, and is in the position of having found $25.

In this case the correspondent should have gone to the boy's parents as soon as arrangements had been made to give him medical attention. After he had told them that although he was not liable for anything, he would pay all doctor's bills, and pay the boy's wages till he got well, provided they gave him release of all claims, he would probably have found them very willing to give it. And that would never have stopped what this other has done.

Consider for a moment just what his father can do. He can compel his correspondent to employ a lawyer, and pay heavy legal expenses continuing through a term perhaps years, being under nervous worry and apprehension all that time. All this, remember, if he loses. He may of course lose—you can never tell what a jury will do—and in the end may have to pay heavy damages.

There is only one way to get rid of this, and that is to carry employer's liability insurance. When an accident happens, notify the company, and let them worry.

Some of these days this situation will be changed in part by the passage of employers' liability laws. At to-day the great majority of the states have no such laws, and in those States the employer is everybody's prey. Even in the States which have such laws he is to a certain extent everybody's prey.

Question: "H," Mauch Chunk, Pa.—If A and B own adjoining lots and B builds a retaining wall on his lot, but right up to the line, will A stop B from using his (A's) lot while building his wall? In this case there are a lot of berry bushes right up to the line which would naturally be destroyed if B cannot be restrained from using the lot.

Answer.—B has no right to set foot on A's ground for any such purpose, and if he does so he is a trespasser and can be arrested. In assuming that the wall B is erecting is not in any sense a party wall, but is altogether on his own property. I should give B notice that you will consider such an act, on his part or anybody representing him, a trespass. Notice is not necessary to make it a trespass, but it may be wise as a matter of precaution.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Some Great Ideas for Side Lines.

"See here," an old customer of mine said to me last week, "what do you know about side lines? I've got to get more business somehow or other. I'm not making enough. I'm going to send a couple of my kids to pay school next fall and a lot of other new expenses are coming in then, and I've simply got to get more money. This is a good little business, but it's doing about all it can unless I put in some other lines. I thought of putting in a line of patent medicines and veterinary remedies. There was a fellow in here last week who wanted to put me in a line of those; he said I could make a hundred per cent. on everything. What d'ye think about that?"

"All right," I said, "go ahead—put 'em in. What do you care how many old ladies you kill?"

"Don't talk foolish," he said. "I don't tell people to take them, do I?"

"Sure you do," I said, "or you will. I've seen how that works out too often. You'll get in some Piper's Pet Pain Killer, and old Mis' Jones will come in to buy something and will unload a story on you of how she was up all night with her old man's bellyache. It won't be half a minute before you'll be handing her down a bottle of Piper's and telling her how a couple of doses will take sixty years off her husband's age. I know all about it. I've seen it done. I've even had it done on me. Only last month Jim Fletcher, a customer I've had for ten years, tried to push a corn cure on me that I'll bet a dollar would have put me in the home for crippled old salesmen. I wouldn't have believed it of him—I've done a lot of favors of Jim."

"There's a big demand for those things in this town," he said. "We've only got a couple of doctors here and they're always rushed to death—you never can be sure of getting hold of them. People turn to the patent medicines."

"Oh you can sell 'em all right," I said, "no doubt about that. But I don't believe I'd want to sell 'em—darned dopes!"

"All right, what can I put in then?" he said. "You knock my suggestion, now give me another one. I've got room enough here to put in most anything."

"Why not put in women's hats?" I said. "You could be the hat model. I can see women coming forty miles to buy hats from you."

"That's about what I thought I'd get," he said. "Some people find it easier to pull down than to build up."

"Hold on!" I said, "before you turn that idea down why don't you see what there is in it? D'ye know anything about the money you can make out of women's hats? Listen here. All you need is four cents' worth of stuff. You shut your eyes and stick six pins in it and sell it for $18. It's a cinch. If you sell a hat a week you're rich."

He was still mean and suspicious about it, and if I hadn't had such a good heart I'd have shut up and come away. But I did tell him about another customer of mine that put in woman's hats. Of course he had his sister to look after 'em, and he had a general store. The man I was talking to has a grocery, crockery and glass ware. Still, he had the women already coming in; that's the main thing. The other customer tells me he's making out real well with the hats.

"I'll tell you what's the very thing for you," I said, and he perked up and looked real hopeful. It was a blamed shame.

"You can run a matrimonial agency!" I said, "why the scheme was made for you! You've got a lot of women coming in every day, and every one of 'em, married or not, is a customer for the agency. Money? Holy smoke, there ain't any end to the money! You can send my photo to all the old hens that want to get spliced—I'll even let you do that to help a friend along. Handsome and romantic bachelor, worth thirty millions, no indigestion. Call me Percy Prickly-heat."

"I'll cancel that order I just gave you," he said, "you're about as much use, outside of selling goods, as a dead roach."

Them loving words did touch my heart and I told him what I could about side lines. What I told him was I thought he ought to put in a 5-and-10-cent line. I honestly believe that that's where the easy money is to-day. If I had a store that wasn't making enough money, even if it was in Jerusalem, I'd turn it into a 5-and-10 as fast as I could do it. It would pay, too.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Allentown retail grocers and butchers will close at noon on Wednesdays during July and August.

The Pittsburg Grocers' Union will give a complimentary lunch to all who attend their picnic on July 22d. It will consist of sandwiches, cake, fruits and coffee. Tickets will be distributed by the grocers to their customers.

The Carbondale association will picnic at Lake Bedora on August 5th. On July 4th the merchants arranged with a circus company to give a performance as an advertisement for the town. The association has been successful in getting better train facilities and are now working on a co-operative newspaper to advertise Carbondale merchants.

The collection department reported $500 collected during the month and have signed agreements or judgment notes for $1,500 more. These bills ran from six months to fifteen years. This association is very much alive.

The Lock Haven association has a splendid credit rating system and the collection department is doing wonders.

State President J. Denny O'Malley gave a complimentary picnic to the people of McKeesport on June 15. About 4,000 persons were present.

The Pottsville association is making an earnest effort to rid the town of trading stamps.

The Meadville Business Merchants Exchange has taken new quarters in the Board of Trade Building. The new quarters were dedicated on June 5th. Mr. Dan S. Veith is the efficient president of this association, and Mrs. M. H. Leavelle, the secretary, is one of the most efficient executives in the State.

The Barnesboro association has adopted a constitution and by-laws and will elect officers at the next meeting. Regular meetings will hereafter be held on the second and fourth Thursdays of each month.

The following is a list of manufacturers in the Pennsylvania Plan:—

Franklin Sugar Refining Co., Carton Sugar.

Borden Condensed Milk Co., Condensed Milk.

manufacturer wants your good will. He is helping you to organize. Show him that your good will is an asset. Reciprocate. Help your association win an award.

The Allentown grocers and butchers have formed an organization under the name of the Retail Merchants' Association. Allentown grocers have been organized for a number of years, but the association has not been particularly active. Recently the City Councils passed an ordinance creating a Bureau of Meat and Milk Inspection and charging each dealer handling these commodities an annual tax. Being this tax unjust a mass meeting was called to protest against collection and to engage an attorney to defend the dealers and if necessary carry the matter to the courts. The outcome of this meeting is the rejuvenation of the association and the addition of a lot of new members. At the meeting held on July 6th Mr. Smedley was present and he addressed the meeting on the subject of organization. Plans have been made for a canvass of the stores for new members. Officers were elected as follows: first vice-president, A. R. Kline; secretary, E. S. Driesbach; treasurer, T. E. Ressler. The office of president is vacant until the right man is secured to fill the office. The association starts out well and should be a success. The new secretary is a capable young business man who enjoys the confidence and respect of the entire trade.

No. 1.

Pineapples are very plentiful just now and about as cheap as they will be; if you handle them make an attractive window display and sell twice as many. To arrange: First make the step pyramids for the rear. Get four boards about six inches wide and four feet long, saw three-cornered pieces out of them as a carpenter prepares to make sides for a stairs. Place two boards about six inches apart; cigar box wood will do for the steps. The next pyramid should be about one foot lower. Make it in the same manner; nail the top ends together and support them with a board in the center. When all finished, cover them with a light shade of green crepe paper, and stand aside and start to arrange the other side of the window. First nail two thin strips of wood, as illustrated, in the rear of the window; be sure that the center will be as high as the top of the pyramid, allowing space for a pineapple. Cut pale green crepe paper in long strips about two inches wide, tack them along the sides of the window, twist and fasten to the slant sticks in the rear, tack a strip of the green crepe paper on the stick to cover it; this done, cover the bottom of the window with the green crepe paper. In the center towards the front place a large sign card with lettering as in cut. At each side place jar rubbers, and on paper napkins display some pineapple jelly in glass dishes. Back of them place a pyramid of parawax; in the center a quart and two pint jars of home-canned pineapple. Then make a pyramid of empty jelly glasses towards the rear, in the center. This all arranged, place the two step pyramids at the rear, and on each step place a choice pineapple.

No. 2.

The attractive electric display of California oranges and lemons is certainly attractive, especially at night. To arrange this trim, first cover the bottom of the window with lavender crepe paper. About in the center of the window place two arches, large hoops will answer nicely; they should be at least three feet high in the center. Wrap one hoop with lemon color crepe paper and the other one with orange color crepe paper. Make paper flowers of the same shades, and in each flower place a tiny electric light globe, the kind used on Christmas trees; the red globes show up the best. This done, now place neat sign card in the center of the window, in front. On paper napkins display a glass of orangeade and lemonade on a plate. Use a fine china plate and shell glasses. Place a few slices of the fruit in each glass, also a straw. Under the one arch place a pyramid of oranges and one of lemons under the other. Use all perfect fruit for this. Cut the two colors of crepe paper in long strips, about an inch and a half wide, pin the one end to the arch, twist and fasten to the bottom at the rear. Use the orange color paper above the pyramid of oranges and the lemon color above the lemons.

Looks Like Large Currant Crop.

All indications point to an unusually large yield of currants for the year 1914-15. Indications are that the crop of 1914-15 will be about 10 per cent. larger than that of 1913-14. The Vostizza and Gulf crops (the highest grades), which last year were greatly cut down by late rains, will apparently be abundant this year. Such damage as the crop in general has sustained has fallen in the districts lying from the city of Pyrgos south, where the provincial or lowest grade of currants is produced.

Sears, Roebuck & Co. Have 6,000,000 Customers.

In a recent interview, I. S. Rosenfels, advertising manager for Sears, Roebuck & Co., says that right now the company has more than 6,000,000 names of live customers on their lists, a very large per cent. of whom are farmers, or living outside of corporate towns and cities. He also asserts that the business their house and other mail order houses are doing within the confines of large cities and towns is growing, and that a more determined effort is being made to get such business. Both this company and Montgomery Ward & Co. have recently made efforts to attract business in the city of Chicago, which has heretofore been practically abandoned by them. It will probably surprise merchants in larger cities and towns learn the extent of business going from the town to such houses.

How Shall a General Merchant Keep His Stock Down?

An Interesting Discussion of an Actual Case. A Ready-Made Plan Dissected and Discussed. No More Important Point Than Keeping a Stock Constantly Moving and Fresh. How Department Stores Do It.

Mr. Miles W. Bliss, a grocer and general storekeeper of Tunkhannock, Pa., submits a business problem that has probably arisen in the experience of many another reader hereof. It is therefore published and discussed here:—

Noticing in your last issue in "Service Department" that you have a staff which is pretty expert about most things connected with merchandising, and which you say it at the service of subscribers, we are writing you in regard to our problem.

To start with, we are in a very conservative old town (county seat of Wyoming County), 30 miles from Wilkes-Barre and about 35 miles from Scranton. Both these places draw a considerable trade from this section, and particularly the town people. We have no foreign element here and our business is largely with town people, although we have some farmer business, but not as much as we would like. We have a good farming country around about and most of the farmers are prosperous and the outlook for crops this fall is unusually good.

Our problem in a nutshell is that we have too many goods for the amount of business we are doing. We should say that 25 per cent. too much would be a very conservative estimate. We have been in business here about eight years, having bought an old-established business of good reputation, with a stock at inventory of about $9,000, which had been reduced by sales to that amount from around $14,000 to $15,000. We are carrying at the present time about $20,000 in stock and fixtures, divided about as follows: $2,500, groceries; $3,500 shoes; $2,500, fixtures; $12,000, dry goods and carpets. Our stock has been increasing from year to year and we have been unable to keep it down, because our trade want the newest stuff and will not buy last season's stuff, even at cut prices (cost or less).

We have done some advertising, but without very much success, as trade keeps about the same year in and out. Have tried local papers, circular and other kinds of advertising, but the goods which we want to move, without very gratifying results.

We saw an advertisement of a sale plan that looked pretty good, inasmuch as they advertised that the plan would cost nothing, unless used, and then only $5. It is one of the green ticket variety, with plenty of advertising in local papers and by circular, with a number of stunts to get the people talking and bring them into the store, which is supposed to be closed one day to get the goods marked and ticketed with the regular price and cut price piled up on counters, tables, hung from rods through center of store and other devices of displaying them and get them in sight. The goods which are staple, seasonable and readily salable to be kept in the background, although to be marked down for the sale and also ticketed with the green tickets. There are also to be banners inside and outside the store to attract attention to the Cash Converter Sale, which is not to be a closing out sale, however.

Now, we do not personally think much of such sales, but if it will get results, namely, cash, we would like to try it out, if it will not cheapen our store or have a tendency to hurt future business.

We would certainly like to reduce our stock at least 25 per cent., as we could use the cash to very good advantage just now, and would like to dispose of these accumulations of slow selling merchandise, even at a loss, although they are for the most part in good shape and good condition and in some towns would bring 100 cents on the dollar. Don't get the impression from the above that we have a lot of old shop-worn goods on our shelves, because we haven't; it is all in pretty good shape, only the people want new stuff, and will apparently pay regular price for the goods that suit them.

We would like your opinion in regard to a sale of the kind we have tried to describe. Guess we had better send the plan along for your examination, which please return as soon as possible.

Every general storekeeper experiences this difficulty of keeping his stock within bounds, especially if he handles dry goods and other lines where fashion is a factor. He is compelled to keep his stock up-to-date—the fashion and women's magazines circulated by the million have seen to that—and unless he constantly keeps cleaning out the accumulations, he will soon find himself swamped. Such a situation can easily become dangerous and every possible thing should be done to avoid it. This correspondent is strongly advised to cut stock down at least 25 per cent., and probably 33⅓ per cent. would not hurt. This especially applies to the $12,000 dry goods stock, which is much too large for the business that we assume is done in a town of this size. A total stock of $17,500 is so unwieldy that it cannot possibly be turned over as often as a retail stock should be.

The large department stores all use modifications of the same method of keeping their stock clean. As soon as there are accumulations, they are cut in price and advertised, and in a short time are gone. Many have special days—"Clover Days," "Coupon Days," or "Opportunity Days," on which large numbers of articles—those which it is particularly desired to get rid of—are tagged and sold at reduced price. There is nothing which the large city department store looks closer after than keeping its stock constantly moving and fresh. None of these stores tolerate for a minute the slightest indication on the part of any line to lag behind. If an article does not sell readily in the ordinary course, it is stimulated by extra work on the salesmen's part, and by advertising. If it does not sell then it is cut in price and pushed bodily out.

Now as to the plan which Mr. Bliss sends on for the opinion of this paper. It is devised by H. C. Johnson, of Coventry, Col., and is copyrighted, so that we will not refer to it except in general terms. It is called the "Cash Converter Sale" and is intended to turn stale stock into cash. Briefly, the plan involves a rearrangement of the stock which would put at the front the goods which were to be moved, and at the back the goods which are staple and do not need to be pushed out. There is a special excursion for out-of-town people, a scheme to give away baskets with your label pasted on, special window displays and a campaign of special and conspicuous advertising concessions to customers who influence other sales, special rebates upon presenting cards, ending with a "last day" effort, which is intended to cap the climax. Of course everything is to be sold for cash. We see nothing undignified about the scheme, and believe it would succeed in moving considerable stock. There is nothing particularly new in it—its value lies mostly in the fact that it is worked out and is presented as a concrete, complete plan with everything ready. Naturally all such ready-made plans have to be used with intelligence and should usually be modified to fit more closely each individual case. They ought to be treated more as a nucleus, or as a guide on which to build a plan directly adapted for the particular need of the man using

Express Companies Fearfully Hit By Parcel Post

Official Figures Show That all the Big Companies That do Short Haul Business are Now Making Deficits Instead Their Former Large Net Income. Adams Drops From $172,296 Income to $567,765 Deficit. Other Companies Had Same Experience.

Washington, D. C., July 16, 1914.

Figures prepared by the Interstate Commerce Commission show that the big express companies have been fearfully hit by the parcels post laws. The larger companies suffered a reduction of 84.4 per cent. of operating income during the first nine months of the fiscal year ending June 30th. In dollars the reduction was from $3,793,638 to $589,740, a loss of $3,203,898.

The period covers the operations of the now defunct United States Express Company, which when it went out of business, attributed its going to the competition of the parcel post and the reductions made in express rates by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, although before either was a fact the business of that company had been decreasing.

These figures, prepared by the division of statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission, show that the Southern and Western line companies are the only ones able to keep out of the positive deficit column. They are the ones that handle the long hauls in which the profit lies. Express, in common with other railroad service rates, increase with the distance, but epenses do not. On an express package from New York City to Tarrytown the essential express expenses, that of pickup and delivery, are the same as on a package carried from New York to San Francisco. Statisticians have figured that the expense accruing by reason of a messenger riding in the car on the long trip is hardly worth figuring on a given package. The cost of picking up and delivering counts.

That is believed to be the chief reason why the Adams, American and Globe show great reductions of their operating income, while the losses of the Western and Southern companies were not great enough to force the income account into the minus column, although all suffered reductions in comparison with the corresponding period of the preceding fiscal year.

The Adams Company ran down its operating income from $172,296 to a deficit of $567,765, of which $116,329 was incurred during the month of March, 1914. During the nine-month period the American fell from an operating income of $689,568 to a deficit of $607,898, of which $128,486 was incurred during March of this year.

The Globe Company's operating income of $28,223 was wiped out and a deficit of $20,991 took its place. The Great Northern, owned and operated by the Great Northern Railroad as a branch of its transportation system, suffered a reduction in its operating income, from $194,678 to $144,270, and kept so far away from a deficit that it is one of the shining exceptions in the balance sheet. The Southern, another of the companies with profitable long hauls, felt the pinch of competition and lower rates to the extent of a drop in operating income from $992,717 to $640,404.

Wells Fargo & Co., which took over the remnants of the United States Company, suffered a reduction of operating income of substantially $516,000, but remained out of the deficit column, having an operating income of $814,622, as compared with one of $1,301,088 for the corresponding nine-month period of the preceding fiscal year.

The Western Express Company, which has considerable short-haul business, had its operating income of $37,008 converted into a deficit of $33,724 during the nine-month period.

Big Co-operative Scheme in Trouble.

"United Retail Grocery Stores Co." Organized in Delaware Last Year With $1,000,000 Capital, on Verge of Receivership. Internal Disputes and Lack of Funds the Cause.

Pittsburg, Pa., July 16, 1914.

A petition was filed on July 9th, in the United States District Court here by Amos H. Evans, an attorney of New York, asking for a receivership for the United Retail Grocery Stores Company, a Delaware corporation. Evans' nephew, Albert L. Evans, is made co-defendant and the uncle asks for a receivership to determine where $400,000 worth of the stock of the company has gone. The filing of the petition followed the arrest of Amos H. Evans by his nephew and Hector C. Mitchell, secretary of the corporation. Evans was arrested after a dispute with Mitchell in which the latter is said to have been struck. Albert L. Evans is president of the company, his uncle, Amos H. Evans, is vice-president, and J. L. Harris is treasurer. A. H. Evans claims that his nephew has endeavored to put him out of his position as vice-president. It is said that no books were kept and that A. L. Evans controlled the company through Harris and Mitchell, and also that he secured $400,000 of unsold stock for which he refuses to account.

The United Retail Grocery Stores Company was incorporated in Delaware several months ago with $1,000,000 capital. It is alleged that no accounts or records have been kept of the company's business, and that there is no money available to meet liabilities. When the company was first launched it was loudly exploited in the Pittsburg and Ohio papers as a co-operative enterprise that was destined to reduce the cost of living and destroy the trusts.

Shares of stock were $10 each. The avowed object of the company was to "buy up and establish grocery stores throughout the country and buy and sell for cash and to buy directly from the producer." The president, A. L. Evans, was a former salesman for a Baltimore house; the vice-president, A. H. Evans, is a local lawyer; the secretary, H. C. Mitchell, was local representative of the St. Joseph and Grand Island Railroad; the treasurer, J. L. Harris, was formerly employed by a local steel company. Not one of these had had any grocery experience so far as can be learned. Another of the promoters was C. C. Truax, an ex-salesman for Staley's Starch stock scheme.

On July 22d all grocers and butchers will close up shop for the day and adjourn to West View Park for the annual outing of the Retail Grocers' Protective Union.

Fred R. Drake Gets Warm Over Net Labelling Laws.

Makes Some Sarcastic Suggestions For New Law. Wants Packer's Net Weight on Label, With Some Other Personal Details—Three Slaps on Wrist for Violation.

I offer the following suggestion for a new national labelling law, which I hope will be pushed through at once:—

HOUSE BILL No. 1,999,999.

An act entitled "An act to further stimulate, excite, foment a feeling of unsatiable curiosity and inquisitiveness on the part of legislative bodies, assemblages, gatherings, Congress, conclaves and of the consuming public, and to further irritate, exasperate, convulse and accelerate the neurasthenic conditions now obtaining among wholesale grocers."

Be it enacted, That hereafter, and from henceforth in the future, all receptacles, capsules, haversacks, satchels, boxes, cartons, vessels, vases, barrels, jars, panniers, hampers, trays, hods, scuttles, every utensil whatsoever, firkins, carboys, bottles, crocks, flagons, demijohns, flasks, cans, kettles, bowls, basins, cups and containers of food and other products shall, in addition to the multitudinous matter heretofore required, be labeled so as to set forth, show and advertise the following items, facts and figures, to wit:—

1. A life-size photograph, tintype or chromo of the packer and the members of his immediate family, his uncles, his cousins, once removed, and his aunts, his poor relations, and his beloved mother-in-law, five times removed, but always coming back.

2. The net weight of the packer, weighed in a bathing suit, with allowance for climatic shrinkage of the bathing suit; his complete Bertillon measurements, together with his finger prints, carefully imprinted on the label; birth-marks, or any other fascinating data.

Arrangements for the big event have been almost completed. There will be a number of sports and athletic contests on the programme and music will be supplied by the Pittsburg Civic Brass Band and McCreary Sisters Novelty Orchestra. Free lunch and coffee will be served from 11 to 2 o'clock. Preparations are being made for the accommodation of 20,000 people. The names of those who are committee chairmen follows: H. I. Donnelly, general; U. C. Bartlett, advertising and publicity; S. E. Palmer, sports and prizes; Bernard Buesker, transportation; I. Ros McKeever, dance; D. E. Durbin, lunch and refreshments; Charles Wachter, grounds; Herman H. Stult, finance; Leonard Rau, music; C. A. Bell, programme.

P. I. D. U.

3. A biographical sketch, outline or history of the packer, victim, goat, setting forth his ancestral taints and tendencies, with especial reference to his police record, if any. And in order to make the reading matter as interesting, attractive and exciting as possible, all biographies shall be edited by Laura Jean Libbey, Elinor Glyn, Lillian Russell and Bertha M. Mud. The labels to be copyrighted in all countries and New Jersey and the stage, music hall and moving picture rights to be reserved to the packer, his heirs and assigns.

4. A complete catalogue, index, table of the packer's physical points of interest, including his displacement, bulk tonnage, number and quality of the fillings of his teeth, the length of his nose and the color of his hair, and should he have none, the reason therefor, to say nothing of threat and thereof.

5. A full, free, frank statement of the packer's habits, foibles, delinquencies, out and indoor sports and pastimes, and also his daily routine, itinerary, beat and should he be out at any time of day or night, when he will return.

6. A declaration in red ink of all preservatives, condiments, cosmetics, hair tonics or cold creams used by the packer or his wife whereby damage or inferiority may be concealed.

Finally, the labels containing the above encyclopaedic information, facts, figures and fiction, shall not, as regards quart containers, exceed 24 feet in length and 6 feet in width, or be printed in type smaller than pica. English preferred.

This act to take effect not later than three months prior to its passage.

Any attempt on the part of the packer to give false, misleading or ambiguous information on the aforesaid, aforementioned four and twenty foot labels shall be subject to the following penalties or fines:

First offense.—The culprit shall receive three stinging slaps on the right wrist.

Second offense.—The culprit to have his umbrella broken and the community to pray for rain, or both.

Government Decision in "Package" Hams Conveys Hint to Chief Sweeney of Pennsylvania.

Hams and Bacon Covered with Sacking Are Not "Packages" Under Federal Net Weight Law. Pennsylvania Chief Sweeney's Reported Attitude on what are "in Package Form" Under New Commodities Act.

Some time ago a question arose as to whether hams and bacon, after being covered with sacking in order to retard shrinkage and prevent spoilage and uncleanness, were to be considered as in package form, so that the net weight must be printed upon the label under the new Federal net weight law. The question was brought to the attention of the United States Department of Agriculture by the Chicago packers. The Department after consideration, has decided and now announces that such goods are not in package form and need not bear the statement of the net weight upon the label. Of course, the decision is the only sensible one.

Perhaps this may convey a hint to Chief James Sweeney, chief of the Pennsylvania Department of Weights and Measures, who has shown a disposition to push the new Pennsylvania net weight law further than it can reasonably or legally be carried. The commodities act is referred to, in which it is provided that if in package form, the food and other products covered by the act shall bear upon the label a statement of the net weight, etc. Mr. Sweeney is taking the position that everything is "in package form" which is put into a package or container in a retail store. In other words, eggs sold from a crate and put into a carton or paper bag; vinegar drawn from a barrel into a bottle or jar, and so on. This would make everything "in package form" except something like molasses run into the customer's own receptacle, and is manifestly ridiculous. So far as is known, the State officers have made no effort to enforce this attitude as yet, but they may.

Here is an interesting dispatch
 Not So Pitiful As clipped from a
 It Looks. Philadelphia newspaper:—

San Francisco, Cal., July 11.—A grocery bill for $300 bids fair to prevent forever the hopes of John Neimi and his little family of gaining competence in California and freeing themselves from debt. Neimi, his wife and their three small children, arrived here last week and were arrested as they stepped from the train, a warrant sworn to by a grocer in Rock Springs, Wyo., having headed them off.

The entire family now is in the city prison a small section of which has been converted into dormitory for the mother and children. The latter were taken to the Juvenile Home, but the mother grieved so that Lieutenant Tobin, in charge of the prison, ordered them brought there when he learned of her grief.

Neimi says that it was impossible for him to make a living in Rock Springs, and that, obtaining a position in Fort Bragg, he took every cent he possessed and bought tickets for that place. He will be held until an officer arrives from Rock Springs, or the charge is dismissed.

Should the charge be dismissed? That depends. If the debtor, before he left home, made an honest effort to pay his debt, if he found that if he stayed there he would not be able to pay it, and if he then went to his creditor and told him that, making a promise to pay it as soon as he got established in his new home, then the charge might be dismissed. But the writer has no idea that anything like this has happened. We would be willing to make a small wager that the debtor went airily away without saying anything to his creditor about the $300 debt, and without caring very much about it. That is the way most debtors do, and if this one did that, the charge against him should not be dismissed. He should sweat in jail until there is burned deep into his consciousness the fact that a man who does not pay his grocery bill when he can, is no better than a thief.

But could he pay it? Certainly he could. Practically all debtors could pay their grocery bills if they wanted to, and that is why so few of them are entitled to consideration. Possibly they could not pay them in full to-morrow, possibly they could not pay even a dollar a week on account of them, but they could pay twenty-five cents a week, every one of them. Paying twenty-five cents a week would in time pay the debt, and would show good faith. A surprising percentage of debtors fail to see this—they think all the excuse they need for not paying a $100 grocery bill at all, is the fact that they can't pay it in full to-morrow. We have no hesitation in asserting that except in rare cases, every man who owes a grocery bill can pay it in some way.

Another promotion scheme of loud and fulsome promise, has followed the way which every other enterprise of this character has followed up to the present time. It is the United Retail Grocery Stores Company of Pittsburg, Pa., a Delaware $1,000,000 corporation that promised, when organized about a year ago, to move mountains and perform miracles. An application has been made for the appointment of a receiver.

The promoters of the U. R. G. S. Company, when they started out to exploit their scheme, did what all other promoters of the same class do—they went to the Pittsburg papers and unfolded a glittering story of retail grocers banding together to destroy the trusts, to eliminate the middleman, and to reduce the cost of living. The papers always swallow this sort of guff without investigation, and they did in this case. Hundreds of shares were sold on the strength of that publicity, which continued for days. The scheme was to start co-operative stores, or to buy regular stores and turn them into co-operative stores, and as painted by its press agent it looked fine. Just like the scheme of the National Co-operative Association of Philadelphia, whose promoter went to the papers with the same sort of tales. In both cases the effect of the free publicity soon wore out, and as the concerns had very little behind it, the inevitable happened. The Philadelphia scheme is dead and its big demonstration store on Market street has been closed. The Pittsburg enterprise is facing a receivership, which may be appointed for it even before these words are printed.

There are two morals: The first is that it is not so easy to work these wonderful revolutions that have been promised through the papers, i. e., to eliminate the middleman and reduce the cost of living, and that it is particularly hard for fourflushers to do it. The second is that the way to float an enterprise is to do some performing before you do any promising. Where you make promising take the place of performing, it is only a question of time when some discontented stockholder will take you into court. There is a third moral which, however, is more a fundamental principle than a moral:—Don't lie about your scheme and don't promise anything that you are not more than sure you will be able to perform.

We take the following pregnant story from a drug paper:—

True.

The shop boy was filling some quinine capsules in a slipshod manner. The proprietor came up, and, after watching him for awhile with growing dissatisfaction, took the job away from him and proceeded to fill the capsules himself. Meanwhile, the boy looked out of the window.

"You'll never make a drug clerk," declared the proprietor, as he filled capsules. There was a traveling salesman in the store who knew the proprietor very well, and who was not adverse to talking plainly.

"The boy doesn't know how to be a clerk," remarked this salesman, "and you don't know how to be a boss."

"What do you mean?" demanded the druggist.

"Just this, that you are too ready to do a clerk's work. Your job is that of being the boss, and you ought to stick to it. Your time is too valuable to spend in doing a boy's work. Show the boy what you want done. Then supervise him and see that he does it. But don't do his work for him."

The druggist thought this over for a few moments. Then he called the boy back and explained what he wished done. The boy has been a better clerk ever since, and the proprietor has been a better boss.

This splendidly supports what we have so often contended—that the average employer does not know how to make his clerks efficient. He is content if they seem to do the work of the moment fairly, without caring whether they develop themselves or their positions, though such a development would mean greater sales to him and greater profits.

A clerk ought to be fertilized and cultivated like a piece of ground. Hundreds of clerks are willing and able to produce results if they are only shown how.

To the person with ingenuity and experience, who is seeking new outlets for his energies, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World"

suggests that a correspondence course be devised for the particular use of retail merchants already in business, upon the following subjects:—

1.—How to know at all times how much money must be gotten back from an article of merchandise to repay the seller all he has put into it. How to find what has gone into it and the value thereof.

2.—Advertising for the peculiar needs of retail merchant in the country town.

3.—Ways and plans for accomplishing certain results in business such as reducing the stock, adding new departments, changing from credit to cash, keeping collections fresh, store arrangement and so on.

4.—Tested ways for treating employees so as to get the most from them. The adaptability of plan like profit-sharing to a small or medium-sized business.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" regards the above subjects as perhaps the most important of the many which a merchant needs to know in order to succeed. There are dozens of schemers who have systems for sale which fail under one or the other of these heads, and some of them are good. But most are mere schemes, offered only to make money for the seller. That is not what is wanted. Light should be thrown on all these schemes, not from the standpoint of the seller, but from the standpoint of the buyer. All the good trade papers publish articles on these subjects. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" alone is on a steady hunt for all of such matter.

it can get, but space is limited, and has to be divided among so many subjects that nothing can get quite adequate treatment. A correspondence course on the subjects, written by trained men, would have immense value and somebody ought to get it up.

National Convention of State Food Commissioners Elects Pennsylvania Commissioner President.

The American Association of Dairy, Food and Drug Officials held its annual convention at Portland, Me., during the week. Dr. Carl L. Alsberg, head of the Bureau of Chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture, was a speaker on Wednesday. His subject was "General Standards." Officers were elected as follows: President, James Foust, Pennsylvania; vice-president, J. A. Roberts, Maine; secretary, W. B. Barney, Iowa; treasurer, Frank A. Jackson, Rhode Island. The most efficient methods of meat inspection for small communities, publication versus prosecution as a means of abating food trade evils and the value of specialized counsel in food laws were subjects discussed by other speakers.

String beans from nearby points are plentiful—25 to 30 cents per basket. Jersey cucumbers are also in market at 40 cents per basket and white squash at 10 cents.

"That's What I Want."—You know what a stiff stone is.

A stiff stone is apt to be spick and span all right, but you don't run into things in it. Year in and year out the same things are in the same places.

Deliver us from stiffness.

When you hear a dozen women daily say, "that's what I want," you're not in the "stiff" class.

Fifty live summer reminders on fifty plates with fifty prices on them will make fifty sales that wouldn't be made if everything was kept just in place.

Put things out of place if you want to sell them.

Women don't strain their eyes to look over your line of shelf goods, no matter how neatly they are arranged, but she'll pick up a bottle of pickles, and a can of lobster, or a jar tongue, when laid out under her nose and say, "that's what I want."

She may "have" her coffee man and her tea man and even her delicatessen man, but you with your layout and she in her buying mood, closes the deal.

Storekeeping is one suggestion after another. That isn't the way Mr. Hubbard would put it but that's the way all the same. And remember young man, it's a profit time. It's a time when the little things count. Three for a quarter tomatoes is out of it, but bottled goods and dainty canned goods and general tid-bits are in it.

"That's What I Want" is inspiring. It goes to show you have hit the mark. It proves that it pays to dig things out and get them into daylight.

Look at the dry goods people—they never cease their shows.

Aren't seasonable foods just as important?

In reality are they not far more important?

38—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because the percentage you can make is far greater from nationally advertised products than from non-advertised products.

¶ A woman comes in and asks for a nationally advertised cocoa, on which you make 6 per cent. net. There is no talk, no argument, and very little work. Suppose you consider 6 per cent. too little and start to sell her an unknown brand instead. You make the sale, but you work hard for ten minutes to do it, and you may have more work if she comes back to complain because it isn't satisfactory. The profit is ten per cent. net, but on which sale have you really made the most? On the first you need little more than interest on your investment, because there was little or no work. On the second you need not only interest on your investment, but a return for your work.

¶ This is really the whole case of nationally advertised goods vs. non-advertised goods in a nutshell. Consider it carefully.

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

A Sharp Point for Grocers as to Selling Condensed Milk.

One reason for the high cost of living is the milkman. Also he is responsible for the complaints of some of the grocers because of the smallness of their profits. Few of the people who have milk delivered every morning at their doors realize that they must pay the dairyman for something more than the milk they get. It has never occurred to them that they are helping to pay for the hay and oats that are eaten by the horse the milkman drives and for the up-keep of the wagon to which the horse is hitched. In addition to this, every consumer must contribute his pro rata share of the price which the dairyman has paid for the horse, the wagon, the harness and the cans.

But that is not all. The driver isn't working for nothing. Every consumer to whom he delivers milk must pay a part of the wages he gets.

It is not necessary to offer proof of these facts. They will be fully understood as soon as they are mentioned.

Because the extra charge for delivery amounts to only a few pennies or a few nickels a day, the average consumer is likely to let it escape his notice. If the whole sum he contributes during a year toward the establishment and maintenance of the delivery service were to be collected at one time, he would sit up and take notice.

It has remained for the Pacific Condensed Milk Co. to inaugurate a system whereby the grocer may get the benefit of the price which the consumer pays for delivery. This company is persuading grocers that the milkman may be dispensed with.

There is no reason why the grocer who furnishes his customers with sugar, flour, vegetables, etc., should not furnish them with milk also. When he delivers the provisions that are ordinarily sent out from a grocery store he can deliver milk, with no extra expense to himself.

This is made possible by reason of the fact that Carnation Milk can be handled easily and with no waste. It is furnished in hermetically sealed cans of convenient size. It is always clean, pure and as sweet as when fresh from the contented cows that produce it.

In addition to serving his own interests, the grocer who induces a customer to buy Carnation Milk renders a valuable service to him and his family. Carnation Milk is more economical than ordinary dairy milk; it can be handled with less bother; there is no danger that it will become sour before opening the package, it can be used as a delicious substitute for cream, and it is always free from contamination. Where it is used the bills for milk and cream are reduced.

It is estimated that the average consumer pays about $3 a month for the delivery of milk and cream. Some of them pay much more. The grocer might be adding this amount to his own profits.

He can do it by handling Carnation Milk and inducing his customers to use it. He will be surprised at the ease with which this can be accomplished. Carnation Milk is advertised extensively and continuously. A single trial is usually sufficient to convince the consumer of its superiority over bottled milk and cream.

It is a luxury that goes with economy.

It is opportunity knocking at the grocer's door.—Adv't.

Nearby peaches are now coming forward, but the Georgia shipments still continue, reaching as high as 17 cars in one day.

The New York Letter

Jobbers Again Said to be Working on Manufacturers to Stop Direct Sales to Retailers. National Biscuit Co.'s Infringement Suit. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

New York, July 16, 1914.

The topic of the hour in the West Side grocery trade is a reported movement among jobbers to apply the screws to manufacturers in an effort to prevent direct sales to retailers, including chain and department stores and even buying exchanges.

There is no open concerted movement of this kind, of course, that would be illegal. It is admitted, however, by representatives of several jobbing houses that they, on their individual initiative, have let various manufacturers know their position on the matter. It is said that in these cases the jobber who finds that certain manufacturers continue direct sales will endeavor to substitute other products so as to discontinue purchases from such manufacturers as soon as is possible, without any serious loss of business.

Jobbers say that they have always taken the position that it is unfair for a manufacturer to sell to them and then to sell as well to their customers, or to concerns that would be their customers if they could not buy direct.

This is an old grievance of the jobbers, but with all of their various efforts in the past, they have not been able to do much in checking the evil. It is possible, however, that a somewhat stronger effort is now underway on the part of the jobbers. It may be something of a mystery as to how they are coming to take the same measures at this particular time without any agreement to do so. This may be explained, however, as due to the various talks that they have heard at conventions. The addresses and advice given at such conventions may have exercised a similar influence on a number of jobbers, each of whom decided to go ahead and carry the ideas into action, and this can be done without there being anything in the nature of a real agreement, at least an agreement in a legal sense.

It is stated that direct sales have been increasing in several ways. Large retailers in various part of the country are said to buy at jobbers' prices from various manufacturers. The railroad and steamship lines have the same advantages. Then there are the chain stores, the department stores and the buying exchanges.

One authority in the trade said that there are a few manufacturers who pursue a really rigid policy in selling only to jobbers. He said that if a jobber was to cut off from the lines which he handles all that are sold direct, in the various ways mentioned, he would probably have to go out of business, for there would be little left for him to handle.

If the jobbers could tackle one manufacturer at a time and adjust the issue with him before taking up the matter with another, more progress could probably be made than at present. But if they did so then it would imply some sort of an agreement, and, of course, that is out of the question.

The more likely course, it is said, is that the jobbers, as a result of agitation among themselves, will gradually make it apparent to manufacturers that direct selling is resented by the individual jobbers and that the manufacturer known to sell only to jobbers is likely to get additional business which other manufacturers will lose.

The moral influence of the jobbing trade will make itself felt in this way, it is said, and besides, the manufacturer who continues to sell direct in flagrant defiance of jobbing sentiment may find that he will lose, as a result, the business of various jobbers. Thus there will be action as well as moral influence.

The jobbers base their objections in part on the fact that the direct sales are at jobbing prices, exactly the same prices which the jobbers themselves have to pay. But of course it is only because of the jobbing prices that the direct sales are attractive to the chain stores and other concerns enjoying such advantages. If such concerns had to pay higher prices they would be as likely to buy from the jobbers as from the manufacturers, and perhaps more likely, because of convenient terms which the jobbers can give. So the fight is really to put an end to direct sales as far as possible.

One great obstacle in the way of the jobbers now, as in the past, is the fact that some of the largest jobbers are also manufacturers and sell products of their own manufacture direct, just as other manufacturers do. So all of the jobbers are not ready to take the same position on the question, however much all may have applauded the advice given by the speakers at conventions and meetings. In the efforts of the jobbers to bring about reform they have to do some reforming in their own ranks as well as among the manufacturers.

The general opinion here seems to be that the development will proceed rather slowly because of the many difficulties to be encountered.

Considerable interest has been shown here in the decision of the Chancery Court of New Jersey in the suit of the National Biscuit Co. against the Pacific Coast Biscuit Co. The court sustains the complainant, charging the defendant company with infringement of the style of carton used by the plaintiff. The court decided that fifteen of the defendant's cartons are in the nature of imitations, and issued injunctions prohibiting their further use.

An important feature of the decision, in the opinion of the trade here who have given it attention, is that the prohibition is based largely on mere similarity in names, shape of carton, design, color and similar details. It was not claimed that there was any exact or even close imitation, but the court held that the similarity was sufficient to mislead the public, and so ordered injunctions.

The underlying principle, the court held, is that no man has a right to palm off his wares as those of another, thereby cheating the public as well as the rival.

In behalf of the defendant company, it is said that the infringing cartons were made up under another management.

Owners of trade-marked specialties express themselves as much pleased with the broad interpretation of the court. It is likely that after this any similarity in cartons and labels will lead to further appeals to the courts by various companies.

One large manufacturer said that, without regard to the particulars of the present case, there has been altogether too much imitating of labels, trade-marks and containers by people who seem to go just as far as they can in the direction of imitation and still try to keep within the law. The present decision will tend to make it dangerous to do so and so the owners of trade-marked specialties who have built up a prosperous business will be protected more fully than in the past, if other courts follow the New Jersey precedent.

The cutting of oil prices has caused some talk as to whether it is really due to over-production, as claimed, or to a trade war by the Standard Oil interests against other companies. All grades have been reduced.

There is also considerable cutting of gasoline and locally, at least, there seems to be something of a warfare by the big producers against the little fellows.

The Merrell-Soule Co. has won a decision in its suit against the Powdered Milk Co. of America. The plaintiff charged that the defendant company infringed its patent on its process for drying milk by the spraying process. In the United States District Court, at Buffalo, N. Y., it was held by Judge Hazel that the defendant infringed on the plaintiff's patent as charged.

The defendant company claimed that it used a form of device differing from that of the plaintiff. The judge held that this was not a sufficient defense, and that the plaintiff's patent covered the process, whatever form of device is used.

It is said that several other companies have been using substantially the same process, and so may be affected by the litigation. The plaintiff will appeal.

The programme is nearly completed for the annual convention which will be held by the New York Retail Grocers' Association in the Broadway Hotel in this city August 3d to 6th. It has been decided to set aside one hour at each session for general discussion, at which every member present will have he right to bring up and talk on any subject in which he is interested.

Local people are giving attention this week to the proceedings of the annual convention being held in Portland, Me., by the Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug Officials. Many of the questions of the hour in the food trades are being discussed at this meeting.

Fred. Mason, the Shredded Wheat manager, has been elected a director of the Power City Bank, at Niagara Falls, N. Y.

The suit brought by Carter, Macy & Co. against the Board of United States General Appraisers to test the legality of the Read tea test was dismissed this week by Judge Hough in the United States District Court. The court strongly upholds the right of the Tea Board and the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe the tests for teas entering the country.

The arrangements for the coming convention of the New York State Retail Grocers' Association have been practically completed. The convention will be held from Monday to Thursday, August 3d to 6th, in the Broadway Central Hotel. This is one of the old-time hostelrys of the city in which the delegates and friends may be made at home, with all of the comforts and conveniences, at much less expense than in some of the newer hotels.

The local associations have been preparing to give the visitors a genuine welcome and show what real New York hospitality is when the right kind of people are extending it.

There will be speakers, and among them men of prominence in the various parts of the grocery field, manufacturing and jobbing, as well as retail, but this is not to be a cut and dried convention, with a lot of formal speeches and half of the audience dozing. It is intended to make it a wideawake assemblage from start to finish. The various papers and addresses are to be discussed freely from the floor. Every delegate will have opportunity to give his own views on any and all questions.

In addition, there will be time for the various delegates to bring up any new topics of interest in the trade.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

In the spot coffee market the country is showing some interest, but while there seems to be increased inquiry, there is little real buying, except for immediate requirements. The general tone of the market is a little firmer because of the upward movement in options. In mild grades the trading is of a quiet, jobbing character and prices are steady. Santos are held at 11.25 to 11.35 cents, and S at 11.70 cents.

Teas are fairly active. The local dealers report a special demand for Formosias. The undertone of the entire market seems firm. The local buying is not as brisk as that of the country buyers who are evidently forced to replenish supplies.

Wherever Clothes Are Washed!

Women wash clothes to get them clean, so they don't like to use dirty starch. Wherever clothes are washed, in city or suburb, in town or on the farm, women appreciate ARGO STARCH because it is CLEAN starch.

Not only will ARGO STARCH, in the neat 5-cent cartons, please your customers, but it is easiest and best for you to handle. The carton is convenient; it saves the work of scooping and weighing bulk starch; it saves the cost of bags and twine; it saves TIME.

ARGO STARCH MAKES A SPLENDID DISPLAY

A neat pile of ARGO STARCH in your window, or on your counter, is sure to catch the eyes of customers and increase your sales. Always have ARGO STARCH where it can be seen, and it will sell itself. Bulk starch only sells if customers remember they want to buy it; ARGO STARCH acts as a reminder, an advantage of package goods which the live merchant quickly appreciates.

Corn Products Refining Company NEW YORK

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"ARGO STARCH is pure, clean starch which is sure to please. Can be used for either hot or cold starching."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

Moderate business in refined sugar is reported. Withdrawals are of a routine character. The Arbuckles have advanced their quotations 10 points, and standard granulated is now quoted from 4.40 to 4.45 cents by the several refineries.

Spot tomatoes are selling fairly well. No. 3 Maryland tomatoes are steady at 72½ to 75 cents, factory. There is a stronger demand for No. 2s. Some sales have been made to local jobbers at 55 cents, factory, but later most of the packers became firm at 57½ cents. Offerings of Maryland futures are not as free as they were. The quotations are about 75 cents for No. 3s and 55 cents for No. 2s. The new pack of peas is not selling very briskly at present. The tone is easier on extra sifted grades, Southern pack, which are selling at $1.25, factory. Petit Pois are steady at $1.75, factory. Little attention is being given to standards and seconds. String beans are firm, especially No. 10s green, Southern pack, with limited offerings. Holders are firmer on limas, but they are not moving freely. Spot spinach is in good jobbing demand, with a higher tendency in No. 10s, which are now selling at $3.75, delivered. Fancy grades of Maine corn are scarce and firm.

In canned fruits, Southern cherries are firmer. There is less disposition on the part of the packers to take additional business on the present basis. Fancy stock is not to be had under $1.25 laid down. There has been some selling of No. 2 standard whites at $1.05 per dozen, factory. Some extra white 2s have been sold at $1.12½ here. There is a fair demand for canned California Bartlett pears. Apricots are in some inquiry and the tendency of prices is slightly upward. There is a fair amount of business in canned strawberries and other small fruits, on which the prices are generally firm.

Spot dried prunes are easier and more freely offered. Some interest is shown in futures for October delivery, on the basis of 5½ cents, coast, on 40s to 50s inclusive. Spot seeded raisins are steady at 8½ to 8¾ cents, with little business. Seeded raisins are offered for August-September shipments from the coast at 6½ cents for choice and 6½ cents for fancy, in one-pound cartons, but buyers take little interest in the offerings. For October shipment the offerings are about 6¼ cents for choice and 6¾ for fancy. The association has not yet announced prices on future seeded and the quotations are from outside packers.

Rice is in fair demand, with prices well sustained. It is reported that local stocks of Honduras have been pretty closely cleaned up and stocks of Japans are getting low.

Spices are firm. Grinders are buying cloves and gingers in good quantities. Stocks in first hands are said to be light.

Molasses is dull, as is expected at this time of the year, but the prices continue steady.

Flour is moving slowly. The domestic demand is sluggish and a considerable part of the present business is for export. The tendency of the domestic buyers is to go slowly, although representatives of the mills are advising that this is a good time to buy flour. Spring wheat patents in jute are to be had as low as $4.25 for some brands, but 10 to 15 cents more is asked for most brands.

Receipts of Western eggs have been decreasing. High-grade goods are getting more scarce. On average eggs of fair grading their prices are well sustained, with a fair demand. There is also some reduction of the volume of offerings of very cheap eggs of lower grades. Most sales of current ungraded receipts are at 17 to 20 cents. The candled and graded stock is selling from 18 to 23 cents. Nearby white eggs are fairly plentiful. The demand for them is selective. On really fancy qualities the prices are well sustained, but there is an accumulation of ordinary and lower qualities. On retail fancy nearby whites, prices range from 25 to 29 cents.

The butter classification has changed to Class B, which lowers the score on all grades of creamery about 2 points. Prices are a little easier. The creamery extras range from 27 to 28 cents, according to the scoring. There is an abundance of butter scoring 91 points and under, and on these grades prices are slightly lower. Firsts sell at 24½ to 26½ cents, and seconds at 22 to 24 cents. There is a light jobbing trade in process butter, with the best grades selling at 20½ to 22½ cents.

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

XXV.—Is it Good Business to Carry High-Priced Coffees.

By WILLIAM B. HARRIS.

Following the article of last week the question has been asked as to whether the average store should ever carry blends of coffee at 50, 60 and 65 cents, and whether it would be an advantage from any standpoint. There is no question but that there are very few departments carrying blends at the above prices and even where stores deal almost exclusively in fancy groceries the average price of the coffee sold would be very much below these figures.

If the dealer could create a demand for a blend of coffee at either of these prices, it would assure him of a very select trade in the first place, and he would be practically certain to hold this trade for the reason that there would probably be no one else in his immediate neighborhood carrying a brand at that price. There is no question at all but that the dealer could give value for the amount charged. In a great many cases the package in which the merchandise is contained appeals very strongly to the consumer and if the highest grades of coffee obtainable, both as to cup quality and as to style were put up under a special label in a particularly attractive package that would be out of the conventional form, the dealer would be warranted in asking a good price and a price that would net him a handsome profit.

In the first place, the coffee value would be the basis and the selection in this regard would be the best obtainable. Then the package would necessarily be an expensive one that might run from six to eight or even ten cents. Naturally the dealer who is progressive enough and has ingenuity enough to work up a package of this kind and to interest the trade in it would be entitled to something additional for "knowing how." There is a class of trade that will pay any price for exactly what suits their fancy and there are dealers who recognize this fact and cater particularly to customers of this description. This is noticeably the case in connection with stores carrying fancy fruit, particularly those that are accustomed to make up steamer baskets.

If this can be done in one direction, it can be just as well done in another, and, in fact, it is done in great many lines. The greatest amount of effort to-day seems to be spent in selling cheap merchandise rather than in making higher priced merchandise so attractive as to command attention. Frequently the dealer loses sight of the possibilities in this direction. This doesn't mean that he should carry a large assortment of fancy grades of merchandise, for he probably would not be able to exist on sales of this description, but it does mean that he should be provided with articles that will appeal to a class of trade that is influenced very largely by prices and appearance and who want the very best.

Carrying articles of this description has influence on customers who are satisfied with more moderate priced products and it is, therefore, a good advertising asset for there is a class of customers who like to frequent a store that is patronized by those to whom price is no object. The effort of the dealer should be largely toward influencing his customers to secure the better grade of merchandise including coffee. If he sells merely on a price basis, turning over the same sort of material month by month, he is not able to make any great progress nor is his store very likely to build up in appearance. Neither will there be very great improvement to the class of trade to which he caters. If, on the other hand, he aims to keep the best or a supply of the very best, and to sell as much of this grade as possible, it has a silent influence over his entire business which will be found to improve not only as to volume but also as to the character of the goods most in demand.

The Pennsylvania Plan.

What It Means to Organization and What It Means to the Consumers.

Two thousand five hundred dollars in gold (real money) will be handed out at the Philadelphia convention in accordance with the promise made at the Warrenton convention to those associations showing:—

1st.—Largest increase of membership.

2d.—Greatest mileage to the convention.

3d.—Largest sales of the articles listed in the Pennsylvania Plan.

The smallest association in the State has just as fair a chance as the largest. Each new member gained during the year counts five points. On mileage, there are six classifications, as follows:

Class 1.—Association with less than 50 members, total mileage will be divided by 10, thus giving one point for each ten miles.

Class 2.—Association with from 50 to 100 members, every 11 miles counts one point.

Class 3.—From 100 to 200 members, every 12 miles counts one point.

Class 4.—From 200 to 300 members, every 13 miles counts one point.

Class 5.—From 300 to 500 members, every 14 miles counts one point.

Class 6.—Over 500 members, every 15 miles counts one point.

In awarding points on sales, the total sales for the various members will be added together. These sales will then be divided by the whole number of hundred inhabitants of that town, and the result will be the number of points awarded.

There are twenty awards, ranging from $500 to $25.

The Pennsylvania Plan is an incentive to organization. Two-thirds of the money is to be awarded for the results which benefit solely your local organization. The other third represents reciprocity to the manufacturers who have supplied the money. It has taught the merchants that they can concentrate their selling ability on the goods in the plan:—

1st.—Because the goods are the best in their class.

2d.—Because they pay a good profit.

3d.—Because every dollar's worth sold helps to give organization a push forward.

The Pennsylvania Plan has been the means this year of adding thousands of new members to the local and State Associations. It has been the means of reviving into usefulness many hitherto inactive associations. It has stimulated interest in organization work. It has helped in the organization of many new associations. It has enabled a trained and experienced organizer to visit the local associations, with splendid results. It has paved the way to securing legislation by increased strength of each local body. It has strengthened the State Association. It has helped to make better association members. It has increased enthusiasm in the work of organization.

It has created a better understanding between manufacturers and retailers. It has been constructive. It has demonstrated to the retailer that he can serve his friends. It has taught the manufacturer that if he helps you, you, in turn, will help him.

The Pennsylvania Plan helps organization and creates good will. Your good will is an asset. Cash in on it by proving to the manufacturer who helps you that your good will to him means increased sales.

All that has been done is nothing as compared to what can be accomplished during the coming organization year, with your help. Remember, that in helping organization you help yourself.

CORRESPONDENCE.

For the Delegates of the Coming Pennsylvania Convention

Philadelphia, Pa., July 15, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Say boys! honestly now, you thought we were four-flushing when we told you there was $5 under the hat at Johnstown, didn't you? You thought the same thing again, now didn't you, cross your heart, when we told you we were going to give out $2,500 in gold at Warren? Once more you had your doubts—great big ones this time—when we told you that the Pennsylvania Plan was going to throw hundreds of new members into the association. If you want to know how many—come to the convention and listen to the reports. You will go home tickled to death and proud of your State.

Now for some more promises, and please remember that we haven't four-flushed yet.

We have 1,000 first-class seats for Keith's Million Dollar Theatre. This beautiful home of the finest vaudeville of the world will belong to the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association Tuesday night, September 8th, and the theatre will be gorgeously decorated in your honor.

On Wednesday we will have special train or trolley cars to take 1,000 delegates to the handsomest park in the country—Willow Grove, and don't forget, Sousa will be there with his incomparable band of a hundred pieces. We will go straight there from Frankford, after Edgar shows the boys a model association. At Willow Grove you will find everything to entertain and amuse, no matter how young you are; no matter how old you are, and we will arrange also to give you a nice lunch while you are there, and hand you your return trip tickets, so that you can get back to the hotel at the hour your wife tells you to. For the information of those who have no wives, please understand that Philadelphia is jammed, packed full of beautiful girls who are looking for husbands, or good fellows for the occasion. Send your orders on ahead.

So much for the fun. Now for the serious side of the convention. We are going to have the kind of speakers who will give you ideas which you will take home and turn into money—the real thing, great big men—men who have not only made tremendous successes themselves, but have the God-given faculty of being able to tell other people how to do it.

A New Service Department for Subscribers.

Are you thinking of buying a cash register, new or second-hand?

A coffee mill or roaster?

A computing scale?

A cheese cutter?

A cash carrier system?

An oil-pumping outfit?

A waste paper baler?

An adding machine?

An account register?

A slicing machine?

A refrigerator?

A typewriter or adding machine?

A safe?

A delivery wagon, team or motor?

New fixtures of any kind, or any store appliance?

Are you dissatisfied with your jobber?

Is there any other move you are about to make on which you would like some honest, fair, well-posted advice?

We can help you. We have all the principal catalogues of all the store appliances used by retail merchants on file in this office. You can see them if you call here, or we will send you any information from them which you want.

As to any other things, we have a staff here which is pretty expert about most things connected with merchandising. It is entirely at your service without limit and without price.

Generous? Not at all. On the contrary, selfish. The more we can do for you the longer we will keep you a subscriber. It is straight business all the way through.

SERVICE DEPARTMENT

927 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The magnificent ball room of the Adelphia Hotel, cooled by refrigerated air, will be so delightfully comfortable that everybody will be sorry when the sessions are over. Don't let anything stop you from coming. We want to make Philadelphia glad she is in the State of Pennsylvania, and we want to make the State of Pennsylvania proud of her merchants. We will send you home full of new thoughts which you will turn into cash, grateful that you are part of the greatest organization of retailers in America.

Yours truly,

Pennsylvania News Items.

Vinegar and water will not mix commercially, according to the decision of the Dauphin County Court handed down last Thursday, even though the addition of water is needed to make the vinegar usable. Cider vinegar under the law must be 100 per cent. pure apple juice. Judge McCarrell having so determined in the case instituted by the Food Division against C. W. Burnett, a wholesale grocer. The case was purely a test. The law provides no compound not a "legitimate product of pure apple juice and not made exclusively of apple cider" may be sold as vinegar. The defendant admitted using approximately 20 per cent. of water, but contended that the use of water was necessary in order to reduce the acetic acid so as to make it fit for domestic use. The action was an appeal for a new trial, following a verdict last September, and the appeal was rejected. "The legislature," said Judge McCarrell, "must be presumed to have been familiar with the methods of manufacturing vinegar from cider or apple juice, and if the use of water was necessary for any purpose in the manufacturing provision for its use would have been made. It is not the duty of the Court to make the law reasonable, but to expound it as it stands, according to the real sense of the words."

No More Undisclosed Gelatine in Fruit Jelly.

The Federal Food and Drug Board on Tuesday handed down a ruling that jelly could no longer be called fruit jelly if it contained gelatine. It has been a current practice to add gelatine in order to make the jelly "jell" more satisfactorily. It can still be added, but if so it must be so labeled.

New apples are coming forward in large quantities, but the quality is not much. The range is 25 to 75 cents per basket.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

Considerable demand is reported for tea, mostly for new crop. Old tea is still selling, but does not constitute more than 15 or 20 per cent. of the entire movement. Prices are exactly where they were a week ago. There does not seem to be any indication of immediate change.

Coffee.

Coffee is weak and very unsatisfactory. The demand is very dull, and buyers have been expecting new coffee almost any time. Very probably everything except the finest cup grades of Santos could be obtained at concessions. All grades of Rio are quiet and unchanged. Mild coffees show no particular change for the week, although the feeling in them is not especially strong. Java and Mocha unchanged and dull.

Sugar.

All refiners have advanced 10 points during the week, and at the present time the situation is fairly strong. There seems to be plenty of raws available, and it is a little uncertain just what the market will do during the next 30 days. It does not seem reasonable to expect any radical movement either up or down. The consumptive demand for sugar is good.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is exactly where it was a week ago, and most glucose products are seasonably dull. Compound syrup and molasses very quiet at ruling quotations.

Canned Goods.

The heavy rains of the past few days have helped the tomato prospects, although they came so late that the crop will be unquestionably late. However, there is no present indication of any serious deficiency in the pack. Both spot and future tomatoes are unchanged. By reason of scarcity, No. 2s are commanding 57½ to 60 cents in a large way. This is from 2½ to 5 cents above normal. Future corn is unchanged. The present indications are for a fair crop of peas almost everywhere. Prices on both spot and future grades are unchanged. Apples are unchanged, both spot and future. Packing has begun in Baltimore. California canned goods show no change and moderate movement. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and in quiet demand.

Dried Fruits.

No particular movement is reported in dried fruits for the week, and prices show no change at any point. The future prune market is still stiffly maintained. Peaches, apricots and raisins and all other dried fruits are seasonably dull.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are where they were a week ago, with small demand.

Marrows are still inclined to be a trifle easy, though no decline is reported from last week. California limas are steadily maintained on the recent basis, without any particular movement. Green and Scotch peas, unchanged and dull.

Butter.

An active trading is reported in butter, and the receipts are cleaning up regularly upon arrival. The bulk of the make is now showing the effects of the hot weather and the percentage of strictly fancy butter is very light and meets with a ready sale at advanced prices. There is also a good demand for under grades, which are selling at various prices, according to quality. The make is about normal for the season with a very good consumptive demand.

Eggs.

The receipts of fresh eggs continue liberal, but the percentage of fine eggs is small. The bulk of the receipts show heat deterioration, and have to be sold at concessions. The consumptive demand is good, and the market is healthy. Under grades are moving, but at unsettled prices.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm, at an advance of ½ cent a pound. This is due to the report of light make, and the good consumptive demand. The quality of the cheese now arriving is very good, and the market is healthy throughout.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats, picnic, regular and skinback hams, bellies and bacon are in good consumptive demand and firm at ½ cent advance for the week. Everything in this line shows an advancing tendency, and a good consumptive demand. Pure lard and compound lard are steady and unchanged. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are in fair demand at unchanged prices.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Rice.

The general outlook still continues of fairly hopeful character, though there are mixed opinions as to what course the situation will take during the coming six months. The improvement in the demand has been somewhat sporadic and has appeared in sections here and there, but not in sufficient volume to stimulate the movement to any widespread material extent. However, there are signs of renewed activity and that there is steadily less disposition to hold off, which seemed apparent last week. This condition really contributes continued strength to the market, which has held up remarkably in face of an untoward general situation. High grades of Honduras are quite cleaned up, with no chance for replenishment short of the new crop, the natural result being that the medium grades are being taken up without hesitation at advanced prices. Japans are again higher and inasmuch as there is a steady shortening of supplies of all grades, it is felt that values must hold very strong clear up to October. Foreign continues to move very slow, and even at the attractive prices quoted appears to command but little attention.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast are to the effect that stocks are beginning to run light and under improved demand the chances for assortment are meagre. At New Orleans the movement is reported quite satisfactory at very firm prices.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, the favorable reports of the new crop are confirmed and everything at the present time points to a remarkable output.

Cables and correspondence from abroad note: Rough rice, market dull; spot cleaned, more inquiry; forward Burma, firmer; Siam, firmer.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Business in the above line during the last week has been quite satisfactory. Our jobbers are buying carefully and in a small way, but reorders are very frequent, and on the whole we are doing even more business than we did at the same period last season. This refers to practically all lines where we are able to offer supplies. In a good many of our lines we are short of goods.

The sardine catch in France is now going on, but it is very poor, only very few fish are being caught and they are high in price. We are getting some French fish and they are practically always sold to arrive. We may say the same of Portuguese sardines. There is some catch, but not sufficient to supply the American demand. There has been an advance in the cost of Portuguese sardines, and while the market here is reluctant to follow this advance as yet, buyers will have to get accustomed to the idea of paying higher prices or they will not be able to get the goods. Stocks of well-known brands are very small all over the country, and there is very little in first hands and new supplies are very badly needed.

In Norway, unfortunately, the catch is very disappointing, although we are getting some fish right along and the quality is very satisfactory. The large combination which the Norwegian packers had is a thing of the past, but they are talking of a new combination and meetings are being held frequently, although no tangible results have been brought about as yet. It is rather an unfortunate state of affairs in Norway, because the packers have no fish to keep their people busy. They are paying rather high prices for the fish and are unable to get very much higher prices for their finished product. Of course, this is the principal fishing season and we are still in hopes of having, if not a very good catch, at least a fair catch of sardines in Norway. Owing to the scarcity of sardines quite a lot of new goods have been put on the market, principally small herrings in tomato sauce and otherwise prepared. They have in a good many instances taken the place of sardines and are selling very nicely and these goods have come to stay, and the demand for the same is bound to increase and the goods are really very tasteful, nice and very cheap and wholesome.

Sprats, both French and Belgian, are selling very nicely and stocks in first hands are small.

Mackerel trade is quiet. Of course, it is well known to the trade that a combination has been formed on Norway mackerel. Nothing of course can be said as to whether this combination will prove a success. We will have to give them time to work out their own salvation. Like ourselves, most of the other large importers have their own men on the spot in Norway and they will cheerfully pay the prices that the trust is willing to pay the fishermen for their mackerel, and naturally, we shall be able to get some supplies to supply our trade, but the natural consequence of this newly formed trust will be that prices for Norway mackerel will be higher than they were in the past. Of course, this may be all changed if the catch should prove a very abundant one, but nothing can be said as to that as yet. The catch of summer mackerel has been quite satisfactory, but very soon the fall fishing will begin, and we shall keep our readers well informed as to its progress.

STROHMEYER & ARPE Co.

New York.

Spices.

The market is more active. Prices of cloves have advanced both here and in Europe and indications are that we will have advanced in many grades. The market is very firm and many articles in the line are short supply here.

Peppers.—Practically unchanged; trading being routine in character. Foreign markets are firm and stocks in Europe have decreased very heavily during the last 30 days.

Red Peppers.—All grades are extremely scarce and likely to go higher.

Cloves.—Prices decidedly firmer, due to a steady trade demand, and revised estimates of the coming crop. Higher prices are probable next month.

Pimento (Allspice).—Quite active and steady at lowest prices on record. No likelihood of any great change in the near future.

Mace.—Still in fairly good demand. The supply here is reported small and the probabilities are that we will have higher prices during August.

Nutmegs.—Are fairly active at practically unchanged prices.

Cassias.—In better demand and spot supplies have been sold out readily. It is predicted that firmer prices will prevail.

Gingers.—African root is decidedly firmer. The crop is over and the total is much reduced, in comparison with the 1913 crop.

Green Ginger Root.—In fairly good demand at firm prices. There is quite a scarcity at present.

Paprikas.—In fairly good demand, season considered. Prices unchanged.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Celery and cummin quite firm, and likely to advance. Caraway in good demand. Prices steady and firm. Other articles are unchanged.

MARKET NOTES.

Potatoes are off and the range is now 65 to 75 cents per basket. The demand is good.

Nearby corn is plentiful and brings 75 cents per basket of five dozen ears. Much of it is poor.

A few Jersey limas are in the market, averaging $3 per hamper. Southern imas are also coming North, at $2.25 to $2.75. The demand is fair.

Tomatoes are plentiful, but much of the receipts are bad. The range is 40 cents to $1 per basket.

New red currants range from 6 to 8 cents per quart, and are wanted. The crop is good.

Peas are winding up, and are high—$1.50 for New York State stock, and $1.25 to 1.50 for the few remaining Jerseys.

Watermelons are glutted, and the range is 15 to 30 cents. Some cars have been turned down for freight.

Lower Tariff Law Lets Holland Condensed Milk Into This Country.

Several Brands Now Selling in Competition with Domestic Brands, at 30c. to $1.25 Cheaper. Packed in same Size Tins. Now Pay No Duty to Enter the United States.

Perhaps the most noticeable effect of the reduced tariff in the grocery field up to date has been the way it has allowed foreign condensed milk to come into this country. There are to-day probably half a dozen brands of Holland condensed milk selling actively in this country, none of which came in at all before. The present tariff law admits condensed milk free of duty.

The Holland sweetened condensed milk is packed in tins weighing from 12 to 14 ounces, practically the same size tins in which the domestic brands are packed. Wholesale prices range from $3.75 to $3.70, against prices on the domestic brands from 30 cents to $1.25 per case higher. No effort has as yet been made by the domestic packers to reduce prices to meet the foreign competition, and there is no indication of any drop, but the Holland brands are unquestionably getting in and jobbers report considerable demand for them.

"READYMAID" PROFITS

THE SOUPS IT PAYS TO SELL!

Readymaid Concentrated Soups will please your customers because of their natural flavor; they are made of strictly fresh, clean meats and vegetables, in our spotlessly clean kitchen, and contain only the natural ingredients used in making soups in the home. To understand this, try Readymaid Tomato Soup and see if it doesn't have a better tomato flavor than any other you ever tasted. Notice its rich, real tomato color. It is Tomato Soup. All Readymaid Soups have that natural taste, and that's why they're so easy to sell.

Ready-made Profit for You

"Well bought is half sold"—you make a profit on Readymaid Concentrated Soups as soon as you buy them because you can buy them for less than others. The price for all kinds is 90 cents per dozen, and on a five-case purchase we give you 10 per cent., FREE, which lowers the cost to 81 cents per dozen. We give you this low price so you will push the sale of Readymaid Soups, instead of charging you more and spending the extra money in advertising.

The Effect of Prohibition on Retail Business

Retailers From Various Sections, which are Now Dry but Were Formerly Wet, Tell How the Cutting Out of Liquor Affected Their Stores.

[Several weeks ago the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" announced that it had launched a campaign to obtain from retail merchants in all the sections of the Union which had recently gone dry, statements showing what effect this had had, if any, upon the regular retail business in staples. A number of these statements have been obtained and they will appear below from time to time. The letters may not appear each week, for collecting them from all parts of the country is a colossal task and will take some time.—Ed.]

By E. A. Bacon, Decatur, Ala.

With Prohibition my business is worse, but if they would cut it out altogether I don't know how it would be. There is more whiskey sold now than when we had saloons, so I would prefer saloons.

By W. W. Cook & Son, Marshall, Minnesota.

We have found Prohibition did not have any effect on our business. It was talked of a good deal around town, before it went dry, but we cannot see any difference. I think that if there would be an election held now it would go dry by 150 majority. At the last election it went dry by 49 majority.

By W. A. Brock, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

The liquor law has not been enforced here in the city, and there is no way of telling with certainty just what effect a full enforcement of the law would have on business. I don't think we have had many open saloons here since the law went into effect, but I am inclined to think that the law has been violated right along in different ways, so we have not had Prohibition. I have been told that the law is enforced better in the small towns, but I don't know how it affects business.

By Eugene Wright, President and Manager, The Wright Mercantile Company, Idaho Falls, Idaho.

Conditions are much improved in our city and county; we certainly give due credit to legislation causing saloons to be closed, and hope the nation will awaken to the necessity of striking at the vitals of whiskey production and the manufacture of all alcoholic liquors. Financial, moral and spiritual conditions are growing stronger daily.

By W. Lukin, Tampe, Arizona.

I am very much against Prohibition, as same has killed more than two-thirds of the business and property value of this town.

By Mr. Tom McMullen, Sulphur Springs, Texas.

In regard to Prohibition my business has greatly increased since saloons were removed. There is more cash and much better collections. Our town and county has never enjoyed such prosperity—our population is double, we have more and better schools. There is not a vacant business house in town and there have been a great many built since saloons left us. But some of our citizens suffered when saloons left us. The gambler had no home and occupation. We had more peace officers than we needed, the most of our lawyers moved away, our courts are idle most of the year. I will say that any town desiring to retain its population of lawyers, bartenders, gamblers, thugs, corrupt officers, tenderloin district, should by no means vote out the saloon.

By People's Mercantile Company, J. N. Shreve, Proprietor, Elkins, W. Va.

Since our town went dry two years ago there is a vast difference in business for the better. We can now credit people for merchandise that we dare not do while we had saloons. Our collections are from 25 to 30 per cent. better. Should saloons come back again as they were once we would feel like closing our doors.

We scarcely see a drunken man on our streets, and our police force has lots of time for rest. Our business has increased about one-third. Give us Prohibition now and always is our motto.

FINE CATALOGUE AND COLOR WORK

No. 927 Arch Street, Philadelphia

Hardware—Tools—Specialties

Materials in Dependable Paints.

Considering the information gathered from different sources would lead the unbiased buyer of paints at retail to believe that the mail order houses are full of the "tricks that are vain." It is unnecessary to go into details, as every merchant handling paints in his hardware department may easily ascertain the facts on inquiry, and through him post the customer who may have a fancy for dealing with these Western aggregations of capital whose most tangible asset is their misleading catalogue. Recently the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" published an article in this department on "Guaranteed as Against False Paints." It occasioned wide comment, and in referring to it the following letter applies:—

New York, July 8, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Concerning the article, we would say that the only safety in buying paints is in purchasing them from reputable houses, who may be easily learned about upon inquiry. We have read the article and can plainly see that parties are imposed upon by impure goods.

The neutral oil you mention we have never heard of. We use in our paints only linseed oil, at the present time. When oil reached the extreme figure which occurred some two years ago, we think, we were obliged, with others, to introduce in a small way soya bean oil. This we found would not be harmful and it was necessary in order to maintain prices. After the price of linseed oil receded, we dropped this introduction and now use linseed oil, which we believe to be the only proper oil for the best results in paints.

Yours very truly,
F. O. PIERCE CO.
J. A. Spooner, Secretary.

On inquiry, G. B. Heckel, of the American Chemical Society, and an expert on paint materials, defined neutral oil to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" as follows:—

Neutral oil is a very light petroleum product in the lubricating series, having a gravity of between 30 and 37 degrees, Beaume. It is "debloomed" and therefore supposed to have no florescence. It was originally made from crude paraffin oils, though at the present time somewhat similar oils are produced from Oklahoma and Texas crude petroleum. As a lubricant it is used only for light, high-speed work. In paint it has no place, excepting possibly in certain steel paints; but when it appears in paint, commonly occurs as an adulterant of linseed oil, and it is a favorite material of linseed oil "dopers" when the price of that product makes adulteration tempting.

It appears that Cleveland, Ohio, has always had the reputation of being the headquarters of the neutral oil producers, and has gained thereby an unenviable notoriety among the users and manufacturers of dependable paints. A good deal of this questionable business has been carried on through the mails, although agents for the sale and distribution of this oil are around and about. Whatever its uses may be in other lines, neutral oil has no place in reliable ready-to-use paints. The use of soya bean oil has the approval of the best authorities.

Clinching a Paint Quality Argument.

Competition, not so much on price as quality, is keen with paint manufacturers. A number of the leading firms in that special line are well known to small town general merchants who handle a generous stock of ready-to-use paints in conjunction with hardware—the two go together, naturally. The sale of one stimulates and broadens the sale of the other. It is observed that more recently than in the past paint manufacturers have laid a good deal of stress on the spreading capacity of their products; in fact, this talking point has been reiterated until it has become quite dull. The Devoe-Reynolds Co. seems to put a new edge on the argument, however. In a late announcement, which was headed "Free Paint," they state that "If Devoe's doesn't take less gallons and less money, no pay. The cost of putting it on is about two-thirds of the job. If Devoe doesn't wear a year or two years or three years or four years longer—distinctly longer and better—we will give you enough to do it again." This is an original offer, not easily bluffed even by an oversanguine publicity spouter.

Philadelphia as a Hardware Center.

They had been discussing the relative advantages Philadelphia possessed over New York as an accessible receiving and shipping point for hardware stock. It had been a matter of pre-eminent importance to one house, the manager of which said: "I am thoroughly acquainted with both cities from pretty nearly every point of view in a commercial way. New York is supreme in its own particular location; but Philadelphia makes a far better distributing point. There are no rivers to cross, no merchandise to be lightered or trucked around or across the city, as in New York. Philadelphia is accessible from every direction, both in shipping and receiving, and for the distribution of hardware in the East cannot be beat. The Quaker City has an enviable reputation for the variety, extent and dependability of its merchandise in this line alone, and it would always be in the front if the trouble was taken to keep this fact everlastingly before the buying public."

Purely Personal

Bruce Drysdale, advertising manager of John Lucas & Co., Ltd., who have been paint and varnish manufacturers since 1849, with impressive plants in the East and West, is now in the South on a mission from the house. He will not be back in Philadelphia for a year. Mr. Drysdale is a paint expert in addition to being an accomplished originator of sales and advertising campaigns. Roy C. Sheeler, his assistant, will have charge of the department during his chief's absence.

After an enjoyable vacation, J. S. Bonbright, vice-president of the Suplee-Biddle Hardware Co., is now on a visit to the jobbing trade, and will not be back at headquarters until some time in September. J. E. Baum, president of the company, who is also an active director of the Corn Exchange Bank, when asked about the current situation, said: "In addition to harvesting this year the greatest wheat crop since white men crossed the Mississippi River, and other crops of equal and surpassing magnitude, another reason why business must pick up is to be found in the depleted stock of merchandise the country over. Merchants have not been buying, and when they come in the market wholesalers and manufacturers of hardware will be crowded with orders."

E. C. Simmons, chairman of the board of the Simmons Hardware Co., St. Louis and elsewhere, has a delightful summer home at Oconomowoc, Wis., where he passes his summers and now is. As an indefatigable worker he is well known, and he plays as hard as he works.

Known Brands in Tools the Sellers. Tale of a Late Comer in Safety Razors.

How many general storekeepers study a stock of tools with a view of handling and selling only the kind that will give complete satisfaction. A large majority of the readers of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" are to be found in the small towns—places of from 2,000 to 3,000 inhabitants and less, consequently specialize on lines which appeal to the farming community. The farmer has long since ceased to be the "rube" of the comic actor, and is a wideawake, go-ahead, well-informed man, and in buying goods is on a par with the merchant himself in the selection of tools, for example. There is a margin in high-grade tools that the retail mail order house has not spoiled as yet. If their manufacturers are wise they will keep them protected for the legitimate merchant.

A story that attracted the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" for this department relates how a general storekeeper has built up a good trade in tools by pushing an advertised, standard brand. The dealer in question had always been planning to enlarge and develop his hardware department, and was especially proud of his tool stock, for he had found a good line of tools a good trade puller for his store. In speaking of this the merchant said: "Not so long ago much of the tool trade was an indifferent quality of merchandise. Manufacturers who have produced the better grades did not rely on dealers to create a demand; they stepped right in and educated the buying public up to their standard. There are a lot of people who buy and use tools besides recognized and trained mechanics. The latter are by no means the best judges of good tools, and very often the merchant or salesman who knows his stock can tell a mechanic more than he ever dreamed of. A mechanic is seldom progressive so far as his working equipment is concerned, excepting he is either under the management of a skilled engineer or has taken the trouble to become better or more intelligently informed.

"However, that is a digression. What I meant to say is people may have appreciated the difference in quality, but they made the poorer tools answer. But time and experience have proven to such former indifferent buyers that the good quality tool is the best in the long run. Another thing, people are better off materially and therefore can easily afford to buy dependable tools. In my own personal experience more farmers are buying a good grade of tools than ever before. One of the main reasons for this is the advertising which the more enlightened and energetic tool manufacturers are doing in all kinds of publications, including the trade papers. Farmers and others read these advertisements and go to the local general stores for these brands. This advertising also educates the customer who knows what to ask for by being acquainted with its merits, also educates every one on the satisfaction and economy of buying first-class tools, articles of precision, merchandise that it is a pleasure to own and use. This is steadily increasing the demand and sales.

"One of the strongest statements a manufacturer of tools can say is the guarantee of satisfaction or money back. It is my experience that the way to create and hold a tool trade is to push a well-advertised make of sterling quality. Others may be as good, but the public do not know this, and it takes too much of my time and patience to put up an argument to this effect as against the known article. Life is too short, and if the manufacturer is not liberal enough to take this labor off the shoulders of the dealer, I am for the man who will, first, last and all the time. In other words, whenever I sell any tool from a known line I make a good friend for my store, because the goods give satisfaction. Selling a line like this brings the retailer more real profit than selling some unknown brand of indifferent quality on which the dealer has to do all the pushing.

"Of course, I help along the general publicity the goods have acquired in a National and trade way by using space in my local papers. I make fine use of the electros and advertising helps that I may get for the asking from the manufacturer or the wholesaler. One helps the other immensely. And while on this subject of pushing tools, cutlery or any other line of hardware, let me tell you another story. One in which the manufacturer thought his goods were so widely and favorably known that when he put a new specialty on the market the supposition was it would sell itself by the ordinary recommendation of the dealer alone. It was a safety razor, and the company making it was, on edge tools and cutlery, one of the most familiar to the trade for the high grade of its merchandise. Under this impression they were firmly of the opinion their safety razor would be an easy seller.

"Well, when it comes to safety razors, some little advertising has been done in the past ten years at least, and one or two, and possibly more, had about cornered the trade. Their names were recognized as the leaders in the line, had become household words, as it were, whenever a safety razor was mentioned, consequently had the market, which meant the general storekeeper, too. Now, if this company had announced a safety razor guaranteed by their established quality trade-mark years before they did, their sales would undoubtedly have been enormous and the others would have been trailers. They waited until quite recently, and the trade and public in the meantime had been educated otherwise. Such a foundation of success cannot be so easily shaken. I now notice the generous advertising of the safety razor referred to, and in time it will be in the class as a seller, where it belongs. Personally, I believe it the best in the market from the very name of its makers and the honored brand it bears; but as yet my customers do not know this. It will be borne in on them in time. One should not be over-confident, you know, in the face of sharp competition."

Wooden Heels on Shoes and Slippers. What the Dealer Should Advise.

Few people outside of the trade know of the general prevalence of wooden heels worn on women's shoes of every kind. Dealers are often ignorant themselves of this fact; or, if they have a true knowledge of their stock, as should be the case, then it would be no more than fair that the purchaser be informed that some caution and care should be exercised in the wearing of such heels. Wood heels have always given more or less trouble and annoyance to sellers of shoes, and it will continue until women become more enlightened in regard to the proper care that should be given them in order to assure proper wearing. Dissatisfied customers are liabilities, they are to be avoided. Rather than have a woman complain that she has been imposed upon where the enamel covering on the wood heel of a shoe or upon slippers is cracked or broken, or the leather or fabric covering so damaged as to be impossible to mend, or the leather top lift worn off entirely too soon, instructions how to avoid such troubles are in order.

Now the remedy for this sort of thing seems to lie with the merchant himself. If he will instruct the salespeople to explain to the customer when they sell shoes or slippers with wooden heels that the heel is wood, that in order to preserve the life of the heel it is absolutely essential for the customer to watch the wear of the leather lift, and when this leather lift begins to wear down to the edge of the heel to return the shoes at once for new lifts to be put on.

More wood heel shoes and slippers will be sold this season than ever before. Most of these shoes will be worn on the street, which is a severe test for any wood heel, says the "Shoe Retailer," no matter how good the quality of the wood or the leather top lift that comes in contact with the pavement. The constant and heavy contact of the thin leather top lift with stone, brick, granolithic or macadam streets will soon wear it down to the wood. Customers should understand when this happens that it is time to return the shoes for treatment. Some dealers may think that it is requiring too much of them to warn their female customers of how they should be careful of their wood heel shoes, but this is a part of the service that every successful dealer in shoes recognizes as an obligation.

If customers are informed, when they purchase wood heel shoes, that they must not allow the top lift to wear down to the wood; that if the patent leather, celluloid or enamel coating breaks or cracks that it is not due to imperfect workmanship or a poor quality heel; and that wood heel shoes should not be worn too long at any one time on brick, stone flagging or granolithic sidewalks, they will be protecting themselves from unwarranted claims for adjustments by customers who expect a wood heel to give the same service as one made of leather.

An Elastic Shoe Being Shown.

An elastic fabric for both men's and women's high shoes has made its appearance in samples and regular lines for fall wear. It is being shown in several varieties of brocades, plain cloths and velvet, and is spoken of as being durable, elegant in appearance and supersedes both buttoning and lacing on account of the elasticity of the goods. In other words, shoes made from this material can be put on and taken off as easily as slippers. Dealers who have had an opportunity to examine merchandise of this kind commend its practicability from a point of convenience; but whether it will take is another question. The general storekeeper seems to favor them more than the city dealer.

New Grade of Women's Shoes.

A new grade of McKay shoes, the production of which is rapidly increasing in Lynn, Haverhill, Cincinnati and other centers for the manufacture of women's shoes, is attracting a great deal of attention among both shoe buyers and shoe manufacturing experts. The shoes in this grade seem to meet a demand for fine style shoes at low prices, and it is believed by their producers that the manufacture and sale of them will rapidly increase.

In this new grade are combined the economy of the McKay, the style of the welt shoe and the flexibility of the turn. Each manufacturer of this new grade of McKay shoes has his own individual methods, and they differ in many details. But a general description of the method of making the shoes is about as follows:—

Lasts and patterns of the latest novelty styles are chosen; also light soles and light upper leather or stylish fabrics. The sole leather is flexed. The uppers are cut and stitched in the usual fashion, and are lasted by hand or machine, as the manufacturer pleases, says "American Shoemaking." They are left on the last overnight, and longer if necessary, until they take the shape of the last. Some are heeled on the last. Anyway, they are left on the last long enough to take the shape of the last so thoroughly that they will hold it, as does a welt shoe. They are sewed on the familiar McKay machine, but a new light thread is used, and six or eight stitches are taken to the inch. They are beaten out with unusual care. The inside of the shoe is made as smooth as is the inside of a welt shoe. Then an extra nice sock lining is laid into the shoe and the inside is made to look as fine as is the inside of a high-grade turn.

The edges of the sole are trimmed very close and are beveled, so that they look thin. Sometimes they are so thin that they are called ribbon edges. The best of these new McKay shoes have leather Louis heels on them. The outsole of the shoe is split, and the grain split is laid over the breast of the heel, as in making wood heel shoes. The completed shoe looks very much like a turn shoe. Indeed, some of the best of these new McKay shoes look so much like turn shoes that they have deceived experienced shoemakers. These improved McKay shoes look as if they would sell in large quantities. Many retailers are likely to substitute them for low-priced welt shoes. It is claimed that they are better shoes than are low-price welt shoes. They will also take the place of turn shoes, the demand for which is larger than can be satisfied.

A Swiss "Roosevelt" Shoe.

Some one is sore because a Swiss manufacturer is making a shoe for the South American trade under the name of the "Roosevelt Shoe," in connection with the use of the American flag with the brand. The feeling is displayed over the flag usage, but more correctly from the fact that the idea did not originate with him. The new shoe is to take advantage of the colonial's popularity and presence in the Latin-American countries, and is a shrewd trade move, which takes little, if any, cognizance of patriotic considerations.

Special Footwear for Dancing.

With tango dancing a mania in the cities, it may possibly reach the provinces eventually—indications of its arrival are coming in, the authorities say. At any rate, when it does hit the ruralite the shoe merchant with foresight will have looked up the special tango pump, know where it is made, and be prepared to order either from his jobber or manufacturer in advance of the actual demand. Ordinarily low and light shoes may answer the tyro in essaying to master the Argentine tango, hesitation waltz, Brazilian maxixe and the one-step; but the special dancing pump is the thing, and contributes grace of movement and safety in negotiating the double-kick, Boston dip, New York slide and Chicago trot.

Manufacturers have not been neglectful in designing suitable footwear for the fashionable and intricate dancing now so universally popular with men and women everywhere. One Brockton maker has produced what he calls "The pump that put the 'tan' in tango," which he claims is a great seller, retailing for $3. Another New England factory with a reputation as "headquarters for pumps," announces a "brand new, just designed" tango pump, with an all-rubber sole, light in weight, especially made for the purpose, and extends to the heel of leather, with rubber disc—a non-slip proposition—coming in gun metal only, retailing at $5. So on down the list of the manufacturers of tango ribbon, the low-cut dancing shoe or pump, will offer a double faced satin line in black, white and other evening shades. All tango sets and tie ornaments in pressed steel and rhinestone effects—newest things on the market, he says—come in silver, gold, gilt, gun metal and black of exclusive designs and "correct Krug color."

As quickly as the country merchant discerns the approach of the tango in the offing, so far as his community is affected, an order for this handsome, appropriate and stylish footwear should be hustled off for quick delivery. Naturally, these remarks are intended for the cogitation of the "live wires" among the storekeepers handling shoes, for the "blisters" and the dead ones are never awake to any selling opportunity, obvious or otherwise.

Comprehensive Fall Catalogue.

A new catalogue, the most comprehensive ever sent out by Manss-Kill Co., manufacturers, Cincinnati, was mailed dealers last month. Their new fall styles are now being made up from what they claim are irreproachable designs in style and finish.

Movies in Shoe-Selling Campaign.

The first factory in the line to establish a nine-hour work day in the West is the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. St. Louis, Mo., one of the largest plants in that section. Their new factory will be equipped with the most improved machinery at once. The "Blue Line" is a popular seller East and West, and the company's business is increasing at a remarkable rate. The St. Louis manufacturers have completed their fall samples and the road men are now showing the new styles to the general merchant. A correspondent writes that the St. Louis Boot and Shoe Association have arranged to advertise products of their factories in Southern American cities by means of a lecture and the "movies," and the outfit is now action.

Selling Shoes at a Profit—Unalterable Prices a Mistake.

Not only in his community, but probably elsewhere he is known, A. H. Geuting, secretary of the National Shoe Retailers' Association, is regarded as that is known by the trade as a "good shoe man." Manufacturers of the best class in more than one part of the country confer this designation upon him from the work he has accomplished and the success he has achieved as a merchant. In addition, Mr. Geuting, as more than once mentioned in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," has means which he knows how to express clearly and forcibly when necessary. At the recent annual convention of his association in Boston he delivered an address which was divided into three classifications, namely: cost of doing business, what are legitimate profits and the fallacy of fixed prices. The first two topics are what may frankly be termed hackneyed. Not but what they are "live wires" at all times, but they have been talked over and written about and will probably always remain matters which trade associations can assign regularly for more or less intelligent treatment at their annual conventions. In other words, the arguments offered on these controversies by Mr. Geuting are neither new or original, but nevertheless they are ably handled and clearly presented.

On a proper system of costing Mr. Geuting offers a range of from 15 to 25 per cent., with a safe average of 25, depending upon the location, surroundings and the class of store and grade of customers. He claims that a great majority of dealers are "doing their business, to a large extent, on a traditional basis, on lines laid down by customs that have been outgrown." Summing up, he says the "real cost of a shoe (to a merchant) is the price charged by the manufacturer plus the cost of merchandising the shoe wherever it happen to be located; and you will never make any profit until you recognize this and mark your merchandise from that standpoint." Mr. Geuting's opinion on legitimate profits is a "net profit of 10 per cent." This means a 10 per cent. margin. On his own business he says, "if I was sure of a net 5 per cent. profit every year for the next twenty years I would be perfectly satisfied." When one must settle this question for oneself as to what is adequate. Mr. Geuting's sturdy belief in the fallacy of fixed prices is quoted in extenso, as follows:—

Now for the point of my theme, and that is the fallacy of fixed prices. On page 10 of the conference report (association) there is a heading, "The Science of Retailing vs. Fixed Prices." It is the foundation upon which the success of your business depends. It is a wrong principle of business to overcharge a customer, and it is a wrong principle not to make a profit. The science in business is in charging a correct price for your merchandise. It will obviate failures, and it will secure legitimate service and will square itself with the market con-

"This Is the Cocoa to Sell"

Tell your clerks the importance of pushing the sale of STOLLWERCK'S GOLD BRAND COCOA and see that they recommend it to your customers whenever possible. You have sufficient influence with your customers to sell nine out of ten of them any brand you choose, and when you make use of their confidence in your judgment to sell them STOLLWERCK'S GOLD BRAND COCOA you are going to please them better and increase your cocoa business faster than you can by pushing any other brand.

STOLLWERCK'S GOLD BRAND COCOA is the highest grade Dutch process cocoa on the market, and because of its international reputation for superiority will add to your standing as a high-class grocer. It has been awarded 26 Court Diplomas and 65 Medals of Supremacy in the Courts of Europe. Because it has won wherever introduced, it's the cocoa for you to win new and increased trade.

ditions and the demands of the trade at every turn.

Let us see what we mean by fixed prices. To-day every shoe in every leather, no matter what the circumstances might be in favor of one or the other, are sold usually at one price. In other words, a man figures that he must have all kinds of shoes at $3. He must have all kinds of shoes at $4, at $5, etc., and that he cannot have any shoes at $2.75 or $3.25. Now, this rigid rule interferes with scientific merchandising; for over 5 cents will make or break a shoe, and it must be thrown aside because it will not come under the fixed price rule.

I have known retailers to throw out first-class successful lines from their establishments because a legitimate 5 or 10-cent raise was asked for the shoes because they could not get any more than a certain fixed price for these same shoes; and I have known good manufacturers to ruin their product to meet these conditions with which he was confronted by one of his good customers. Think of the humiliation in a great trade—the great industry of shoes—to not be able to get an honest advance of 5 or 10 cents when the market conditions warrant it! Is there not something wrong with the mind that controls a business when shoes are deliberately gutted of their worth, or tried and true shoes thrown out because of the increasing cost of leather? Why, the small grocery dealer knows better than that. He seldom quotes eggs at the same price for two successive days.

In my own establishment I have had experience with clerks almost rising en masse protesting against the advance of a shoe on which they had built their trade at a certain price. Just stop and consider how absurd this system of retailing is; how absurd we have built it. Does the butcher ever consider that meat must be sold at the same price week in and week out, day in and day out? Is this true in any other trade but shoes?

Now let us see how much more scientific will be the system that I propose to-day, and I wish to say in recommendation of this system that I am practicing it in the face of competition of the keenest sort, and that I have no trouble whatever. I started my business new five years ago and I made up my mind that I should not be bound by any rules that interfered with the successful retailing of shoes; that when 5 cents counted in the shoe that it must be put there, and that I made my retail price bend entirely to the best manufacturing results, and this is the way I do it.

We will go back to our original illustration of a 25 per cent. store. Twenty-five per cent. plus 10 per cent. equals 35 per cent. Thirty-five per cent. on merchandise sold at $1 yields 35 cents, leaving 65 cents to be paid for the merchandise. When you sell merchandise that costs 65 cents for $1 you are making 35 per cent., which equals 54 per cent. on the cost. Therefore, you must make 54 per cent. on the cost of your merchandise. Now, let us take an article of merchandise that cost $2.75, 54 per cent. of the cost yields to $1.48½. This added to the cost of the shoe makes the shoe figure $4.23. Now, I do not advocate splitting nickels, but that shoe should be sold for $4.25. Now, suppose that a tan shoe of the same proposition would cost 10 cents more, or $2.85. On this basis, this shoe would figure $4.39. Is there any reason why that shoe should not retail at $4.40? So I might go on multiplying examples of every cost that you might figure in the house.

Take, for instance, a slipper that cost you $1. The right cost of that slipper is $1.55. Is there any reason why you should not get $1.55 for that slipper? Suppose the same slipper with a strap costs 5 cents extra. Is there any reason why you should not get $1.65, instead of forcing these shoes down from a clerk's standing point and make a strong line at $1.50 so as to clean up the market, as the old saying goes? Now, all that is required to put this in practice is to have the courage and conviction of this principle. Mark your shoes accordingly, and as sure as the year rolls around you will have a profit in your till.

Doing business on the other plan, giving away 5, 10, 15 cents here and there in order to establish uniform prices is where the ruin comes in. It is where you fail to get your profit, and it is where you fail to be able to give an honest product to your store because of a rise in price. You will be surprised how easy it is, after all, to establish it, provided you make up your mind to do it.

Let us just see how you would feel about this proposition when you put it in force, for I know the shoemen to be very conscientious. I have known shoemen to lose a night's rest because they had broken the rule of selling a $2.25 shoe for more than $3. But suppose he looks at the cost of his shoe from the standpoint illustrated, namely, that a $3 shoe really costs him $4. Do you think that you can feel in any way conscience stricken by getting a little above that, say, $4.40? Certainly not; and no customer who comes to his establishment expects him to do less, whether he gets it or not.

It was expected Mr. Geuting would break a lance with the manufacturers who maintain a system of chain stores; or who sell shoes to the dealer at so close a margin as to leave little, if any, profit when sold at retail. The charge made against certain manufacturers who advertise their product extensively is that the profit is so narrow that it disappears in the cost of doing business, and therefore the merchant pays the advertising bills indirectly. These subjects, however, he did not approach, hence there was a measure of disappointment evinced.

Dry Goods Notions Knit Wear

Brocade Effects and Velvets.

So much depends upon what the authorities decide upon for dress and other women's apparel material that wholesalers do not protest, but accept the ruling without question. In turn the retailer and general merchant, unless placing their orders direct with mill or importer, are in the same contrite spirit. All they want to know is it in vogue; and if so, if it will sell. The ultimate buyer accepting the merchant's word, providing he has taken the trouble to get "wised up" himself. Here is what is said about materials:—

With the revival of ruffled, broadly sphered skirts and loosely caparisoned blouses come revivals, also, of elegantly woven fabrics. The most interesting phases of this revival is the modernized touch given to the revivification of old-style brocades. Their patterns appear in all the beauty of bygone colorings, to which is added the inimitable artistry and subtlety of present-day designs. Superb combinations of color are done on silks and satins of much less weightier weave, but fully as elegant and aristocratic in appearance. The most notable of these newly achieved materials are those plain or two-toned damasks and satins, also charmeuse, which have their brocaded effects produced by jet or bronze or white crystal embroideries.

Velvets will also be in a most prominent style position as a fashionably chosen fabric for evening as well as street wear, while corded silks resembling the long-ago bengaline silks of lustrous appearance and individual characteristics are also winging their way toward a vogue. Moires in metal weaves are showing within the confines of the wholesale house, and it is promised we shall see a wonderful showing of these in delicate colorings as well as in combinations which shall exhibit satin stripes and brocades. Taffetas and taffeta charmeuse are also on the programme, together with a reintroduction of panne crepe, a lovely fabric, which seems to be a hybrid weave, producing neither a panne velvet nor a crepe, but a compromise which will be wonderfully successful.

With satins, lace is the more probable trimming, especially in a return to favor of the Spanish effects and the chantillys, but particularly true of this last, in black spider-web fineness, to be used for mounting over white silk, satin or creped underbodies. Lace flouncings are in high favor. For decorating frocks of white charmeuse, satin or taffetas in a multiple number of rows, which may begin demurely enough at the hip, flare at the knee and be gathered into prim, narrow outlines at the ankles, is one form of usage. The newer mode is the use of black chantilly over gowns of white, rose color or blue.

A new dress fastener, called the "Outo-syte" press stud tape, is said to be invisible for waists, dresses, children's garments, underwear, etc. It can be used on the sheerest materials.

With "Goodbye, Old Hook and Eye" as a slogan, a foreign manufacturer with American headquarters, is pushing most successfully a snap fastener, not only for "miladi's" dresses, but also for gloves and fancy buttons. No one concern in recent years has created so large a call and consumption of its products at the notion counter.

Other articles fitting in well, from a selling viewpoint at the notion counter of a general storekeeper, are what is sometimes called "unusual merchandise." These include goods not strictly pertaining to women's dress needs or conveniences, and also jewelry, watches, clocks, silverware, novelties, sheet music and souvenirs. In a large retail place stock of this kind is departmentized, but in the small town stores they find a suitable location with notions of high and low degree. They are novel, attractive, quick sellers, carrying a long profit at low cost. Stocks of this kind, varying in size to suit the merchant, are offered by specialists in the line. Every dealer is familiar with the character of the "5 and 10-cent stores," and how tremendously successful they have been. The suggestion is along the same channel, only on a smaller scale, so to speak.

Western Wholesalers Setting a Pace.

After briefly dwelling upon the enormous crops predicted for the Western country, and what it means toward increasing the purchasing power of the agricultural sections, Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their regular weekly summing up of the situation, say: "Fall business is the main topic of discussion at present in dry goods circles, and the consensus of opinion is that as retail stocks are being operated on a hand-to-mouth basis, there will be taxing demands made on wholesalers and manufacturers during the autumn season. Wash dress goods have been in good demand during the week and general orders are running about even with a year ago."

Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co., St. Louis, advise as follows: "The demand for staple cotton goods has increased during the past week, with an advance of 1/2 cent having been made on a leading line of bleached cotton. Percales also are enjoying their usual good call. Wide ribbons, both plain and fancy, are in greater favor than ever. All the indications point to an unusual demand for ribbons of all kinds this coming fall."

"Waist business is very active, particularly in Japanese silks and tinted organdies. Information obtainable from fashion centers is that all kinds of jewelry goods, such as buttons, necklaces and ornaments, will come into great favor this fall. Orders for ruffling for ladies' neckwear are received in good quantities."

"Three to 17-inch shadow and oriental laces still have first call and indications are present styles will continue throughout the summer and into the early fall. Faint echoes from fashion centers predict quite a demand for light-weight black laces this fall. In silk dress fabrics the satin finished article and pile effects will predominate. Blacks and blues will be particularly strong."

There is an authoritative turn to the above pronouncements indicative of "knowing what they are talking about."

Manufacturers Selling Retailers. Fixed Prices Questioned.

As president of the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association, Calvin M. Smyth takes up the cudgels in defense of his organization in its attitude toward the manufacturers' direct dealings with the retail merchant. He believes this species of business is unethical, but should an attempt be made to compemanufacturers to cease this practice, it would be a violation of the so-called Federal anti-trust law. On the question of fixed prices, Mr. Smyth says: "Our retail friends will need much assistance to break away from the fixed price custom, but there is such inherent merit in the abandonment of this fixed price plan that the matter of a change deserves very serious consideration."

Styles to be Snappy and Pretty.

A special bulletin, issued by the Style Committee of the National Cloak, Suit and Skirt Manufacturers' Association, dated July 11th, reiterates the recommendations of the spring convention, as follows:—

In view of many conflicting reports as to the lengths of women's suits to be worn for the coming fall and winter, the following statement is herewith given: Suit jackets will be finger tip length and longer, with set-in sleeves and sloping shoulder effects. They will be distinguished by graceful lines conforming with the new silhouette, namely, a tendency towards a normal waist line, with fullness at the sides or back of the jackets. A novelty feature will consist of cape effects. Skirts will be a very prominent feature of the fall suits. Pleated, flaring and long tunic skirts will be much in evidence. When the long tunic is employed the underskirt will continue narrow. Skirts are somewhat shorter also.

Coats in three-quarter length will predominate, many being cut shorter at the front. A decided feature will be the coat-cape, developed in a variety of novel forms. Separate capes for utility and evening wear will be desirable. A waistcoat effect will be a useful and attractive feature in the construction of capes.

Not only does the style committee reaffirm these style prognostications, but we declare emphatically that the members of this association are manufacturing and are firmly of the opinion that the suit of finger-tip length and longer, that is, from 30 to 36 inches, will be the popular suit for next fall and winter. All the late reports from the Paris Bureau of the National Cloak, Suit, Skirt and Dress Manufacturers' Association more thoroughly convince the Style Committee that the suits from 30 to 36 inches will be the stylish suits and the popular suits for next fall. Variety will be the keynote. The styles will be snappy and pretty.

Goods on Memorandum Not Endorsed.

The sending out of finished garments on memorandum has not the approval of the National Cloak, Suit and Skirt Manufacturers' Association. The Credit Group of the Silk Association of America, after passing condemnatory resolutions on the same matter, at a recent meeting, also brought it officially to the attention of the first-mentioned body, and in a letter to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," Philip Frankel, the secretary says:—

Cleveland, Ohio, July 10, 1914.

To the Editor.
Dear Sir:—On the matter of "Style Guarantee," or the sending of goods out on memorandum, our association thoroughly condemns this practice, and I know that the members of our association absolutely refuse to give such a guarantee, nor will the members of our association send out goods on memorandum on the basis that a number of New York manufacturers are doing to-day.

However, I am referring your letter to the president of our association, J. P. Hovland, who is at the head of one of the largest cloak and suit houses in the West, and I am asking him to write you a letter on the subject, as the president of this association. He is highly respected and very well thought of, and I would like very much to have him write you direct.

Very truly yours,

NATIONAL CLOAK, SUIT AND SKIRT MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION.

P. Frankel, Secretary.

Notion Jobbers Advise Retailers.

While the Jobbers' Association of Notion Buyers, at their meeting in New York Monday last, discussed matters of pertinent interest to themselves and their connections, the retail merchant was not overlooked. Howard A. Baldwin, of the Sheibley, Tyler Co., Philadelphia, in a paper on "Jobbers and Their Profits," gave this advice to retailers:

The retailers are realizing it is folly for them to load up their shelves and warerooms with goods on which they are invariably losing money by being caught with big stocks on account of unseasonable weather conditions.

I can see a big change in the conditions of the retailers in the past few seasons. I have personally heard quite a good many retailers say in the future we are not going to buy in large quantities from manufacturers and have our money tied up in stock, which puts us in such a position that we are unable to pay our bills on time and make our discounts. The money which the retailers think they save buying direct from manufacturers they lose because it costs them money to carry goods and they must also figure on a loss on account of bad sizes, which they do not and never will sell. The retailers have never taken this matter so seriously as they have since business is quiet. The retailers are looking for the jobbers to-day. I hear them say I am not going to buy in large quantities any more from manufacturers, but I am going to the jobbers and buy goods as I best need them and pay my bills so I can have a good credit.

Of course, this is the jobbing point of view, and doubtless not a few cases of this kind may be cited, but generally speaking, the general merchant in the small town communities is a pretty solid proposition financially, and is inclined to place his orders in quarters where he will obtain the best values and the most quickly moving stock. Whether he buys from the manufacturer direct or through the jobber, the merchant with a desirable account usually depends upon his own judgment. The attendance was the largest in recent years, 34 leading firms from all the jobbing centers being present.

Reports from Western sources state a few facts which the general merchant should not fail to remember when making up his next season's order for hosiery, underwear and knit goods generally. The buyers in the primary markets have been advised by influential factors not to plunge in making commitments, and an ultra conservative tendency is an order of the day that merchants in the smaller towns may study to their personal advantage and profit. Silk fabrics are being favored at the expense of cotton goods, and on this phase the appended information has a seasonable bearing:—

An analysis of the knit goods business indicates that silk hosiery is now a staple article of fashion, and that it cannot be questioned further that the consuming public are willing to pay as much as 25 cents for hosiery to get, if not silk, at least a hose of full silk appearance. This naturally has curtailed the distribution of cotton hosiery. Possibly there is no other class of merchandise that the consuming public has shown such a willingness to buy in a higher grade than is indicated by the amount of silk fiber, silk and silk plaited hosiery that is being sold.

Many of the best-informed buyers will answer the question that is puzzling many manufacturers as to why more business is not being done on cotton hosiery by stating that the widespread use of silk and artificial silk hosiery has curtailed to an enormous extent the general demand for cotton hosiery. As an illustration of this fact, one manufacturer recently received a single order for men's regular silk, fiber and plaited silk half hose which is the largest ever recorded on his books.

The popularity of fabric gloves increases every season, and evidently merits of gloves made from knitted fabrics of silk and cotton are becoming more appreciated by the buying public. These gloves are washable, and this is one of the merits which has been instrumental in increasing the sales. The pronounced trend of popular favor toward short sleeved shirt waists as a popular style has increased the sales in women's long gloves.

On sweaters of the heavier and cheaper grades, business is not satisfactory. At summer resorts and for evening wear, silk sweaters, of pure silk or artificial silk or part silk and part worsted, are very popular with the women. An imported artificial silk women's sweater is being sold extensively by high-class retail stores, and these sweaters can be had at retail from $10 to $15 for the better grade, and the cheaper grades can be had for even less.

Upon inquiry it is learned that no American manufacturers, for some reason, have attempted to make this particular class of sweater. Some orders are being placed by the jobbers for women's coat sweaters in fancy stitches. It is believed by some of the buyers that the wearing of fancy stitch sweaters by women is increasing in popularity, not only because of the general sightliness of the garment, but because of its advantages for use for protection when the cool evenings require an extra garment.

The road work of the salesmen in the Middle West on underwear for spring delivery has not resulted in satisfactory booking of business. In reference to the closed crotch situation in underwear, which has been a question of so much prominence among manufacturers and merchants, it is hard to get a unanimous expression of opinion from buyers as to the standing of this class of garment. Some buyers state that the closed crotch is selling best, while others imply that it is just a fad which will not last long.

In women's underwear, mesh goods seem to be proving good sellers among the jobbers and retailers in the Middle West; also in silk and other mixed knit underwear the demand is gratifying, but at the same time no particularly large business is being done in this class of merchandise. As a whole, in the Middle West the knit underwear business is unsatisfactory; but because of the prospects for more normal business conditions throughout the country, trade is optimistic as to the future.

This is a comprehensive review of the status and selling possibilities of merchandise in these four important classes that will bear study by the merchant in view of prevailing conditions.

Dry Goods Names Puzzlers.

"Shall I pronounce it rateen, Mr. Blank, or rat-i-nay," a bewildered clerk, perhaps, asks the head of the store, and thereat a conference is necessary between the proprietor and one of his distinguished buyers who has been abroad and also to New York.

"What is this new woolen cloth, gabardine," asks another, "that I have read is the real thing in Paris and Chicago?"

"Please, Mr. Blank," chirps another, "don't you think we had better order some of that new stove polish ribbon for our millinery department? You know it is the last word in the summer ribbons; I know, because Mrs. Jones was in the store to-day asking for it, and she said her sister wrote her that every one on Fifth avenue was wearing it. There is a French name to it, but she forgot what it was."

And "What does Martine mean?" comes from another member of the staff.

"Moires are scarce, scarcer than taf-fetas," is the contribution of the head of the silk department.

"Enough of this Poret, moire, Martine, gabardine business," finally exclaims the distracted proprietor. "You will submit your questions in writing and Miss Louise, here," turning to the head of the cloak and suit department, "will answer them."

Overloading of Department Stores.

Following the recent failure of large enterprises in Boston, New York and Chicago, the overloading of department stores is plain to merchants, and now a period of reconstructing business methods among large retailers has begun. In not a few instances these institutions have become top-heavy, and with the increased advantage in the way of better and larger assortment of goods offered by the general merchant outside of the larger cities, there is more of a disposition on the part of the public to buy at home. The local merchant can assist the growth of this spirit by judicious buying of up-to-date goods, notions and novelties, combined with adequate store display and commensurate publicity.

Foreign Serges Inferior to Domestic.

A crowd of buyers and retail merchants were in the Eastern primary markets during the past week looking over the situation and placing orders. Many lines of dry goods, dress materials, silks, satins, hosiery, underwear, knit goods, novelties, etc., were opened for the fall trade and the commitments for early delivery augur but one condition, and that prosperous for the coming season. Several associations, in the deliberations and actions of which the small town merchant is keenly interested, held their summer sessions. In these meetings the minor retailer or country dry goods dealer, and his present and future status, were freely discussed in connection with the distribution of merchandise. New channels of distribution were admitted as gradually being developed, along advantageous lines to the merchant, and just what relation the wholesaler will bear to these developments only time will determine. The merchant, however, was given a lot of advice, with a favorable leaning toward the jobber when it comes to placing orders.

It also came out that the dress fabric buyers, in talking over the tariff, were of the opinion that while prices on some foreign lines, such as serges, were cheaper than the domestic product, the quality was inferior and thus offset the other advantages. They believed that for the American trade American goods were more satisfactory. In confirmation of this, and from another source, it is learned that the cheaper grade of foreign serges are of such inferior construction it is plain they were made to sell at a price. Recent experiences with some of these goods have proved costly to the purchasers. A large percentage of glue was found in many of the serges, one lot which an expert described as being made of "gum and briar bushes." This is, perhaps, an exaggeration, nevertheless their appearance as to finish was far from attractive.

On the lower price kinds of domestic dress goods for spring delivery, 1915, few prices were quoted, as orders are being held back. Those willing to buy were accommodated with last season's prices. The minor merchant, who operates on a fair basis, is not purchasing so far ahead and will doubtless hold off until the prices are formally announced, which will occur this week.

Small Town Merchants at Claflin Sale.

With characteristic impatience the American merchant and his colleagues in the commercial vineyard would have the Claflin debris cleaned up quickly and the decks cleared for future action. At the peremptory sale last Monday in New York of the H. B. Claflin Co. merchandise stock, exempting blankets, etc., and during the week, the buying by jobbers and retailers was steady and satisfactory. Among the merchants present, a great majority of the 700 or 800 people in attendance, a very large number were from the small towns, much to the surprise of everyone. To be sure, the principal jobbing houses were represented and they bought freely. The merchants from the small communities came prepared in good credit to get everything they bought. The notion stocks offered many rare opportunities to this class of dealers, who bought generously, making the most of their opportunity.

With exceptions of large lots, the terms of sale were regular, either net 10 days, or 2 per cent. 10 days, 60 extra. In other words, it was neither a slaughter, fire or false bargain sale. The usual crowd of "sharks" was on hand, but they were not very successful in making "scoops." Most of the buyers, including all of the general storekeepers, bought for immediate sale and shipment. Wash goods, print and white goods stocks attracted primary attention, and later laces, knit goods and dress materials followed. Oriental rugs were offered at exceedingly low prices, and those skilled in the lines bought liberally. Some ratine fancies in wash fabrics that sold regularly as high as 75 cents a yard were disposed of at 20 cents. Printed lawns selling at 7½ cents a yard went at 5. No printed plisses were offered at cut prices, but everyone was looking for them. In prints and gingham some well-known lines were quickly sold at 15 off regular figures. Laces that sold recently at 11½ cents sold for 7½. Some embroidered goods that were priced at 52½ cents, sold for 40; and hosiery held at $4.25 a dozen, went for $3.50. Small buyers found prices named on many lines, but if they were prepared to handle quantities they were given an opportunity to make bids for lots. These are only a few instances cited, but it is safe to say that within the next fortnight there will be "Claflin Sacrifice Sales" in bunches of stores throughout the country. A plan in which a legion of "stickers" will be swept out with the supposititious stock.

Fixed Prices on Underwear at Retail Not Approved by Some. Tariff Life Saver for Others.

Fixed prices in knit goods, especially underwear, is a disturbing factor to manufacturers, jobbers and merchants, according to statements made at the meeting of the Jobbers' Association of Knit Goods Buyers in New York last week. It was agreed that its "limitations were detrimental in character and interfered with the progress" of the trio of trade elements aforesaid. A committee was appointed to investigate the situation and make practical suggestions for improvement.

At the same convention one of the invited orators contended that after all was said, fixed prices on underwear was a blessing in disguise when the present tariff went into effect. Among other things he said: "The retailer has put a Chinese wall around the whole business. He has fixed certain prices on underwear called 'popular' prices in the trade, but inexpressibly unpopular with the manufacturer, and refused to sell at any other price. Fully three-quarters of this country is retailed at $1 a suit, most of the rest at 50 cents and comparatively little at higher prices. So all our manufacturing ability and all the selling competition have been focused on two prices."

People, whether manufacturers or jobbers, who seriously entertain such opinions, are apt to overlook how such prices were established and maintained and the reason therefor. Comparatively a small group of underwear manufacturers have adopted progressive methods in creating consumer demand, and incidentally retail selling co-operation. Who educated the public to the appreciation of athletic underwear or improved light weights in every form and shape; or the comfort of the union suit and more suitable designs in two-piece garments? Not the manufacturers or jobbers who are now railing against fixed prices. It was essential in planning a campaign for the introduction and sale of these up-to-date lines to also name a price—varying according to quality of material, of course—as a climax or peak of the educational solicitations. It has taken some years for the buying public to be made thoroughly familiar with garment and price, and when both become ingrained the entire character of the market had changed. Merchants were not slow in stocking underwear the public asked for and wanted; hence these tears!

Manufacturers who have "dug up" their own market—not by price alone, believe me, as "The Stroller" would say—and now have a trade no factor can destroy, and only slightly disturb by unfair methods, or other reprehensible methods, are not wailing about fixed prices as detrimental or harmful in any way. Their position is impregnable. Manufacturers who have looked askance on this new and very much approved way of merchandising, and are too far in the rear of the procession to catch up unless by equally energetic means, now argue the trade is demoralized. Not by even a little bit. The modern merchant has no sympathy with such complaints; he is on the firing line with the right goods at the right prices and he cordially invites the buying public to come in and look him over.

The speaker referred to, in concluding his remarks on fixed prices, then used this remarkable illustration:—

When the tariff was cut in half on his product his previous troubles proved to be a blessing in disguise; for under the retailers fixed prices he (the manufacturer) had made himself too strong for any foreign competition, and his business, like the house in the Bible, stood through the storm and fell not, for it was founded on the rocks of hard competition and fair trading. Our fixed retail prices have served this one good purpose. I do not see who is going to change them or how it is to be done. I am not arguing right or wrong, but trying to state the facts.

As this is the frank opinion of one of the most highly esteemed manufacturers and wholesalers in New York, where does that committee get off?

Sweaters Advanced. Smart New Fabrics.

In the face of dull buying, an advance in sweater coats was ordered recently—from 5 to 10 per cent. This is said to be occasioned by the increased cost of yarns and other manufacturing expenses. It is advised that the new vests, with brushed up surface, are not the success anticipated; that they will not give permanent satisfaction. The fiber silk sweaters are selling all right in the big stores, but the inland merchant is not so enthusiastic.

One of the smartest of the new fabrics of a novelty character is called "crackle." It is an evolution from the ratine cloth, soft woven and finished. It is shown in stripes and checks. Another new cloth is "Niblick." It suggests the gold grounds, the patterns being in neat checks and stripes, the weave resembling poplin.

Lines in black and white effects are among the smartest things shown at a popular price. All widths of stripes in sheer weaves, with corded suggestions that make the black stand out more prominently. They are counted upon to sell big, and it is expected they may be scarce in the better qualities. In design, finish, packaging and general production, these goods are distinctly suited to American tastes. They are, besides, color fast, which means they are made to wear. It is predicted sheer fine cloths are coming into vogue very fast; and there is now developing a call for the very best grades of the fine fancies to be used for next spring.

Warm weather fabrics of cotton and mohair are highly regarded for the next spring season. The American Woolen Co. however, opened up an entirely new line last week that contains no mohair, but is made on cotton warps and filled with worsted, which is said to be a vast improvement. It is the first time the company has offered men's wear materials of this sort. The majority of the goods are dull finish; and some, in which lustre wools are used, have the appearance of mohair goods. They come in various colors, greys predominating. These fabrics are of light construction and porous weaves and sell at low prices.

Have You Got Any Goods You Don't Want?

Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

TELEPHONE 64

There is something in this card which I consider a very bad advertising waste, and I kick against it every chance I get. It is the fact that "Randolph Gage, Fancy Grocer," appears twice. There is no earthly need of that. It simply eats up space and makes the advertisement no stronger. In fact, it makes it weaker, because it takes up room that real advertising could have been put into. Incidentally, it was some proofreader who read the proof of this card. He couldn't even see that the very first word, "Randolph," was spelt "Randolph." Mr.

Gage would have been perfectly justified in refusing to accept these cards, for sending them out, I have no doubt, subjected him to more or less ridicule. Can't you hear people saying that he "can't spell his own name"? People never blame a thing like that on the printer; they blame it on the advertiser himself.

This advertisement ought to have gotten business, because the prices are low. The special wholesale idea is a good scheme—it persuades people to buy larger quantities than they ordinarily buy, and therefore is the means of moving a considerable block of goods. It also has a tendency to stop people from taking up co-operative buying schemes. When they get a dozen cans of baked beans for 90 cents, they would soon find, if they looked into the matter, that there won't much more be gotten through co-operative buying. Outside of everything else and for that reason alone, I should use the special wholesale idea, if I were a retail advertiser.

I have already spoken somewhat of the type display on this card. I should have changed it about. I should not have put the name at the top, but would have used a head like "Summer Grocery Reduction," or "Groceries Retailed at Wholesale Prices," or something like that. The name should have gone at the bottom, where it also appears.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

Many Important Bills of Trade Interest Now Pending in Congress.

Measure Requiring Manufacturer's Name on Label, Requiring Date of Packing, Regarding Cold Storage, Requiring Ingredients to be Stated, and Eight Amendments to National Food Law Now in Various Committees Awaiting Action.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C., July 16, 1914.

The Sixty-third Congress has been in almost continuous session since March, 1913. The bills introduced at the first session (extra session, 1913) of the Sixty-third Congress kept their places at the regular or second session which convened in December, 1913, without being reintroduced. More than 22,000 bills have been introduced in the present Congress, 10,000 of which had been introduced at the time of our last annual report.

Among the more important bills of trade interest now pending are the following:—

Eleven bills that require the name and address of the manufacturer on the label. Some of the bills apply to all commodities, while others apply to food products or some other commodity only.

Six bills require the date of packing on the label. Three of the bills relate to cold storage articles, two to canned goods generally and one to canned meats and meat products.

Seven bills require the ingredients to be placed on the label, but these bills generally relate to commodities other than food products. It is possible, however, that any one of them may, at any time, be so amended as to apply to food products or to all commodities.

Five bills relate to cold storage.

Eight bills seek to amend the Food and Drugs Act of 1906. Some of the proposed amendments are of such serious nature that if enacted would greatly cripple the national food law, while others are of little importance in their present form.

Two Senate bills relating to bills of lading, one of which is the so-called uniform bills of lading law that has been enacted in several of the states have passed the Senate. Many other bills on this subject have been introduced but have thus far received but little advancement.

A great volume of anti-trust bills of all sorts are now pending.

A bill to establish a standard barrel for fruits, vegetables and other dry commodities has passed the Senate and is now pending in the House.

In addition to the above there is a considerable number of other bills affecting the interests of the trade that are also receiving the constant attention of your committee. Among these are excellent bills to prevent fraudulent advertising, and to secure one cent letter postage. HOLT.

Government Finds Orange Frauds and Warns Shippers Against Them.

Fruit Sold as Valencias Was Not Valencias. Frauds Perpetrated by Shipping Unlabeled Boxes.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

July 16, 1914.

The Department of Agriculture has discovered that certain oranges are being shipped under false descriptions in the bills of lading or invoices as to their variety. The Department has examined some of these shipments and has found that while these oranges are being sold to consignees as being a better variety than they are, the actual boxes of oranges are either not labeled at all or are not labeled in accordance with the variety mentioned in the records of sale. Some of these oranges are represented for example, as being Valencia, and examination shows them to be another variety.

The matter is being carefully investigated with a view to determining the rights of the Department under the Food and Drugs Act to take action against such shipments. In the meantime, jobbers and others are advised to examine oranges packed in boxes either unlabeled or without any distinctive varietal designation, in order to satisfy themselves whether these oranges are represented by the producer or shipper.

Similarly, retail purchasers who are in the habit of buying oranges according to variety should assure themselves that the oranges are represented by the dealer. HOLT.

What This New Plan Means to You

The core of our plan for our Standardized Coffee Blends is that we keep our blends absolutely and positively uniform from one year's end to another.

How? Simply by an unprecedented amount of labor and care. Grades must match even if we have to go through the market with a fine tooth comb. But think of the enormous advantage of this, both to us and to you. We can sell you, and you can sell your customers, the same coffee-to-morrow and forever. Not "almost" the same, or "about" the same, but the same. Nothing so binds a customer to you as uniformity. We are finding that out, through these Standardized Blends, and so will you if you will adopt them.

CCLXVIII.—Some Lessons From a Business Plan That Failed.

Business men who want to accomplish certain results sometimes go about it in very ingenious and plausible ways, only to find, when the plan has to stand a test, that in spite of the fact that it looked good, it was really nothing but a waste of time.

Such was the ending of a plan tried by a certain Philadelphia business man not long ago. What happened to it in Pennsylvania would have happened to it in any other State, therefore I have no hesitancy in citing it or as a warning or suggestion to be published in most all the States in the Union.

This man was the owner of a business, in the building of which he had been materially aided by two old and valued employees. These employees got it into their heads that they were not getting enough out of the enterprise and that they ought to have an interest. The owner, when they put their views before him, devised this scheme, the object of which was to give them an interest and at the same time not give them an interest. It sounded all right and completely quieted the two employees.

The substance of the plan was that no present interest should be given the two employees, but an agreement should be entered into by them and the owner, under which the entire business should automatically pass to the two employees at the instant before the owner's death, subject, however, to the condition that a certain part of the income should be paid the owner's widow as long as she lived.

The owner's idea was that this would avoid all the trouble of filing a will, having an executor or administrator appointed, and taking a year to settle up the business. Also that it would preserve the business intact for the two employees and the wife, even though the balance of the estate, which was to be administered in the usual way, was not sufficient to pay the debts.

It was a beautiful scheme, but it completely forgot some fundamental principles of law which govern such transactions. First: That a man may not in such a way as this put his property beyond the reach of his creditors; and, second, that a transfer of property—which the owner does not part with when he makes the supposed transfer, and which transfer is not to take place until after his death, is not an agreement at all, but a testamentary disposition of the property. That is to say, it is practically a will, and must be filed and an administrator or executor appointed to administer it; just as if it had purported to be a will.

Of course, either of these legal principles completely defeated the intent of the owner of the business I am referring to. He died. The two employees stepped in and took possession of the business under the agreement, including $1,500 cash in the bank. The widow, who by the way, had signed the agreement and was not in position to object, did nothing, but the creditors did. They dug around and found that outside of the business there was not sufficient assets to pay the debts, and they at once attacked the agreement and what had been done under it. The result was a foregone conclusion. The agreement was held to be testamentary, that is, in the nature of a will, because it provided for the disposition of property—which meanwhile had not changed hands—after the owner's death. It was further held that even if the agreement was not testamentary, it would not be good as to creditors. Therefore the business had to be turned back into the estate, and the two employees were practically where they were in the beginning. The former owner of the business, if he knew what was transpiring, probably turned in his grave.

How could this plan have been carried out successfully? Not in any way which did not include the actual transfer of the business. Under the law no man may transfer a business to others and keep it himself, nor can he keep it himself and at the same time transfer it to others. His attempted transfer, if he still holds on to the business, will be held to be no transfer at all.

This plan could have been consummated in two ways: 1. A little company could have been incorporated, and the business transferred to it in exchange for its capital stock. The stock could then have been distributed among the owner and his two employees, but the owner could have held the employees' shares as trustees until his death, when the trust could have been made to terminate. If that had been done the employees would have been taken care of during their lives, and at the owner's death the trust would have been dissolved and they would have come into their stock, rid of all trouble.

Of course, the corporation would have had to assume the debts of the business, or the transfer would have been as illegal as that which fell to pieces.

The second way would have been to form a partnership between the owner and his two employees, to which partnership the business would have been transferred, the two employees to draw no profits until the former owner's death. In this case, too, the debts would have gone to the partnership with the rest of the business.

Here is a useful fundamental principle to remember: that no transfer of a business or of personal property of any kind—except where the transfer has to be recorded and is therefore notice to the public—is good as to creditors unless the property actually changes hands. A sells to B and continues to hold the property sold, A's creditors come on the property just the same as they ever could.

Question: * * *, ———, I would like to have your advice on the following: On June 18th I bought of Elvidge & Palmer, 1328 Broadway, New York, through their agent, an assortment of emeryware. This assortment was to be an exceptionally wonderful assortment regarding the sizes of the different articles. The agent showed me a large photograph of the supposed assortment. He also showed me a large pan which he explained was one of the small pieces. When the assortment came, on the next inst., and was opened up, it proved to be an entirely different lot of goods; in fact, they were all small pieces, and at the outside not worth over 36 cents per dozen. I wrote them a letter refusing the shipment. I inclose the copy of same, and their reply, and a letter from the Manufacturers' Mercantile Agency. Can they compel me to keep the goods? When I signed that order I thought I was signing an order for what I saw, not for something else. The agent claimed I would get exactly what I saw. I had witnesses to the whole transaction. Who is this Manufacturers' Mercantile Agency? What action have they got against me? How have I imposed upon E. & P.? They talk it is an imposition for me to expect to receive what I buy. I am perfectly willing to take a thing I ever buy, but I certainly do not want to have the wool pulled over me. Please advise me what to do. If you publish this letter please withhold my name.

Answer.—Messrs. Elvidge & Palmer are mentioned in the rating books of the mercantile agencies and merchandise brokers, but have no rating.

With this came a batch of letters, including one from Elvidge & Palmer, in which they say: "You were shown a photograph of the very assortment shipped, which photograph had a measuring scale at the foot of same, so that you were in position to know exactly the size of every piece as shipped." There was also a letter from a concern calling itself "The Manufacturers' Mercantile Agency," that I had never heard of. The address is 10 W. 35th street, New York. The letter is the usual collection agency letter, and claims to have been formed "for the protection of manufacturers and jobbers throughout the country."

Your position depends upon whether Elvidge & Palmer have fully fulfilled their contract. If they submitted to you a photograph of the assortment, and with the measurements of each piece, and if the pieces delivered to you comply with those measurements, then, in my judgment, they have complied with their contract, and the fact that their salesman may have misrepresented verbally makes no difference, because the law would say that you were given the best means of knowing what you were going to get, and if you took the salesman's word rather than the printed word, no liability attaches to Elvidge & Palmer.

On the other hand, if Elvidge & Palmer have not complied with their contract; if you were not furnished in any clear way with specifications of what you were getting, and if, in addition to this, the salesman misrepresented, then you have a legal right to refuse to accept delivery, and to decline to pay the bill on the ground that Elvidge & Palmer have not filled your order, but have sold you something quite different from what you bought.

As to the letter from the Manufacturers' Mercantile Agency, I would pay no attention to that. It seems to be a mere collection agency, used by E. & P. as a possible means of hastening the settlement of their controversy with you. It may be a part of a deliberate fraud, or it may not be; this depends upon the facts of the case.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Used in Dozens of Dishes

Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk Has a Big Sale for Cooking Purposes

BORDEN'S EVAPORATED MILK is not only used for tea, coffee and cereals at the table, but many delicious dishes can be made from it. It is better than raw milk for many dishes, because it is so rich and creamy. Encourage your customers to bake cakes, cookies, doughnuts, to make soups, pies and croquettes with BORDEN'S EVAPORATED MILK. They will be pleased with its flavor and quality and will become steady purchasers, thus increasing your sales. All your customers buy milk and YOU ought to sell it to them; you can if you try. BORDEN'S EVAPORATED MILK is made by the most modern process—only the water is taken out of the milk and absolutely nothing is put into it. Our constant advertising and established reputation makes BORDEN'S EVAPORATED MILK easy to sell.

Everybody Can Make Money Out of Advertising.

Did you see that letter in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" the other week from a fellow that said he never advertised? What d'ye know about that? Think he was right? I don't think so, though he ain't asked me to butt in with my opinion. You fellows may have noticed that I don't wait to be asked to tell what I think about things. Know why? Better be honest: it's because if I did I'd never get any chance to open up, and just think of all these great opinions being bottled up.

Nope, I don't think he was right. That fellow and every other fellow that's in business can make good money out of advertising—if he knows how.

D'ye know, if I hadn't such a good job selling goods I'd start a scheme to-morrow to go round and tell fellows that don't do any advertising now because they don't know how, how they ought to do it. Do I know enough about advertising to do that? Sure I don't, but that ain't got anything to do with it. Nobody knows anything about advertising, so I know as much as anybody.

I'll bet I'd make $10,000 a year, after I got the thing going. Of course it would be some sweat getting it going. A lot of fellows would want to boot me out because I was telling 'em I knew more about their business than they did.

Seems to me when somebody tries to tell you something, that's the wrong way to look at it. I own up right now that there's probably somebody that knows how to run my job better than I do, and that if my boss could pick him out I'd be fired. Now what's it up to me to do? Pray that my boss won't find him? Not on your life—it's to work and sweat so there won't be anybody can run it better than I can. Then I can tell everybody to go hang.

But to get back to advertising. Anybody can write ads that will make people sit up and take notice. He don't have to have a college education—horse sense is all he wants. Listen here. Take the fellow that wrote the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" that he didn't advertise because he didn't know how. Suppose he came out in his little local sheet some week with an ad. that started like this:

Go to H—I, Mother!

What would you think of a man that said this to his mother? Wouldn't he be terrible? Yet if a man could ever have good cause to say this to his mother, it would be if she refused to buy some of the tremendous bargains we are offering for the week of July 13th—18th, some of which are as follows:—

Am I right, fellow patriots of the Twenty-fifth Ward, when I say that everybody in the burg would see that ad.? Why it's dollars to doughnuts! And getting people to see it is the big thing, ain't it? Sure!

Or take this one, which I also write free of charge:—

Pastor Jones Is a Liar!

If he says anybody in Smithville sells goods cheaper than we do. We have not heard that Pastor Jones says so, and we don't believe he would, because he knows better, but if he did say so, that would be our opinion of him. Read the following offerings for the week of July 13th—18th:—

You could use the name of any of the local preachers in this ad.—it don't make any difference which. I can see how anybody could make the hottest kind of a hit working in well-known people's names like that. Women's names, too—I'd pick women with husbands not over 5 feet 4 and that wear a 13½ collar. Take some woman that's well-known in the place and hit her off like this:—

Will Mrs. Robert Jackson Ever Have Twins Again?

It's anybody's guess—her's too. That is one of the things that nobody can tell. But it is no guess that a dollar will buy more solid value at our store than anywhere else in the county. For example, read the following magnificent offerings for the week of July 13th—18th:—

Probably everybody in the place would be laughing and going on about this in one hour after it come out. That's all advertising, ain't it? I don't know whether Mrs. Jackson would be laughing with 'em or not, and I don't give a ding. I ain't got anything to do with that.

Now here's a mighty important point that you want to keep in mind when you use this ad.: you want to pick out a woman that has never had twins. Get that? There's more good advertising for you in using that word "again" than there is in anything else in the whole ad. Don't forget it now, and then kick at me because it didn't pay like you thought it ought to.

If I was to work this scheme that would be the way I would work it. I'd go into a place, say, to-day, and I'd get the names of three or four well-known people and work 'em in to some mighty nifty ads. like that. Then I'd collect for 'em and take the next train for my next place, say, in Australia somewhere. Would it work? You can bet your neck it would work!

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The hot weather is interfering with the holding of association meetings, but interest in organization work is being splendidly maintained.

Quite a number of the associations are forming Philadelphia Clubs to attend the State convention. Some associations promise visitors.

Without doubt the convention will be the "big" event of the year in association circles. The attendance, without doubt, will exceed that of any other convention ever held. The programme will be of unusual interest. The entertainment features will be splendid. The influence of this convention will be felt for years and should result in a big forward movement.

R. C. Weller has been elected secretary of the newly organized Board of Commerce of Erie, Pa.

Quite a number of the associations in the State refuse to permit their members to advertise in programmes, church papers or buy entertainment tickets without the association first giving its approval.

The organizer spent Wednesday July 15th, with the newly formed Birdsboro Association, assisting in the development of this active organization.

Home buying is an important subject for the consideration of local associations of business men. How to influence home people to buy at home and how to make stores of the home town worthy of the buying support of the people.

Quite a number of new associations will affiliate with the State Association before the date of the convention.

Danish Butter Now a Factor in American Market.

Tariff Reduction From Six to Two and a Half Cents Allows Large Quantities to Enter the United States and Stimulates Competition With American Butter.

While there has for some years past been limited quantities of European butter imported to this country, it was necessarily of low grade stock, or if extras or first grade, prohibitive price had to be asked in order to cover cost and duty. But with the lowering of the tariff from 6 to 2½ cents, things have changed materially, and the fine make from Denmark—Europe's greatest dairy country—can be imported and sold on a par with the best grades of domestic stock, and at about the same price.

important a factor has the European butter become that two Danes, namely, Oswald A. Olsen and Har- l Goertz, have emigrated to the States for the express purpose of looking after the butter imported from Denmark, which is handled from New York City. Every week hundreds of casks of 112 pounds each of Danish butter enters New York harbor. This is all pasturized and government inspected before it is allowed to leave the respective creameries.

Moisture is a very important factor with Danish butter and great care is placed on it. Danish butter contains only 9 to 13 per cent. of moisture, while some domestic makes contain 14 to 15 per cent.—the latter being the highest percentage allowed—and when stock lies in a creamery with excess moisture, it has to be renovated, which causes serious loss through shrinkage and deterioration. Therefore the Danish butter is of firm body and the color uniform.

England draws heavily on Denmark for butter, preferring it to her own make and that of Ireland. The most noteworthy feature of Denmark's make is perhaps that there is no cold storage stock over there, the fresh make being large enough at all times of the year to supply the home country and furnish large blocks of stock for England, and now for the United States also. The price of butter in Europe is always somewhat cheaper, so that with the small duty of 2½ cents added to get it here, it is not necessary to get a higher price, wholesale or retail, than the domestic stock sells for.

From New Zealand a great many tons of butter has found its way to this country via the Pacific coast, and statistics just compiled by the California government show that the price to consumers has been reduced a couple of cents through the assistance of the New Zealand shipments. Considerable butter is also imported from Siam and Holland, but up to this time the offering has been too irregular in quality to get much attention.

Don't Waste Time Putting Sugar in Bags

It's a foolish waste of time for a grocer to buy sugar in a barrel, open the barrel, scoop out the sugar, weigh it (giving a little overweight every now and then), fold the bags, tie the bags, pay for the bags and the twine, when he can buy a CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR, slit it open in five seconds with a pocketknife, lift out the CARTONS and sell them! That's the beauty of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR—there's nothing to do but SELL it; no work, no bother, no loss of time, no loss from overweight, no expense for bags or twine.

Franklin Carton Sugar Will Please Your Customers

Women appreciate the clean, white purity of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR. AS SOON AS THEY SEE IT! They KNOW it's better sugar than they can buy any other way. They like the CARTON because it doesn't burst, fall over, spill or tear. They like it because they WANT CLEAN sugar. Once you start your customers buying FRANKLIN SUGAR in CARTONS, they'll always want to buy it and you'll want to sell it to them. FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is the right proposition for both the grocer and his customers.

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"Try FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR this time. It's cleaner and better than the sugar we have to buy in a barrel, and the sanitary CARTON keeps it clean and dry, and won't burst or tear like a bag."

Vegetable Trim.

This neat arrangement of choice fresh vegetables is certainly attractive. To arrange this display: First cover the bottom of the window with a nice shade of green crepe paper. In the center, in front, place a long, neat sign card, with lettering as in illustration. Back of it, on a linen napkin, place a china soup tureen. Make two pyramids of wood and arrange vegetables on it in the following manner: In the center, in front, place a head of choice cabbage, then a row of turnips, carrots, tomatoes, parsnips, onions and fresh string beans and peas; on the top place an ear of corn. At each corner place a stalk of celery. Finish with twisted strips of the green crepe paper for a background, as in illustration.

Watermelon Display.

This novel and attractive display will help you sell melons. After you have received a large fresh supply of them and can afford to sell them at a very low figure, use this trim to advertise. To arrange: First cut out patterns of the tiny arms and legs of paper, cut them to bend at the knee. Now get some green glazed muslin, cut out four little legs, sew them together, turn inside out and stuff with cotton. Now cut the arms in the same way, having them bend at the elbow; sew and stuff in the same manner as the legs. This display starts to arrange the window. First cover the bottom with white crepe paper. Cut the two melons, one in halves and the other in quarters, and place them in the front of the window. Cover two Jell-O or baking powder boxes with the white crepe paper and place one at each side of the window, at the rear. Tack a pair of legs on each box, the ends of the legs coming about in center of the box. Then place a long melon on them. Paint large eyes, a little nose and a mouth that droops at the corners with a little white paper and finish with a white crepe paper bow tie. Now pin on the arms; use some wire in each arm to support it. Suspend a sign in the center. Use white paper instead of pasteboard, as it is much lighter in weight and won't bend down the little arms. Use a loop of cord over the hands to hold in place. On the other hands place a little card, with the word "Sold" on it. Across the rear, at the bottom, place a width or two of the white crepe paper, and finish at the top with twisted strips of the same.

Kellogg Company Practically Tells Local Jobbers They Must Buy 6,000 Cases of Corn Flakes in July and August or They Will Sell the Chain Stores Again

Kellogg Company Cut Off Chain Stores Several Years Ago to Please Jobbers. Now Asks Jobbers to Make Up the Lost Trade. Write Every Wholesaler a Vigorous Letter on Subject, Enclosing Interesting Facts on Philadelphia Chain Store Systems.

During the last few days the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes Co. has placed in the hands of every wholesale grocer in Philadelphia a communication couched in very vigorous language in which it is inferentially stated that if the jobbers do not order 6,000 cases of Kellogg's during July and August, the Kellogg Co. will start in to sell the Philadelphia chain stores again. These stores were all cut out several years ago in order to please and benefit, as it was thought, the jobber.

The Kellogg letter to the wholesalers is as follows:—

Battle Creek, Mich., July 8, 1914.

Gentlemen:—Subject: "Shall We Sell the Chain Stores?"

We want you, as one of our distributors, to help us decide the question at the head of this letter—the most important question relating to our policy of selling that we have ever faced.

Any jobber is blind who shuts his eyes to the increasing menace of the "chains"—a menace to your business far more than ours.

Think a moment. What has become of the old corner tobacconist? Answer: United Cigar Stores. What has become of the old "home cooking" restaurants in so many cities? Answer: Childs, $12,000,000 (backed by Standard Oil) and Thompson, $6,000,000—to say nothing of several others. Big business (United Drug Co. and Riger-Hegemann) already dominates New York, Boston and Chicago.

And every chain store in these lines means just that much less business done by a jobber.

Big business is now buying grocery stores.

And it is out after the quality business, with quality stores, and every one of which, when established, takes a good paying customer off of some jobber's books.

It is getting the metropolitan markets first because they are the hardest to get. It knows it can get the small town business afterward any time. See how the 10-cent stores thrive in small towns everywhere. And think of the wonderful Woolworth Building in New York, which they have built.

Read about the situation in Philadelphia in the attached article.

What would you do in Philadelphia in our case? Every other breakfast food manufacturer either sells direct to the Philadelphia chains or through a "friendly jobber," who passes along the discount. Once we enjoyed 90 per cent. of the corn flake business in Philadelphia. Immediately upon adopting the Square Deal Policy we sacrificed $150,000 in actual profits to our competitors, who have been perfectly willing to sell the chain stores direct at jobbers' prices.

The Philadelphia jobbers frankly admit that they cannot sell the chain stores for us. Some have even advised us to sell them direct.

What would you do in this case?

We don't seem to be getting any different support—or any more of it from the jobbers as a whole than that given our competitors who sell chain and department stores direct.

But shouldn't we.

For this is the jobbers' fight, remember—not the manufacturers'—certainly not any one manufacturer's. We could sell these 1,262 Philadelphia chain stores direct—as our competitors do without losing a dollar's worth of trade and make the money we are now losing.

It's fine to be high-minded—but it's getting mighty lonesome.

To put it to you bluntly: If we continue to refuse this business and lose this money, will you support us to the extent of ordering at least 6,000 cases of Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes during the months of July and August?

Last year in these two months you sold ———.

This is the sort of support that will mean far more to us than mere words, and it is support that you cannot lose on, because the Waxtite package keeps the goods fresh until sold.

A word for two to your salesmen every Saturday will easily sell the few extra cases you order—and that will mean profit for both of us.

If you and the other jobbers will give us this sort of support we will feel that you are still with us in the lone stand that we are making in your behalf.

If you will not, can you see anything else for us to do than to fall in line and join the procession?

This letter calls for an answer and a stamped envelope is inclosed for the purpose. If you write us as fully and frankly as we have written you, it will be appreciated. But if you are busy, you need only write "Yes" at the bottom of this letter and sign your name, and that will be as good an answer as we will want.

Yours very truly,
KELLOGG TOASTED CORN FLAKES CO.

PHILADELPHIA—THE CITY OF CHAIN STORES.

It was here that the chain store first came into existence. Like many other great enterprises, they started in a small way, added to their number rapidly and grew financially until now they dominate the retail grocery business in South-eastern Pennsylvania and South Jersey.

It is conceded that they do about 70 per cent. of the retail grocery business in the city of Philadelphia.

They all get out a weekly newspaper with a "patent inside," the back page being taken up with their advertisement. These papers are distributed every Wednesday or Thursday evening to the homes in the neighborhood where their stores are located, which means that practically every home in Philadelphia and suburban towns regularly receives one or two chain store papers.

With the exception of one chain, they use trading stamps to get the consumer, and each week in the advertisements they offer an unusual number of stamps on various items. At times they will take some staple article, like sugar, eggs, brooms, or hams, and sell at below jobbing cost.

They operate in all sections of Philadelphia. One can see their stores in the slums, the ghetto, the negro districts, as well as in the most exclusive neighborhoods.

Below are the names and numbers of stores operated by each "chain":

|---------------------------|-----|
| Acme Tea Co. | 300 |
| Robinson & Crawford | 152 |
| Wm. Butler Co. | 125 |
| The Bell Co. | 140 |
| Geo. M. Dunlap Co. | 125 |
| Childs' Grocery Co. | 220 |

The Acme Tea Co. is the oldest and largest. One can find their stores everywhere, from Easton, Pa., to Cape May, N. J. They go in strong for their own private labels. They are adding about two stores a month to their chain.

Robinson & Crawford is known as "The Quality Chain." They use the morning and afternoon Philadelphia daily papers, also the subway and elevator cars telling the people that they have the stores "where quality counts." They are adding to their chain rapidly. For some time they have opened one new store a week, and recently they have started opening stores in the most exclusive suburban towns.

The Bell Co. operates large stores in good sections. They are growing fast.

Wm. Butler Co. have large stores, some in poor and some in good sections. Price is the thing, first, last and all the time.

Geo. M. Dunlap Co. have large stores and they are well conducted. You can find a great many of them in the seashore towns along the coast.

The Childs' Grocery Co., with headquarters at Camden (across the river from Philadelphia) do not give trading stamps. They go in more for cut prices. Their stores are all over Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania. Until the first of this year they did not operate in Philadelphia. In January they started opening stores here and at the present time they have 41 stores in operation. It is the understanding that they have commissioned real estate men to secure for them by July, 1915, 200 locations for stores in this city. They have lots of money and there is a fight on at the present time between them and the "chains" that give stamps.

We understand that the class of premiums the above stores give for stamps are of good quality and the consumers in this section are "stamp crazy."

There is unquestionably a common understanding (gentlemen's agreement) between all of these different chains whenever their buying policy is involved. In any case they present a united front against any manufacturer who refuses to sell them direct at jobbers' discounts, however much they may compete on price or quality.

It is predicted that there will be over 1,500 chain stores in Philadelphia by the end of 1915.

The general feeling among most of the jobbers seems to be one of indifference whether the Kellogg Co. sells the chain stores or not, and there is a general belief that the company is anxious to get back that business again and will almost certainly take the chain stores back—if they will come—early in the coming fall.

Pennsylvania News Items.

David Rosenberg, a meat dealer and former Councilman of McKeesport, Pa., is at the head of a movement to organize retail meat dealers and have them refuse to handle meats for which more than the market price is asked. The packers, Mr. Rosenberg says, often raise the prices.

During the week attorneys Mehard, Scully and Mehard made formal application in the United States District Court for the dismissal of the suit brought against the United Retail Grocery Stores Company, Delaware corporation, by A. H. Evans, former vice-president of the company, asking for the appointment of a receiver, in accordance with an opinion handed down the previous Saturday by Judge Charles P. Orr denying the application. Judge Orr said that the matter was not under the jurisdiction of the court, and that the trouble was one of management between the officers and stockholders and was one for them to settle. A. H. Evans brought suit after he had been deposed as vice-president. Attorney for the corporation presented proof of solvency, and Judge Orr ordered the petition dismissed on formal motion. A. H. Evans is still a member of the board of trustees. A new vice-president has not been chosen.

Last Call for the Monthly Contest

Papers in the current Monthly Contest must be in this office by Next Thursday, July 30, 1914

We are hoping to present some interesting papers on this subject, which concerns the quality of nationally advertised products as a class. The subject regularly stated is as follows:—

9—Give your experience with the quality of nationally advertised goods—are they of better or poorer quality than the brands sold without general advertising?

Come, friend, sit down to-day and write your views on the subject. Let them be short or long, just as you like, but write them.

Three prizes:—

$7.50, $5.00 and $2.50

These Grocery Examination Questions are Worse Yet

Some Weeks Ago the Latest Local Examination Questions of the English Institute of Certificated Grocers Were Published. Here are Presented the National Examination Questions for June. They are Even Harder Than the Locals.

In a recent issue the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" reproduced another set of the examination papers used by the English Institute of Certified Grocers. Those questions were used in the local examinations. This paper presents now the questions asked in the June National examination. These were the final examinations and are even harder than the questions reproduced a few weeks ago. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" advises its readers, as it has done in former cases, to read the questions carefully with a view to seeing how many of them can be answered correctly. In England nobody can receive a diploma as a Certified Grocer unless he answers the greater number of these questions:—

WRITTEN PAPERS.

Note.—Three Hours Allowed for Grocery and Provision Sections.

(In the Grocery and Provision Sections the numbers and letters given refer to actual samples so labeled and displayed on tables in the examination room for identification and description by the candidates.)

GROCERIES.

(All the questions may be attempted.)

1. What is Triage and how is it obtained?

2. Whence are sultanias obtained? Describe the relative merits of various growths.

3. (a) Give the district in India which produce the following descriptions of tea: the tippiest teas, the finest flavored teas, the largest proportion of common tea, and the most pungent teas.

(b) State at what time of the year the new season's Chinas arrive, and during what periods of the year the supplies of India and Ceylon teas respectively predominate in this country.

4. (a) What countries supply nutmegs?

(b) Place them in order of merit.

5. Describe the various samples of peas, giving country of origin, also approximate values; 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

6. State different countries whence arrowroot is obtained, and how you would test the various samples.

7. (a) Is there any difference in the quality between Red Alaska and Puget Sound (48/1 talls) Red Salmon?

(b) If so, state which is best and the approximate difference in value per case.

8. (a) State briefly how refined sugar is manufactured: (a) from cane; (b) from beet.

(b) State from what other raw materials sugar may be manufactured.

PROVISIONS.

(All the questions may be attempted.)

9. Cheese. Name the country of origin, trade name and cost price of: A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, K, L, M, N, O.

10. Butter and margarine. Describe the samples marked: A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, J, K, L, M, N, O, P—naming the substance (whether "butter" or "margaine"), quality, country of production and cost price.

11. Bacon. Name the cut, selection, country of origin and cost price of: A, C, E, G, K, M, and name the cut and country of origin, and cost price of: B, D, F, H, L, N, O, P, R, S, T.

12. Eggs. Describe the quality, weight (how many "lbs. to the 120"), and the cost price of A, B, C, D, E, F, G. Describe how Irish, Danish, Russian, Italian, Dutch and duck eggs are packed, giving the number of hhds. or half hhds. to the case, and what trade allowance is given.

13. General. Write a letter of complaint re the quality of A, B, C, describing the fault and making your claim.

METHODS OF BUSINESS AND PRINCIPLES OF ADVERTISING.

(Only five questions may be attempted.)

Time allowed—two hours.

14. If you were desirous of engaging the services of a first-class grocery or provision hand, describe what method you would adopt to attain your object, and what, in your opinion, are the essential qualifications of a first-class assistant?

15. (a) Assuming that you have a shop split up into two departments, carrying a stock altogether of, say, £1,000, and your indoor staff number ten, what method would you adopt of taking stock, assuming that your financial year ended on a Tuesday?

(b) State how long, in your opinion, it would require, under the conditions mentioned, to take down your stock correctly.

16. What methods should be adopted in a business in order to avoid dead stock?

17. Write a check in favor of Brown & Sons, Ltd., for eight pounds, fourteen shillings and sixpence, also indorse the check as secretary of Brown & Sons, Ltd. (Dummy check attached.)

18. If you bought one cwt. of soap at 28s. containing 40 bars, how much per bar would you sell it at to secure a profit of 20 per cent. on returns?

19. Write the following letters:—

(a) To Mrs. Jones, Hyde Park Gardens, London, who is coming to live in your district. Write a letter by which you hope to secure her custom.

(b) Mrs. Jones writes complaining that the tea which has been supplied lately is not of the same character as hitherto sent. Write a letter in answer to this complaint.

20. Draw a rough plan of a grocer's shop with two departments, viz., grocery and provisions, showing the position of each counter, also the private office and shop windows. State whether your shop faces north, south, east or west. How many assistants would be required to run this shop, assuming the turnover was £10,000 a year?

21. (a) Is a price list absolutely necessary to a business? Give your reasons either for or against.

(b) Assuming you published a price list annually, how would you be sure of your customers being kept up to date with all changes in prices and additions to stock between the issues?

(c) State briefly on what lines you would work to produce a price list? Would you have it printed locally or by a contractor out of your town?

(d) How would you distribute your price lists to your customers?

BOOKKEEPING.

Time allowed, 1½ hours.

22. What system of bookkeeping would you recommend to a grocer contemplating starting in business? Describe the nature of the various books you would advise him to keep to enable him to correctly ascertain, in the shortest time, the results of his business transactions.

23. What do you understand by the following terms:—

(a) Nominal account capital, capital and net profit?

(b) The "imprest" system, as applied to petty cash?

What is the object of closing a ledger and how is it affected?

24. Write up a cash book recording the following transactions:—

April 1st. Balance in hand—

| | |
|----------------|----------|
| Cash | 314 10 2 |

Price-Fixing Butter and Egg Monopoly Enjoined.

An injunction restraining the Chicago Butter and Egg Board from publishing prices on butter, eggs and other products was issued during the week by Federal Judge Landis. In a suit filed some months ago the Government charged that by publishing prices on the commodities in which it dealt, the Butter and Egg Board artificially created prices higher than the market warranted, and violated the Federal law prohibiting all acts in restraint of trade. The suit is similar to the recent action against the Elgin Board of Trade, which resulted in the entering of a decree directing that only actual sales should be quoted and no attempt to fix prices should be made by what was known as the Price Committee. It is the intention of the District Attorney to draft a similar decree in the case of the Chicago Butter and Egg Board, making actual sales the basis of butter and egg quotations.

 This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants'

The Experiences of Two Retailers When They Went After Their Costs.

One Found By Ordering Small Quantities and Often, He Could Get His Cost Down to 11.6 Per Cent. The Other Who Thought He Was Figuring Correctly and Making a Profit, Found He Actually Lost $642 Last Year.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has seen some letters recently written by retail merchants who are reporting the result of their efforts to correctly ascertain their costs of doing business, and they were so interesting that we are taking the liberty of reproducing certain portions of them here.

The first letter makes the remarkable statement that the writer of it had gotten his cost of doing business down to 11.6 per cent. on sales. He is a dry goods dealer. He turned his stock four and a half times in 1913 and writes:—

While 1913 was an exceptional year with us, our selling expense was no larger than it has been for ten years. In fact, one year we got this cost down to 9.8 per cent. on sales. The gross profit on sales has averaged about 29 per cent.

We order in small quantities and often. Thereby we have something new all the time, something doing all the time.

Our sales for 1914 up to date show an increase of 36 per cent. over last year for the same period, and the selling expense no more in proportion.

We discount all our bills, and that alone in a year makes us a profit of 4½ per cent. on our capital stock.

Our successful experience convinces us beyond all possibility of doubt that the way to make a net profit is to keep the sales up and expenses down.

The writer of the second letter, a grocer and general storekeeper, does not make so good a showing. Here is his statement of financial condition:—

|---|-------------|
| Invoice Jan. 1, 1913..... | $2,585.83 |
| Invoice Jan. 1, 1914..... | 2,877.42 |
| Goods bought 1913, including freight and drayage..... | $10,736.03 |
| Freight and drayage..... | 535.25 |
| Store expense..... | 3,017.00 |
| Jan. Sales, 1913..... | 1,202.18 |
| Feb. Sales, 1913..... | 896.42 |

|------------------------|----------|
| Mar. Sales, 1913..... | 892.96 |
| April Sales, 1913..... | 930.35 |
| May Sales, 1913..... | 1,308.59 |
| June Sales, 1913..... | 1,108.81 |
| July Sales, 1913..... | 1,171.92 |
| Aug. Sales, 1913..... | 1,052.72 |
| Sept. Sales, 1913..... | 1,050.14 |
| Oct. Sales, 1913..... | 867.92 |
| Nov. Sales, 1913..... | 967.83 |
| Dec. Sales, 1913..... | 1,671.14 |

$13,110.98.

This was submitted to another retail dealer who has reduced the cost of doing business almost to an exact science, and elicited the following opinion:—

If your figures are correct you actually lost $642 last year. More business is not necessarily your problem, but more profits. As I figure it, you lost practically 5 per cent. on every dollar's worth you, sold.

You say you lose about $100 a year in produce. I believe you are making a good profit on your variety goods, but that your produce and grocery line is wiping this out and then some. For instance, suppose butter is worth 20 cents a pound and you pay 21 cents. You lose 5 per cent. on the purchase, and that 5 per cent. will go a long way towards wiping out what you will make out of your variety line.

To be right and on the safe side you should show a profit on all transactions, however small they may be. I suggest that you either raise your grocery or produce profits or cut them out entirely. It is better to do a smaller business at a profit than a greater one at a loss.

I try to average 50 per cent. gross profit on cost. Out here where freight charges are high, more than 50 per cent. is too much and very much less than 50 per cent. is too little.

I allow 2 per cent. on sales for advertising. Of this amount ⅓ goes for printers' ink and ⅔ for price advertising. When I put on a sale I generally use Butler Bros. Block System and sell goods for less than the regular prices.

My candy business is much larger than yours, and should be. I sell hard candies at 12 cents, soft ones at 15 cents and creams at 25 cents. I don't sell high-priced candies at all.

Your merchandise purchases last year were $10,736.03. Your sales were $13,111.

My purchases were $11,679 and my sales were $15,085.75.

Thus you see the great difference between your business and mine in the profits obtained.

As I size up your situation you are making money on variety goods and then paying it out again for the privilege of selling groceries and buying the farmers' produce. I think I surely am right when I suggest that you would do well to drop the grocery and produce end of your business. You certainly can make a profit. But it is just as certain under present conditions and according to your own figures, that you are facing an absolute loss.

Evidently you pay the produce premium as a business getter. In that case it should have been charged up to advertising. This would have been 0.11 per cent. if your profits were sufficient to allow it. But they were not. If you continue this produce premium business, together with your monthly 39—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because selling them leaves a merchant more time to develop the larger phases of his business.

¶ What we mean is this:—Many a merchant is so busy selling goods that he has no time left to develop his business. He may not have near all the customers he can handle, yet if all his time is taken up with waiting on what he has, he will obviously have no time to go out and get others.

¶ The merchant who leaves himself no time to sit down and make plans to widen and increase his business may hold his own, but he will never grow much.

¶ Nationally advertised products are the easiest and quickest to sell. They require no plugging, no pushing—the manufacturer has done that through his advertising. Selling them leaves you every possible minute for development work.

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

Failures Divided as Compared With a Year Ago.

More in Four Lines in June and Less in Two Lines as Compared With June, 1913. Dry Goods Line Hard Hit. All Failures for First Half of 1914 Show Increase Over Same Period of 1913.

The official report of mercantile failures for June, as compared with June, 1913, shows the usual variance between the different lines. There were more failures this June among general stores, grocers, clothing and furnishers and dry goods men, and less among shoe dealers and hardware dealers. The figures follow:—

General Stores—June, 1914, 92; liabilities, $818,607; June, 1913, 85; liabilities, $514,017.

Clothing and Furnishing—June, 1914, 116; liabilities, $814,225; June, 1913, 92; liabilities, $851,861.

Dry Goods, Etc.—June, 1914, 72; liabilities, $40,039,959 (this includes the Claflin failure); June, 1913, 45; liabilities, $1,366,903.

Shoes, Etc.—June, 1914, 25; liabilities, $163,858; June, 1913, 34; liabilities, $201,874.

Hardware, Etc.—June, 1914, 17; liabilities, $101,900; June, 1913, 20; liabilities, $377,100.

The report for the second quarter of 1914, covering failures in the same lines, compared with the same period of 1913, shows the following summary of results: More this year in groceries, clothing, dry goods, less in general stores, shoes, hardware.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has also received a report of the unclassified commercial failures for the first half of 1914, showing a total in the United States of 8,344 failures in all lines, against 8,163 during the first half of 1913.

Colorado Rocky Ford cantaloupes will be along in about a week. Meanwhile cantaloupes are coming from Arizona, selling at $2.30 to $2.50; they were $3.75. Delaware is also becoming quite a factor; Delaware cantaloupes are bringing $2.50. North Carolina cantaloupes range from $1.25 to $1.60.

WITH THE EDITOR

An interesting situation is developing in Philadelphia between the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes Co. and the wholesale grocers, with the big and little chain-store systems as interested spectators in the background. Its details are reported elsewhere.

Several years ago when the Kellogg Co. was making extraordinary efforts to conciliate jobbers, one of the things it did was to stop selling the chain stores, all of whom, up to that time, had been selling Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes and buying them direct. At the same time the Kellogg Co. made it plain that it expected the jobbers to make up this lost trade, but the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" said at the time that in this it would probably be disappointed.

There is now reliable information that this prediction was accurate, and that the Kellogg Co. is feeling exceedingly disgruntled. In a most pointed and vigorous letter which it has just sent to every jobber in Philadelphia, it makes plain that it has lost a lot of business by cutting off the chain stores, and it says inferentially that if it is to continue refusing to sell them, the Philadelphia jobbers must buy 6,000 cases of Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes during July and August. There is much reason to expect that nothing like this will be sold, and that the Kellogg Co. will very shortly ask the chain stores for their direct orders again. Whether the chain stores, having once been rejected, will feel like giving orders, remains to be seen.

The point about the whole incident is that it was foolish in the beginning, and has always been foolish, because it simply cost the Kellogg Co. a lot of business without benefiting anybody that it was intended to benefit. The big chain-store systems promptly threw Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes out when they were cut off, and have never sold it since. Therefore the jobbers gained nothing by the move, and they could not gain anything, for a chain store would go out of business before it would buy anything through a jobber who had helped to have it cut off the direct buying list.

Moreover, the chain stores have apparently not been seriously inconvenienced by not having Kellogg's—they have sold other and lower-priced brands and are apparently happy. The solitary goat has been the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co., which should have known in the beginning that nobody could benefit by its sacrifice. That it was a sacrifice cannot be doubted, for the chain systems represent a strength of over 1,000 retail stores, every one of which would probably be selling Kellogg's to-day if it had not been cut off.

At the last annual meeting of the National Retail Grocers' Association, a resolution was adopted condemning the bill now pending in Congress providing for prohibition throughout the United States. The Denver (Col.) Retail Grocers' Association does not agree with the spirit of this resolution, or with the spirit of any resolution which the National could have adopted, evidently, and has adopted the following resolutions of its own:—

Whereas, The National Association of Retail Grocers, in annual meeting assembled, very unwisely passed a resolution condemning the nation-wide prohibition bill now before the Congress of this country; and

Whereas, This is a question on which there is such a wide divergence of opinion in any body or association of men; and

Whereas, Such action by a National Association representing any body of men, excepting those interests directly concerned, must appear to the country at large as hasty, unwise and ill-considered; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Denver Retail Grocers' Association, go on record as protesting against the action of our National Association; and be it

Resolved, That we reassert our absolute neutrality in this great issue as becomes a body of sensible men; and be it further

Resolved, That we forward immediately a copy of these resolutions to the officers of our National Association, that they be published in our official organ, the "Denver Grocer," and that they be recorded on the minutes of this meeting.

In the writer's humble opinion, the Denver grocers are absolutely wrong, and the National association is right—as to the propriety of taking some stand upon this question. What kind of a man is it who remains "neutral" upon practically the greatest business question that is pressing for decision to-day? You cannot remain "neutral" upon it any more than you can remain neutral upon whether murder or arson are good or bad. Everybody with blood in his body ought to have an opinion on one side or the other, and having it ought to express it.

We believe the National Association was right in holding and expressing some opinion, but we do not agree with its opinion in the least. The National declared against Nation-wide prohibition. Why? Does it believe the perpetuation of the business of selling rum will do the grocery business any good? Have its officers read the letters to this paper from retailers doing business in all the dry sections in the United States—twenty-nine States are represented so far—practically every one of which has told of improved business, better collections and cleaner morals since the saloon was abolished? What argument has the National Association to advance against these men who are on the ground? If prohibition succeeds so well locally, is there any reason to believe it would succeed less well Nationally?

The writer predicts that within ten years—we should not be surprised to see it in five—there will be a law in force throughout the entire United States prohibiting the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors. The country is pretty nearly ready for it, and may God speed the day when it comes.

which strikes the writer as one of the finest ideas that have ever been advanced along the line of special "weeks" and "days." It is for a special "debt-paying day." The Carmen people have actually set aside a certain day for this purpose, and have tried to inculcate the idea that on that day it will be made a point of honor for all townspeople who owe anything to clean up their minor unsecured debts. A point is made as "minor, unsecured debts"—small loans and debts that are contracted on a business basis which are so often neglected, and which in the aggregate constitute the bulk of the world's floating indebtedness.

It is a fine idea, and the writer hopes it will grow.

A Suggestion to Jobbers.

helped him:—

I am now in much better condition financially than I have been for some years, and I attribute my success very largely to your merchandise and the instructions given in your catalogue.

As long as I continue the retail business and you sell as you do now, I shall give you the larger portion of my trade.

Of course he will. Something that the average business man never forgets is the effort of a jobber or a manufacturer to help him. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will make this gratuitous suggestion to the Tri-State Wholesale Grocers' Association and to every other jobbers' organization, whose members face the daily danger of losing their trade to competitors, especially to mail order competitors, and to co-operative buying enterprises among retailers. This plan will tie your customers to you with ropes of steel that even cut prices, in most cases, cannot break. The suggestion is this: Hire a corps of business experts who know how to put their fingers on the weak places in a retail business and cure them up. When John Jones, a regular customer of one of the members, is reported slow and unsatisfactory, send an expert, in the name of the jobber whose customer John Jones is, to look him over. If the expert knows his business he could probably make a new man of John Jones, and win his everlasting gratitude—for the jobber who set him there. Some John Joneses would forget that, but the most would not. They would say as the writer of the above letter did: "As long as I continue in the retail business and you sell as you do now, I shall give you the larger portion of my trade."

Kellogg's Patent Carton Case Before United States Court.

Whether a patent on a cardboard carton confers price-fixing authority on the Kellogg Corn Flake Co., of Battle Creek, was the legal question argued before the United States Court of Appeals in Detroit, Mich., last Tuesday, when the court took up the Government anti-trust suit against the corn flake company. The Government charges that the defendant concern attempts to fix resale prices on its goods through jobber, wholesaler and retailer on the strength of a patent on the container and that the box patent is a subterfuge. The company asserts its box patent confers authority to fix not only the retail price, but any resale price from manufacturer down to retailer. The main facts in the suit are admitted and the case will be tried solely on a question of law. The case came before the Court of Appeals after the filing of an expediting certificate by the Attorney-General, who asked that the case be tried before the Appellate Court instead of the District Court.

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade topics, it being understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. All communications must be accompanied by the writer's name and address as an evidence of good faith, but not necessarily for publication. All inquiries within our power to answer will also be noticed in this department.

Fixtures Wanted.

York, Pa., July 17, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I will engage about the 1st of September in the fancy grocery business. Have been a subscriber to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" for many years and will subscribe for same again.

I would like to know what you have for sale in a cash register, electric coffee mill, slicing machine and Walker bins.

Kindly give me your opinion on the following: Would you use a computing scales only in your meat and cheese department and Troemner scales for general use? In your opinion, what slicing machine and coffee mill is the best on the market?

This is a new store room and has no fixtures in it, except it will be shelved.

It will be a double room, one side will be devoted to fresh and smoked meats and the other side to groceries.

There used to be a fountain advertised in your paper for keeping vegetables fresh; what is your opinion of it?

Thanking you in advance for your kindness, I am,

Yours truly,

CHAS. E. HUMMER.

As to what we have for sale in a cash register, we refer you to the first and last advertisement under "Fixtures."

For a slicing machine, please note "Offer No. 15" in "Exchange Department." In case you should be interested in a cheese slicer, you might communicate with R. L. Siegfried, Nazareth, Pa., "Offer No. 9," and Jas. O'Neil, 1600 Vine street, Philadelphia, "Offer No. 7." If you want a new machine, buy the "U. S.," advertised in this paper.

If you are not interested in anything but an electric coffee mill, then we have nothing to offer, although we will give you the names of several manufacturers—Enterprise Mfg. Co., Third and Dauphin streets, and Coles Mfg. Co., 1715 N. Twenty-third street, both of Philadelphia.

Mr. J. J. McCormick, Bridgeport, Pa., writes us this week that he has "two 10-foot section of Walker Patent Bins, 3 feet high, with Spice Cabinet; one counter, with bin in front, 11 feet long; one Star Coffee Mill and one Cheese Cutter and Case."

H. F. Heacock, 51 N. Second St., Philadelphia, is a dealer in store fixtures and usually has a good line of bargains in second-hand articles.

What Goes With Tea So Well as Coffee?

Halifax, Canada, July 16, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—A friend of ours in the wholesale tea business, a man who has accumulated a tidy fortune for these parts, is these days finding the narrowness of profits so disappointing that he is looking about for some new line or lines to handle along with teas. He has thought of coffees, but coffees are small sellers in this country. Perhaps from the abundance of your information, you could name a line that would suit him, and if so, I should be greatly obliged. Please note that our friend has lots of warehouse room as well as a good bank account.

With apologies for imposing on your time and good nature, believe me,

Yours truly,

I. C. STEWART.

Ignorance of conditions existing in this correspondent's territory make it almost impossible to offer any suggestion which will be worth anything. Of course, coffee is the usual team mate for tea, and if that is not practical here, it is hard to say what would be. Spices belong in the same category, and tea coffee and spices usually travel together. Perhaps spices would do.

The New York Letter

Talk of Possible Accomplishments of the Coming State Retail Convention. Nearly Half Merchandise Sales in New York Said to be From Manufacturers to Retailers Direct. Hebrew Retailers Will Go After Law Allowing Sunday Sales. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

New York, July 22, 1914.

Talk in both the wholesale and retail trade in New York is confined almost exclusively to possible results from the annual convention of the New York State Retail Grocers' Association, to be held at the Broadway Central Hotel August 3d, 4th, 5th and 6th. A programme has been arranged which leaves ample room for discussions on points brought to the front by delegates to the convention from all parts of the State, as well as visitors from all parts of the United States. Just what points these delegates and guests will bring up are not known, even to the officers of the association, so that the convention may assume some peculiar angle. While such a situation causes some uneasiness, the officers of the retail association point out the fact that such a programme is conducive to an instructive convention as a great variety of questions will undoubtedly be presented to the association, together with the opinion of many men placed in very different positions. The Broadway Central will be made the headquarters of the convention, special rates having been arranged for the delegates.

The entertainment of visitors is being arranged by the Entertainment Committee of the New York City Retail Grocers' Association, and they promise to give all a good time without in any way interfering with the business sessions of the convention.

Again the trade in this city is discussing the possibility of stopping the sale of goods direct from manufacturer to retailer. Can the wholesalers stop such sales? This is a question much talked of in the dull summer days. One New York paper in a recent article maintains that the jobber himself is responsible for the fact that nearly half the amount of total sales are conducted between retailer and manufacturer in this city. Because of private brands, the writer maintains, the manufacturer is forced to sell direct to avoid unfair competition with the wholesale dealer.

The jobbers, while they say there is no united action, have individually agreed to protect themselves as much as possible from this invasion of their territory and several of the larger houses are said to have warned manufacturers that they must sell in only one of the two ways.

A movement is being started among the Hebrew grocers and delicatessen dealers towards the enactment of a law at the next session of the Legislature permitting them to remain open on Sundays, provided their stores are closed on Saturdays. The movement is the result of an appeal made on last Monday to Magistrate Steers in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn by a son of Supreme Court Justice Greenbaum. He argued in the defense of several shopkeepers arrested for violating the Sunday law. While Magistrate Steers did not agree with him in believing the law to allow the shopkeepers to remain open on Sunday, he admitted the justice of Lawyer Greenbaum's argument. This caused Commissioner of Education Joseph Barondess and several other influential Hebrews to take up the question and a measure for relief will be presented at the next session.

A new circular issued by the Bureau of Weights and Measures advises all consumers to attend strictly to business when purchasing food supplies. "Avoid asking for a cupful, 5 cents' worth or 10 cents' worth, a package, a handful, a basket, a jar or a tub. All these things mean nothing in the law unless you say a pound, a quart or a gallon or whatever amount you want." This is some of the advice circulated in a folder issued this week. It also cautions a consumer not to allow dealers to weigh wooden, tin-rimmed dishes with the butter which they are purchasing. These containers, according to the circular, often weigh from two to three ounces.

Importers of lemons from Sicily have had the most disastrous experience in their career during the past week. The majority of the cargoes landed here were sold at bare freight prices. The receivers are unable to account for such a poor condition of the market. Despite the good quality of the shipments, bidders refused to offer more than nominal prices, claiming it was so difficult to dispose of them. Retail trade finds a good demand, but are rather overstocked, because of the prevailing low prices.

The steamship "Norfolk," arriving in New York on Saturday, brought with it 3,650 tons of frozen beef, mutton and lamb from Australian ports. Some of the cargo of the vessel had previously been taken off at Boston. This vessel had been especially reconstructed to carry meat from the Antipodes. Under the new tariff, steamship owners have found the importation of meat to be a winning venture. The "Norfolk" is the third ship to be prepared in New York for such a cargo. The meat, contrary to general opinion, is not assigned to independent dealers, but to the large packers, among them Armour, Swift and Cooke & Co.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

The local spot coffee market continued firm in tone, being affected by the better cables from Europe. Santos coffees remained unchanged in price, but Rio advanced considerably. No effect was made by holders to dispose of odd lots.

There has been a fair inquiry from the country for teas and prices have been well maintained. Light warehouse stock and small shipments have let dealers to hope for higher prices. Advices from abroad indicate a poor crop and holders are insisting on full prices.

The raw sugar market this week maintained a better tone, refiners being

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s
Department Food Stores, Dover, N. J.

Particularly the Vegetable Man.— This is your harvest time. Things now are at their best. Profit results depend upon three things—your lay out, your method of figuring and your final clean up.

There's no rule for a vegetable display—each man is a law unto himself. One thing you ought to strive for, and that is to get away from stiffness. The kind of stiffness that makes a woman feel as though she hated to "disturb that pile."

The typical Italian stand won't go in our business; it's too set. Too suggestive of hands off, or, you may have "one at a time." Avoid prettiness.

If you do pile up ripe pears make a break in them so as to imply that somebody has been there before. Otherwise it's a good deal like the hesitancy you show in eating in a restaurant where ten waiters stand around waiting for one customer.

This third week in July string beans in our neighborhood are very plentiful.

Instead of weighing them (measuring is out of the question), these should be filled into two-quart and four-quart baskets and sold not as two quarts or four quarts, but per basket.

Same with tomatoes, sweet potatoes, onions etc.

On all perishable stuff you should start out to double your money over bill and transportation cost. This percentage lets you out on the final clean up and on stormy afternoons when you have to sacrifice profits and in many cases dump some of your goods.

You will naturally say, "How about competition?" And you will say further, maybe this writer's theory sounds nice, just like the theory of many writers that aren't in the thick of the fight. As a matter of fact, this one happens to be in the thick of the fight and knows that competition of the real sort falls in line. Men are in business for profit. Don't let the rough element scare you. Stick to sound methods.

Quality goods and careful handling of this department, sending stuff out for delivery in nice shape, beats price cutting. It has won out and is winning out to-day in thousands of stores. The man who can fix up his vegetable and fruit show so attractively that it calls a halt to the passerby, knows the game, and if you can show a good weekly profit on this "game," he is a valuable man.

xious to increase their stock. Unfavorable cables from Cuba caused an uneasy feeling as to future prices.

Withdrawals of refined sugar continue heavy, the Federals being 10 points over than other refineries. The consumption is active in this weather and the market expects a continuation of present conditions and prices.

There has been a fair inquiry for rice, but buying has been a hand-to-mouth order. Most dealers prefer to wait for the movement of the new crop before buying. Full prices, however, are still based on a prospect of a late crop. Beans seem to be the most desired quality.

Recent shipments of dried fruits have been much heavier than heretofore. Much of the stock, however, is going direct to jobbers who contracted for some months ago, consequently these jobbers are not interested in present offerings, but the country is buying freely. Apricots are most in demand, peaches are selling slowly, there being little demand for the new crop. Prices have a slight undercurrent, but quotations have not yet been changed. California prunes are as usual, dull.

Receipts of butter during the past week have been unusually liberal, many of the late shipments having arrived. The general demand was of a moderate character, jobbers buying only what was needed for current use. Despite the good quality of the average lots, there is little speculative interest shown. The best qualities were sold at 27½ to 28½ cents, while firsts ranged from 24½ to 27 cents.

The quality of the shipments of eggs this week has been even poorer than before. Some of the best grades of candied and graded Northern eggs command a little better prices. The demand is still light, dealers buying only to supply current needs. The fresh-gathered eggs have been quoted at 23 to 27 cents, with firsts at 20 to 22½ cents.

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

XXVI.—Should a Retailer Sell Coffees by Varieties or Under His Own Coined Names?

By WILLIAM B. HARRIS.

As a result of the two articles with reference to coffee prices we have been asked whether it is a better policy for the dealer to sell these high-priced coffees, or in fact any coffee, by name, or whether he should give all of his coffees brand names and so offer them to his customers.

We have gone over this situation in previous articles, but it is important enough to stand repetition. Not only should the dealer sell his high-priced coffees under brand names, but he should brand every coffee he carries with the possible exception of a blend of Java and Mocha. Even in this connection our advice would be to prefix a brand name to the words Java and Mocha, as, for example, "Morning Glory Brand Java and Mocha."

Where a dealer sells a coffee under its trade name he is no better off than any other dealer. If he works up a good trade on his grade of Bogota or on his grade of Santos the chances are very good that some competitor, in order to get business, will secure a particularly attractive looking coffee of either of the kinds in question and make a special run at a lower figure even if there should be a little or no profit in these sales. If the first grocer happens to be selling a Bogota at 35 cents, and the second dealer should offer a Bogota at 30 cents, a number of customers are bound to be attracted by the cheaper price. The outcome would be that neither of the two stores would get a reasonable profit on the sales of Bogota coffee, for the competitive price of one dealer would naturally bring down the price of the other.

If, on the other hand, dealer No. 1 is selling his 35-cent coffee under a brand name he has identified this coffee with his store and no other store can offer the same brand. People like his Gold Medal or whatever the brand may be, and no amount of argument on the part of another dealer can convince them that a cheaper coffee has the same merit.

All a dealer has to do is to look around him at very nearly every line of food product and he will find brand after brand advertised to a greater or less extent. Other brands may be practically the same and equally as good, but where the consumer is using a particular article she is very apt to stick to it as long as the quality is kept uniform.

It is our opinion that a dealer would do well to carry this method of business a good deal farther than his coffee department and have a certain amount of merchandise of as many kinds as possible packed under his own brand.

It is not a difficult matter for him to carry all his coffee under brand names and then have on his shelves only such specially advertised package coffees as are called for in his locality.

Fancy bags are not expensive and they can be made up from one design with simply a change of the brand name. This can be worked out in two ways. Either the dealer can have the printing in one color with a different color bag for each brand of coffee, or at a little additional expense he can have the bags all of one color with the printing in different colors. Usually where this is done a white bag is selected, the printing being in red, black, blue, brown, etc., for the different brands, the only change being that brand name and the color of the ink. Where a dealer doesn't care to go to this expense his coffee can be kept in canisters properly branded, weighed out as called for and a plain bag used, or one printed with the address of the store only.

We have been hammering the brand business for a long time and in a great many cases have suggested brand names which have been adopted and the method in every case has proven satisfactory.

Collection Agency Fakery Go to Jail for Long Terms.

Abram H. Freeman, of Chicago, and Frederick L. Wendler, of St. Louis, were convicted with seven others of using the mails to defraud in the operation of the Barr & Widen Mercantile Agency, were last week, in Chicago, each sentenced to eight years' imprisonment and fined $39,000 by Judge Landis in the United States District Court. The other defendants and the penalties imposed were: Charles F. Day, Chicago, a contract man, four years' imprisonment and a fine of $5,000. James T. Minehan, Chicago, a former minister, contract man, four years and a fine of $5,000. Joseph T. Stevens, Kansas City; Joseph B. Finkleman, Kansas City, and Robert B. Pender, all contract men, each three years and a fine of $2,500. William W. Fellers, Kansas City, and J. I. Worman, St. Louis, each nine months in the House of Correction. The Government charged that more than $1,000,000 was obtained by fraud during the operation of the agency. The alleged scheme was to convince creditors of bankrupts that their accounts would be collected by the agency from "concealed assets" of the bankrupts. The Government contended that after receiving fees for collecting such accounts the agency made no effort to serve its clients. The operations of the agency extended over many States.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The demand for tea is reported quite good, being particularly for new teas, which are coming regularly forward and moving out about as fast as received, although on a rather close basis. Old teas are only sold when there is something particular about them making them desirable. Prices show no change during the week.

Coffee.

The coffee market is unchanged and quiet. Fine roasting grades of Santos are still in good demand at full prices, but other grades are inclined to be weak and dull. Mild coffees are unchanged and quiet. Java and Mocha in moderate demand at unchanged prices.

Sugar.

There has been no change in the sugar market during the week. Refiners are still nominally holding granulated at 4.40 cents, but almost all of them will sell at 4.30 cents. The season of the largest demand is on, and the refiners have complete control of the market. What they will decide to do with it is, of course, not known at the present writing, but there will probably be no decline for the time being, nor is any material advance in sight at the present writing.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged, although refiners are talking an advance. Compound syrup is unchanged and dull. Sugar syrup and molasses are both seasonably quiet at ruling prices.

Fish.

The demand for new shore mackerel is good, owing to the unusual abundance of fine quality fish at a low price. Shore mackerel are ruling from $4 to $5 a barrel below what had come to be considered an average price. New Irish mackerel are also in fair demand at a price about $2 lower than usual, which simply represents the removal of the duty. These fish show fair quality. Norways are not particularly wanted, owing to indifferent quality. The fall-caught fish will not be available for a few weeks yet. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and dull. No prices have as yet been made on the new catch, which, however, has been fairly satisfactory up to date. Outside of Norwegian sardines, there seems to be little or no improvement in the condition of foreign. They are catching some Norwegian, but not as many as they would like. Domestic sardines are unchanged, but firm. Spot salmon of all grades is unchanged and quiet. There is a little new pack red Alaska salmon available for shipment to Eastern markets at a price not materially different from present spot prices.

Canned Goods.

Spot tomatoes are a little firmer, and some holders are asking 2½ cents advance. Future tomatoes are unchanged. The frequent rains have improved the outlook and packers are feeling more comfortable. The season, however, will be late, and is subject still to many uncertainties. Corn and peas are unchanged and quiet. Reports from the pea-packing districts indicate a fair-to-good pack almost everywhere, with good deliveries. Corn is unchanged and dull. Some new pack Southern apples are being offered at rather low prices, but spot New York State gallons are steady to firm, at unchanged prices. California canned goods unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Both spot and future prunes are unchanged upon the last quotation. The market for prunes is well maintained on the recently reported high basis. The demand for prunes is light. Peaches, apricots, raisins and currants are unchanged and seasonably dull.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are exactly where they were a week ago. The demand is light; in fact, it is reported much lighter than usual. Marrows are unchanged and quiet. California limas have advanced ⅜ of a cent, which takes them to 7¾ cents in a large way. The demand is fair. Stocks are very light, both in primary and secondary markets. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The butter market is firm at about unchanged prices. There is a very good consumptive demand for all grades, and the make is only fair for the season. Much of the receipts of butter fail to grade fancy, on account of showing the effects of heat. It meets with a ready sale, however, at relatively lower prices.

Eggs.

Fancy fresh eggs are very firm and active, particularly for the top grades, which command outside prices. Medium grades are also in fair sale, but almost everything is cleaning up day by day. The egg market is very healthy, and prospects are for a continued good consumptive demand.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady. The consumptive demand is normal and the make a little lighter than usual. Prices are about the same as a year ago, and a continued demand is looked for; if there is any change it will be a slight advance.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats, picnic, regular and skinback hams, bellies and bacon are firm at about ¼ cent advance. Consumptive demand is good and stocks are reported light. Both pure and compound lard are in good demand, at unchanged prices. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are steady and in excellent consumptive demand; prices unchanged.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

Tomato growers take a pessimistic view of the outlook for the coming crop in Maryland and the adjoining States, based on the existing unfavorable crop conditions. Careful inquiry and investigation shows that there is some basis for their fears regarding the situation and the outlook generally, but in the light of past experience the jobbers will probably await further developments on which to base their operations for the fall and winter campaign. The hot weather of the last two weeks will force the tomato vines, and unless there is sufficient rain during the next two weeks it will do more harm than good.

Spot tomatoes were even more active than in the week previous, and some of the largest orders for quick shipment came from the Western States. This demand was not entirely unexpected. It was in evidence several weeks ago, and so stated in these advices the latter part of June. The activity in the spot goods will continue during the remainder of this month, and probably until the middle of August, by which time the Maryland crop will begin to arrive. It may be well to anticipate your wants in spot tomatoes.

Future tomatoes were fairly active again this week, and there is, apparently, increasing confidence on the part of the buyers. Some of the orders this week were quite large, and the average size of the others was fully up to the usual July buying. The market is full of offers to buy larger blocks at a shade under to-day's quotations, but those offers cannot be placed with any reliability, canners whose contracts are worth under any and all conditions, and even the other kind don't want them. Only fully selected brands of established reputation for reliability are well-bought to-day's quotations and the purchaser will have no regrets.

String beans, sauer kraut, sweet potatoes, spinach and low-priced corn were more active this week than any of the other canned vegetables for prompt shipment. Kraut shows an upward tendency. For future delivery there was little doing in any of these articles, nor a holding firm, as a rule, because they are down to the low point.

The blackberry season may prove to be disappointing, and it is now said that the canning of them will end next week. The buying of them was active this week, and it looks like the lowest price for the season has been made. The price of red raspberries was very light, and black raspberries are already over for this season. Strawberries had a remarkable advance. They sold at 10 cents a dozen at the opening of the canning season and are now selling $1.10 for No. 2 standards in water. The other grades of strawberries are not at all plentiful. White cherries are good sellers at the cheap prices. Grape pie pineapples will be scarce next winter because of small pack. A few new crop pie peaches and apples have been packed for quick shipment. The outlook for business in canned fruits is considered to be excellent.

The demand for oysters is light and prices are firm.

Dry Goods—Notions—Knit Wear

An Abundance of New Styles.

Undoubtedly there is a more optimistic feeling among Western merchants than in the East. Possibly the promised superb crops have given them more confidence, and their actions and talks are along these lines. This is reflected in the weekly review report of Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, as follows: "The market buying season promises to be heavier than usual, because retailers have been putting their efforts into reducing their stocks to a very low basis and have not placed orders for future as freely as in past seasons. Salesmen on their various territories report that more merchants are coming to market to do their buying this fall than have been accustomed to making fall market trips.

"Crop conditions continue favorable to the dry goods trade. Not only will large crops give farmers more money to spend, but the railroads in moving the crops will keep more employees at work and consequently increase the fall demand for dry goods and kindred lines. An abundance of new styles is being shown in the market and wholesale stocks in all lines are being put in shape to take care of more than a normal demand for merchandise."

After dwelling upon natural conditions in town and country, John V. Farwell & Co., of the same city, says: "New style of garments is helping sale of Roman stripes. Imported dress goods now being opened show that English manufacturers have made noticeable improvements in put-up and are holding goods up to quality of samples from which orders were taken. All first deliveries of foreign dress goods are coming in on time. Recent London auction sales of wool show another advance. Cheaper wool cannot be looked for until more sheep are raised to take care of the demand. Many grades of white flannels have been advanced by mills 1 cent to 2 cents per yard, and wool blankets 25 cents per pair. New England cotton blankets are very scarce in mills hands—November and December delivery on duplicate orders being insisted upon. Fortunately local distributors are prepared with complete stocks to take care of all normal demands. Raw silk continues to advance with silk prices ruling firm. Satin faced silks are in greatest demand for fall."

Merchants Continue to Buy Cautiously.

Notwithstanding the presence in the primary markets, principally New York, of many hundreds of merchants of all grades from everywhere, and jobbers of high and low degree, the buying was rather disappointing. The small town dealers handling dry goods, notions, knit wear and other allied lines were as cautious as the big city retailers in purchasing goods, both for immediate and future use. In the fall and winter and next spring lines the deals effected created no great enthusiasm so far as quantity counted. New goods on which prices were to be announced will probably be withheld excepting where a buying-storekeeper really means to order and not look over from idle curiosity. It is admitted dry goods credits have been shaken by recent events and financing for the purpose of enlarging stocks is subject to closer investigation on the part of the moneyed men and institutions than for many years. This is held to be the principal reason why merchants have bought only according to their probable needs. It was noticed, however, that what are designated as "small town merchants," were in better financial condition than the so-called big retailers, who are inclined to plunge and speculate. The appended clear review of conditions is from the "Journal of Commerce":—

With cotton 85 points higher than a year ago, and after a season of very high cotton, the manufacturers of dress gingham have decided to go into next spring with prices substantially the same as, or slightly lower, than a year ago. The explanation for this condition is found in the general state of trade, rather in the conditions and costs of manufacturing. The large mills feel the need of conserving their working organizations and they have named prices that are very low for the purpose of selling goods. Some of the smaller concerns will feel the pinch of hard competition and are not ready to go into a year of losses or only nominal profits.

Views in the market vary as to the readiness of buyers to operate on dress gingham. So many varied cloths have been brought out to take the place of the dress gingham of other seasons, and some mills have done such a satisfactory business on them, that any general statement of no business of moment being on the books, for the new season, would not be correct. As a matter of fact, some mills have already booked some satisfactory orders for dress gingham subject to the new prices, and those orders will not be disturbed as the market level will be met when the new prices are made. The new dress gingham are less interesting than many of the new cloths. The yarn dyed mills have finally worked away from the necessity of supplying loom patterns on everything, and have brought out many novelty weaves and cloths that are quite as serviceable and as pretty as many of the dress gingham.

The market on staple cloths was not much changed from the conditions prevailing last week. The Clafin troubles are more talked about than other things, both in the mails and in the daily conversations of buyers. It seems to be accepted that until the final figures are known and digested the question of dry goods values will remain unanswered in the minds of many buyers. Moreover, there are many evidences that jobbers' paper is not selling as it should and hence the heads of houses are desirous of going slow where they can. They will have to buy a great many goods yet to meet the normal trade requirements, but they are determined to commit themselves as lightly as possible until the air clears. That advances are not in the air seems certain just now, despite the increased costs of production.

Attractive Fifty-Cent Proposition.

Some dress goods authorities are convinced that the trend for next spring will be made toward sheer goods. Fabrics on the voile order are therefore well regarded, with chiffon voiles and other cloths of similar make up are expected to sell freely. Panamas are also well thought of, but voiles are expected to be the big sellers. French dress goods have been advanced about 5 per cent. for the spring, with German goods showing also some uplift in price. Certain French mills are offering 36-inch Ottoman reps as low as 31 cents, less 2 per cent., to the jobbing trade, with the merchants an advance on these figures, of course. These fabrics are not perfectly woven, but as they have a clean appearance for low-grade goods and make an attractive 50-cent retail proposition, the sellers have had no difficulty in disposing of the merchandise.

French serges and poplins were in fair demand for quick delivery. These fabrics are reported to be scarce.

New Size Scale in Sweater Coats.

General storekeepers carrying Knit wear will be instructed in the size scales adopted recently for men's and boys' sweater goods by the Knit Goods Buyers' Association. The secretary in sending out the new scales says: "Our committee formulated the scale after several years' work; involving hundreds of personal conferences and voluminous correspondence, and concedes the fact that the quality of the material, the kind of stitch and the elasticity of the finished garment, make it difficult to adopt any hard and fast rule with regard to a scale of sizes for sweater coats.

"Nevertheless, it is felt to be in furtherance of the best interests of the knit goods trade for a definite standard of sizes to be adopted, so that when the retail merchant has a call from a customer for a 40-inch sweater coat he may try a sweater coat marked 40 inches on the customer with some assurance that the length of the sleeve and the

Fashion Indorsed Fabrics for Fall

Forewords in the autumn styles are beginning to appear, and considering the uncertainty the general storekeeper and others interested may entertain relative to placing orders for merchandise until this matter has reached a stage where "daylight" appears, the subjoined is a side light which may be looked over with that end in view:—

Smooth surface materials, albeit many of these will show some depth of pile, are the fashion indorsed fabrics for costume making for fall. Materials which show homespun weaves, with the mesh of a very closely allied character and much more nubby than mere ratines, are to be favored for suits and for coats.

Duvetynes will come under the first heading, but serges and gabardines, prunella cloth and chiffon broadcloths, together with satin and crepe silks, will provide the average woman with a wide range of charming materials from which to choose her autumn costume of either silk or wool. Novelty fabrics will receive a certain vogue, with striped effects most popularly chosen; but the plain colored fabrics will also be in great demand, with the chances greatly in favor of the solid colors being given the supremacy. Combinations of silk with wool materials will be a favored method for the making of smart styled frocks for afternoon wear.

Silk underskirts are quite en vogue even now. The prospect for the continuance of this idea is most promising. Newest models of broadcloth and taffetas are quite definite in their style relationships. The entire season has witnessed quite a number of ruffled and draped skirts which frankly depend upon silk or wool additions for their distinctiveness. It would appear that this adjustment of materials is to continue to sway the fashions for costumes for fall.

If the opinion of the cutting-up trade were accepted as the last word in style designation the matter would have been settled early in the spring. Doubtless if this procedure were regarded seriously by this time the market would have been flooded with models that would make the angels weep. Attempts are yearly made to use the extravagant costumes of the French demi-monde as they appear on conspicuous occasions as criterions, but American women, while mills. "There is a fortune waiting for the person who can guarantee next spring's styles," said a dry goods executive.

It was the change from felt to straw that crippled the felt hat business in Reading, Pa., within a year after manufacturers had doubled capacity. Manufacturers of women's suits, with a fair volume of business in prospect, are doing little because, they assert, styles have not been freely agreed upon. Some lines of business, according to trade reports, may suffer as disastrously from style changes as from tariff changes, the new-style craze being responsible for a great part of the higher cost of dress.

As the phrase goes, "What do you know about that?" To be sure, this may be a reason why advance orders are not nearly so heavy as in former years. Retail merchants assign as a reason for light purchasing that they can buy as advantageously later and therefore are keeping orders down to bare needs. But it is also undoubtedly true, as stated above, that frequent and sudden changes of style in dress goods is at the bottom of restricted purchasing. The National Cloak, Suit and Skirt Manufacturers' Association have endeavored to stem this tide of uncertainty and restore a greater feeling of confidence by reiterating the styles, materials, etc., formulated by their Special Committee in the spring, which appeared in last week's "Modern Merchant and Grocery World." It was a wise move and should be beneficial to all concerned.

Fiber Silk Hosiery and Price Maintenance.

Fiber silk hosiery, as the popular line for retailers, is being more freely ordered than any other grade. This despite the report that these goods are not as satisfactory as they might be. The so-called "all-silk" stocking—the artificial product, of course—is said not to wear well unless plaited over cotton. Artificial or fiber silk is claimed to lose its resistance to wear when wet, and, therefore, needs the backing of cotton to carry it through the strains subjected by washing or when impregnated with perspiration. Fiber 25-cent silks are quoted 10 cents lower than last year. Sheer hosiery is in light demand, but the most active business centers around the artificial silk lines. The dollar grades of pure silk are being bought, but not in the quantity looked for at this time of the year.

In the scramble for business price concessions are being offered by the mills. The slicing made on lines chiefly in competition with German goods is especially keen. As the price reduction to the jobber in the lines referred to amounts to only three-fourths of two cents a pair, the consumer derives no benefit, and the only effect will be better profits for dealers, where it properly belongs. Some of the Nationally advertised lines are trying to squeeze a better price for their merchandise out of the dealer, an extremely short-sighted policy. These goods may have a market of their own on paper, but it needs the active, not passive, co-operation of the merchant for their successful distribution and steady sale. Advertising is helpful, but it should not lead to a dictatorial selling policy when it comes to the dealer.

Hardware Tools Specialties

Capital Idea for Displaying Saws.

A case for holding saws—hand and rip, etc.—which is spoken of as the last word in efficiency, is of a very practical type, and is now made up and sold with his products by one of the largest manufacturers of these tools in the West. The proper display of saws is a problem with merchants; that is, to make it attractive as well as effective. The company furnishes the following description of this useful cabinet: "In offering this new combination saw case to the retail hardware trade, we do so in the full belief that it is in every detail a practical case. It is, we believe, the first wall or shelf case to combine display of all types of hand and small saws in the same case with the stock. In the front of the case 21 saws are shown, embracing a hand, rip and panel saw, keyhole and compass saws, back saws, hack saws, pruning saws, butcher and kitchen saws, stair builders' saws, dehorning and coping saws. This display is only suggestive and can, of course, be varied to suit each individual stock.

"The samples are protected by a glass front that cannot be gotten at and finger marked or otherwise damaged by the customer, and are as well protected from dampness, flies and dust, and will always form a clean, attractive display. The interior of the case is so arranged that it carries the entire stock of saws carried in the average hardware store. For instance, it will hold nine dozen hand, panel, rip, long butcher and mitre, box saws, six dozen assorted keyhole, compass, hack, kitchen and pruning saws, and six dozen assorted coping and other small saws.

"The stock is so arranged that any one saw may be removed and replaced without the necessity of handling any other saw. In taking the saws out of the case and replacing them it is never necessary to take hold of the blade. The importance of this will be instantly recognized. Each saw may be instantly identified by means of a celluloid or metal clip or marker. It will be noted that these clips have on them all the maker's name, the trade number of the saw, the length, number of points and the price.

"The clips or markers are designed to remain on the handle until a sale is made, when it can be instantly removed. Metal pockets, marked 'renew' and 'out,' are conveniently placed to receive clips or markers after removing from the handle. For example, a sale is made, and the salesman does not have time to replace the saw in the case from stock;

he places the marker in the pocket marked 'renew.' In going to the stock later, if he finds the particular number out of stock, he places the marker in the pocket marked 'out' on the opposite door.

"By this method it will never be necessary to check over the entire stock in the case to determine what saws are out of the case or out of stock, thus making it much easier to keep a complete stock. If it becomes necessary to sell or remove a saw from the samples, the panel to which samples are attached may be swung open when the door is open. Samples may be removed and replaced instantly and without the use of tools.

"Subsequently a change has been made in the arrangement of stock on the inside panels of the doors. The upper part of the left-hand door is now arranged to carry at least six each of three or more patterns of coping saws. Metal pockets are provided in which to carry extra blades. A similar arrangement on the right-hand door takes care of hack saw frames and blades. Metal pockets are provided that will hold a half gross of hack saw blades of each length, from 8 to 12 inches. By carrying a quantity of coping and hack saws and extra blades in this manner, the goods may be delivered from the case, thus saving both salesman's and customer's time.

"These cases are made in one size only. They are 5 feet wide, 4 feet 8 inches high and 15 inches deep. They are shipped complete, with devices in place for attaching the hand or other saws with similar handles."

In most general stores the different types of saws are very much scattered; some are kept in drawers, others in original packages in various parts of the place. Often much time is wasted in looking up a particular saw, all of this is obviated by this saw case or cabinet, an origination of self-evident utility. It is a well-known saying that a great many goods are sold by suggestion. Such a display of a handsome line would be most effective, especially so in a general store.

Ready-Mixed Paints for Decorating Interiors.

Supplementing what has already appeared in this department bearing on paints—ready mixed, of course—for the benefit of the general storekeeper handling goods of this kind, information regarding the simple treatment of interiors by "home talent" will not be amiss. From a chapter on "Modern and Artistic Interiors," published by John Lucas & Co., the following suggestions are taken and which will be of use where questions pertaining to the subject may be asked the salesman or manager in their hardware annex:—

The first impression of a room depends upon the walls. In fact, rooms are either good or bad, agreeable or ugly, in exact accordance with the wall-quality and treatment. No richness of floor coverings, draperies or furniture can minimize their influence. Beautiful, pleasing and artistic walls and ceilings are not principally dependent upon the amount of money spent. In fact, large and extravagant expenditures for interior decorating too frequently result in over-ornamentation and too much show. Simplicity is the foundation of all really effective interior decoration. And simplicity is not costly and is easily attained.

Simplicity means the use of solid tints and colors on the walls and ceilings. These solid and plain colors form a pleasing and attractive background, and are suited to either large or small rooms, and give interiors a luxurious and restful charm and dignity, which is lacking where walls and ceilings are a mass of ornaments, flowers or set figures and lines.

Wall paper is being eliminated in modern interior decorating for sanitary reasons, says the same authority. There is but one excuse for wall paper—its convenience. Dirt cannot be removed from it; and the surface of, as well as under the paper, often becomes a menace to health. Much is heard now of wall finish or calcimine which is durable, washable and perfectly sanitary. This is a perfect covering for interior walls—plaster, paper, wood, metal, bur lap, canvas, cement or concrete. It dries absolutely flat (without gloss), producing the soft effects of a water color or calcimine. It is far in advance of calcimine because it can be scrubbed and washed without injury, removing dirt, grease and grime quickly, leaving a clean, fresh beautiful surface. Besides it is thoroughly sanitary, as it contains no lead or offensive glue.

Boots Shoes Findings

Latest Wrinkles in Women's Footwear.

Manufacturers may be busy figuring on their fall lines, and shipping samples of their goods to merchants for making up their stock orders, but still changes continually appear for present time sale. An infinite variety of boots and shoes is fashionable now. They show a refinement of finish and lines that are taken advantage of to the full by the women's short skirts. Consequently it is only natural that women should accord a very important place in the toilette to their footwear. The vamps are still long, but not sufficiently so to spoil the line of the foot.

Many of the boots which are now worn a great deal in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and at the fashionable resorts have the vamp of light cloth or gabardine in tan or gray. Sometimes even the heels are covered with the same material; this idea, although not very practical, is quite pretty. For morning wear laced shoes are very popular. They are made to come well up on the leg and have the top irregular in form. Shoes of this kind were fashionable forty years ago, and their return in favor has a rather "rococo" effect. It is hardly probable that this model will be generally favored, for it is too conspicuous. The popularity of leatherless and rubber or other flexible soled shoes this season is marked, and it is fair to run far into the fall.

Clever Shoe Selling Plan.—How a Merchant Revived His Business.

Plans for increasing the sales in the shoe department of a general store, especially one in which business has unaccountably fallen off, are to be carefully considered before final rejection. There are so many elements entering into the profitable management of the shoe annex that not infrequently the very keynote of a selling scheme may be overlooked or disregarded in its practical application. Here is a case in point where a store a few years ago began to lose its hold. Trade fell off constantly. The store carried a full line of standard, medium grade and even a fairly good stock of high-priced shoes made up under the name of the "boss." Capable salesmen were employed, and its advertising was quite forceful. But the old trade dropped away, for some reason or other.

When the situation was laid before the shoe manufacturer he told the storekeeper to advise with a well-known sales manager—a man who made a business of going into big factories and wholesale houses and putting their sales work on an organized, definite basis. A deal was closed and this expert spent a month in the store. He knew nothing about fitting feet—but he knew a good deal about the men and women who had yet to be fitted. He laid out a complete canvass that every salesman in the store was obliged to follow. It was based on this theory:—

People come here and buy shoes. They get the usual line of talk from the salesman. They get good shoes; but they pay a higher price than elsewhere. Now, why should they come back? We can't give them any better shoes, or any more shoes for their money. Then, what more can we give that will furnish a motive for coming back? How can we arouse the motive of desire for gain? We clearly understood that it was the customers' thoughts he had to influence more than their feet the sales-organizer built up a canvass which did not actually require a single word to be spoken by the salesman. Of course, the men talked more or less, but no words were laid down for them.

The salesman was required to take off the customer's shoe, get the size and an idea of the style desired. Ordinarily the next step would have been to bring out a few pairs of shoes and make a try-on. Not so. The salesman must examine the foot carefully. He must span the width with his fingers. Lift the foot up, and put one hand on the sole and one on the top, as though getting its contour well in mind. Then he lays it on the floor and asks his customer to put his weight on it. Feels of each joint, squeezes the heels of the toes and presses upward on the arch. All this before he has made a single move towards actually fitting it.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"DELICO, the DOUBLE DESSERT, makes TWO flavors per package and makes twice as much per package as any other jelly powder. Try it."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants.

At this point the salesman straightens up and looks at the foot critically—then examines the other foot. The customer is watching and begins to feel that an expert is fitting him; and that he never had such careful attention before. The salesman then goes to the shelves for shoes. He brings back only one. Does not put it on the customer's foot, but just compares the foot and shoe with his eye. Then returns it to the shelf and brings back another. This one he tries on, but with the same excess of carefulness as he used in his examination. When the salesman pronounces the customer's foot fitted it generally goes. And the customer goes out with the shoes feeling that he has, indeed, received big value for his money.

Other details were laid down in the selling plan—such as handling subsequent sales to the same customer to the same salesman; and the allowance of little by-plays about shoes in general if the salesman had any ingenuity of invention; but this one idea alone was enough to completely alter the sales record of each man and to put the store on a successful basis again in this department. As a matter of fact, the shoe sales have increased every year since. The suggestions detailed can easily be incorporated in the selling methods of every general store handling shoes and its very simplicity proves its effectiveness.

Hamilton Corporation Sues Grocers' Association for $75,000.

Suit for $75,000 damages has been filed in the United States District Court at Portland, Ore., by the Hamilton Corporation, which distributes the Hamilton coupon, against the Portland Retail Grocers' Association. The coupon concern charges that the members of the association have been making an active campaign against the Hamilton coupon system, and that it has been damaged to the extent of $25,000, suit being brought for three times the amount of the damage as allowed under the Oregon law. The suit has been brought against the association, President John Malley, Vice-President J. C. Mann, Secretary Keckenyes, Treasurer Dan Kellaher, the directors of the association and Dwight Edwards and E. F. Douglas as individuals.

Sharpsburg, Ky., July 15, 1914.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed find circular of 5, 10 and 25-cent sale which begins to-morrow. Mailing out a big bunch of them.

Yours truly, O. H. KNIGHT.

The circular inclosed measured 12 x 19 inches, and was printed in black on rather poor paper. The paper was soft and spongy and made it hard to do good presswork—it absorbs ink like a blotter. Mr. Knight ought to tell his printer to use better paper. Here is the reduced reproduction of the circular:—

It seems to me I should have divided this circular into three parts, headed one "What Five Cents Will Buy," another "What Ten Cents Will Buy," and the third "What Twenty-five Cents Will Buy," separating the various offerings and putting them under their proper headings. In the store the stock should be arranged in the same way, on 5, 10 and 25-cent tables, so that nobody would have to ask the price of one of these special articles. In the circular the 5, 10 and 25-cent goods have been put more or less together. In a sale like this there is a great deal in pre-sending to the reader a clear picture or analysis of the event. Jumbling three classes of offerings together does not give this, but dividing them clearly into their proper classes would do it.

Another way I think Mr. Knight could have improved the force of his advertising is by naming the regular or usual prices on everything he offers. He says these are special bargains, and then he stops. He does not show, by giving the regular price, how good the gains they are. "Long handle iron spoons, 10 cents." Well, what of it? What is specially important about long handle iron spoons for 10 cents? Is it the fact that this identical spoon has never been sold below 15? Or is it the average 10-cent iron spoon is not as good as this? If the answer is worth anything, it must be one or the other of these reasons—not tell it? Occasionally through this circular this has been done, but not uniformly. In fact mostly it has been done. I can judge of the effect of this upon myself. Although I am a seasoned advertising man, I am as much interested in real bargains as anybody—though perhaps I demand to be shown more than people not in the business and I know that if anybody advertises a "great bargain in a silk shirt for $5" it makes but a faint impression, if it is said in a different way, say, this: "Here is one of the greatest gains in silk shirts we have even had—a shirt that never, so far as we know, sold below $5, for $3. Whether you believe in bargains or not, don't miss this," it has probably gotten me good. Or if it simply said "regular value, $5, it would have more impression than it merely offered itself as a "great bargain."

BURK'S Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

CCLXIX.—The Danger of Giving Accommodation Notes.

By a peculiar coincidence I have requests from two correspondents, one in Pennsylvania and the other in Kentucky for an opinion as to whether they can be held liable upon promissory notes which they gave merely as an accommodation. The two cases differ somewhat as to their facts, but the fundamental principle is the same in both. In fact, the real core of both cases is the same, and can be thus stated:

A is a man of substantial financial responsibility. B is a man who has neither financial responsibility nor credit, though his honesty is unquestioned. B, needing money in a business venture, and being unable to raise it, asks A to indorse his (B's) note or to give B his own (A's) note, so that B can take it to the bank and raise money on it. B pays A nothing for this service—A does it merely as a favor. The note or the indorsement—it makes no difference to the principle involved—is given and discounted. B fails to have the money to meet the note, as he expected and promised to do, and when it matures the bank gives A notice that he will be looked to for payment. A now begins to look around for some way of escape. Is he liable on the note? Does the fact that no consideration passed between A and B absolve A from liability?

The above statement of the case fits both of the inquiries which have come to me, and fits many other cases which are constantly arising. The notes which figure here are what are known as accommodation notes, and in some States the law governing them is radically different from the law governing ordinary promissory notes, particularly in one point. In the States mentioned—there are four—the law of accommodation notes is much more severe on the maker or indorser than it is on the maker or indorser of an ordinary promissory note, and I observe that for that and general reasons an accommodation note is a bad thing to make or to give. Unless he simply cannot avoid it, no man should give his note, as a pure favor, to another man to be hawked about the market.

An accommodation note is practically a loan of credit. I ask a man of better financial standing than I am to loan me his written name in order that I may get money or credit that I cannot get upon my own name. When I get that name, in the form of a note, I pass it on to somebody else, who gives me something for it—usually money or the equivalent, or credit. This somebody else is then the holder of the note, and if when it is due it is not paid, he can compel the maker—the man who accommodated me with the loan of his credit—to pay every cent. This notwithstanding no consideration passed, and that my friend did the thing merely as a favor. I could not personally hold the note until maturity, however, and then compel the maker to pay it. He could at once get me out of court by showing that I had paid no consideration for the note and therefore had no right to recover anything on it. But when the note passes to a third person the absence of consideration makes no difference—the note has then done precisely what it was intended to do—raised money for me. A third party can collect from the maker, even though he knew when he took it that it was an accommodation note.

The point in which in some States the law is harder on the maker of an accommodation note than on the maker of an ordinary promissory note, is this:—

Consider a case where A gives B an ordinary promissory note. For some reason or other A finds that he has a perfect defense against the payment of the note, and he decides that when B demands payment he, A, will refuse it and defend on that ground. B, however, before it is due, transfers the note to C, who knows nothing about A's defense against B, and when the note is not paid C sues A.

A will now have to pay, because he cannot introduce into C's suit his defense against B, for the reason that C is an innocent third party for value received.

Now suppose B had waited until the note was past due before he transferred it to C. In that case A could have made against C the same defense he could have made against B, because transfer after maturity opens that door.

But in four of the States the law is different when an accommodation note is transferred after maturity. In Illinois, Maine, Maryland and New Jersey, I, whom somebody has accommodated by giving me a note, can wait until after it is past due, and then transfer it to somebody, and he can collect it from the maker, though I could not have done so, either before maturity or after. Furthermore, he can collect it even though he has express notice from me that the note was merely an accommodation note.

Happily in all the other States the law is different. There the transfer of an accommodation note, after it is due, is precisely on the same footing with the transfer of an ordinary promissory note after it is due: If the person transferring it after maturity could not himself collect it from the maker, for any reason, then the person to whom it is transferred cannot either.

Giving accommodation paper is risky enough in any State, but in the above four States it is so risky that only a very foolish man will do it. It is risky everywhere because it will very likely compel you to pay a debt that you do not owe.

The maker of an accommodation note, or a man who endorses one as an accommodation, can always revoke his act while the note remains in the hands of the person accommodated, and the latter can always be compelled to give the paper back before he has made any use of it. Or it will be revoked automatically by the accommodation maker's or endorser's death, while the note is still in the accommodation party's hands. If anybody takes the note from the accommodation party, after the maker's death knowing it was an accommodation note, he cannot collect from the maker's estate. He can collect, however, if he did not know it was an accommodation note, even though he knew of the death.

The law is also different here from the law of ordinary promissory notes. Any third party who gets a promissory note after the maker's death can recover upon it just the same, always provided that the maker gave it in the regular way while he lived.

(Copyright, July, 1914, by Elton J. Buckley.)

Question: M. L. G., Copley, Pa.—I bought five dozen brooms, but same were never received at the freight station. The company bought of is now trying to make me pay for them. Can they do so?

Answer.—This depends on how the brooms were bought. If they were bought f. o. b. the seller's station, you to pay the freight, the seller can collect from you if he delivered the brooms to the railroad company, provided he did not deliver to some railroad you told him not to. That is because the contract only compelled him to deliver to his station and when he delivered to the railroad there, the law considers that he is delivering to you for the railroad is considered as your agent. In this case you must make the claim for loss upon the railroad.

But if the brooms were sold delivered to you, the seller cannot collect unless he delivers. In that event the fact that the brooms have not appeared at the freight station is a complete defence.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letter should be received at this office no later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

More Bad Prospects for French Sardines.

Year it is a Strike Among the fishermen. Well-known Importer says There Are Plenty of Fish, But they Cannot Be Canned, and the outlook is for Small Supply and continued High Prices.

al Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, July 23, 1914.

The American Consul in the sardine-producing district of France reports to Washington that thousands of fishermen have gone on strike along the coast, and the men employed in the sardine canneries have gone on a strike in sympathy with the fishermen. The relations between the fishermen and the sardine canners are of long standing. This is rather an unfortunate state of affairs which has lasted for quite a long time. There are plenty of fish on the coast of Brittany, and lots of French sardines could be packed if the fishermen and the sardine canners could come to terms, but it seems impossible. These fishermen are unfashioned and stubborn people. They will catch only a certain amount of fish, being afraid that if they brought a larger quantity to market that the price for the fresh fish would come down. They prefer to throw the good catches overboard than to bring them ashore. Naturally the price for sardines is high and the supply very scarce. The French Government, appealed by the canners, has tried to bring about a satisfactory settlement, but so far their efforts have been unsuccessful. The American Consul confirms the report that we received by cable a few days ago that practically every large sardine cannery in North Brittany is closed, and just now when the catching of sardines should be at its height. Under the circumstances there is very little chance of bringing over very many French sardines.

the meanwhile Portuguese sardines, packed in French manner, are taking the place of the French sardines to some extent.

A Piece of Blamed Hard Luck.

Here's something I think you fellows ought to know. It happened right under my own nose, so for once I know what I'm talking about. There's a lot of lessons in the thing—maybe I'll point 'em out and maybe I won't. It depends on how much paper I've got left after I'm through telling it.

Out at a certain hotel last month there was a bunch of road men camping over night. I was one of 'em. Some of them might have called me the handsomest gent present, some others might not. It depends on how good eyes they had, but that ain't either here nor there.

We was sitting in the smoking room after supper chewing things over—two of us was asleep—when one fellow happened to bring up a man's name we all sell and are all glad to sell. I ain't going to even hint where he is for he's had enough dirt handed to him.

"Have any of you fellows got on to Jones' new cashier?" this salesman said.

Jones got this dame last November and she was sure the dame for the retail business. She was a flirty little thing—ate up salesmen as fast as she could put salt on 'em. Not that she ever did anything to me. I suppose she saw from my face that we couldn't ever be any more than friends.

Well, pretty near all the bunch had sized her up as a flip little peach, but that was all. All the same, they threw her name around pretty regardless, and all of 'em seemed to think that any boy who wanted to could take her out and cut up about as he liked with her.

"I wonder if Jones gets fresh with her," somebody says, and right there it began. They chewed that over, too, and when they got through they had it all fixed up that Jones and that girl were wearing each other's shoes. One of 'em said

"I'll bet that's all he got her in there for, too."

I don't know what else they doped out on nothing, for I went to bed. I hadn't said much, because I had a bad tooth and I felt like slapping mother in the face.

Now, as I say, that's where it started, in the windy gab of that bunch of salesmen who didn't have one blamed thing to go on, mind you, except that Jones had a new cashier that liked to chin with the boys.

Jones ain't been exactly rolling in good luck for the last year. Oh he's good enough, but most of his money's been tied up, and he's been slow. A month ago he wrote everybody he owed and asked for six months' time. My house, unbeknown to me—I was off on another trip—said he couldn't have it. I didn't get on to it until I got back last week and then I went straight to the credit man.

"Old man," I said, "why in thunder did you turn Jones down? He'll work out all right if you give him a little time. Why if you push him now you'll bust him! All the others agreed to give him time."

"I don't care a (you know) what the others did!" said our popular and polite credit man, "when a business man gets mixed up with light women he can't get any favors from me. I can see his finish too plain."

"What in holy hen are you talking about?" I said. "Jones is as straight as a pump!"

"I got it direct that he was mixed up with some girl in his store all the same—cashier or something—and was carrying on with her something fierce. Even the salesmen are talking about it. Say his wife's going to sue him for divorce. When he asks me for an extension just after I hear that, he has a swell chance of getting it, believe me!"

"Well, it ain't so," I said. "Where did you hear any such stuff?" Oh, he'd heard some other credit men talking about it at a meeting or something.

Now, I'll bet a thousand dollars—wait a minute till I get it out—there 'tis. I'll bet that thousand bones that that guff about Jones being in with his cashier never had anything to it at all outside of the fool gabble that that bunch of salesmen did that night in the hotel. I'll bet more if there's anybody with sand enough to cover it. I can just see how the dirty thing started. Some of those fellows carried it away that night and spoke of it to some more, and they did the same, and by George, before they got through they had poor old Jones blame near divorced from his wife! By the great holy cruller, did you ever hear of such a thing?

Maybe he never so much as looked at the girl!

Pretty soon the thing got back to the men's houses and you saw what it did with my house. Our credit man was right—you can't afford to take any chances with business men that fling around after skirts, specially skirts in their own stores. When they start to do that, anything can happen, and a credit man who's on the job keeps safe. Sure, he might have looked into it a little more before he put his foot down, but while he was putting his foot down Jones might have busted.

I suppose that's the way he looked at it.

Now wait till I tell you how it turned out.

Jones didn't bust—that is, he ain't busted yet and I'll bet all I've got he don't. Everybody else gave him the six months, so he raised the money and paid us off. See? The house has lost a customer, and so have I. I won't dare ever show my unhappy mug again in the store I've sold goods to for thirteen years. Ain't that the very devil?

Just because a bunch of bla fools got together one night and started something. By gum, I think it's scandalous!

I suppose somebody might. Jones put up the whole thing himself by getting in a girl like that. Well, there is something that, though not enough by itself, blamed sight to cover all he's handed to him. If I had a retail store I wouldn't hire the peachiest peach that ever lived for a dollar a week, if she was one of the flirts kind. The darned things are always starting something. That's where Jones got in wrong. But the same, that ain't any excuse for blowing out a lot of hot air that may burn a hole in his credit. I credit is where a fellow lives, take it from me. If you ain't got that by gum, you ain't got anything.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Mr. Smedley visited Pittsburgh, Johnstown and several other points in the Western end of the State during the past week.

The Reading Retail Grocers' Association will send a large delegation to the Philadelphia convention.

Sixty representatives from every branch of mercantile endeavor in the town of Birdsboro met at the Friendship Hall on Wednesday, July 15th, and confirmed the formation of the Birdsboro Business Men's Association. R. Huyett presided and G. W. Lacey acted as secretary. Addresses were made by William Smedley, State organizer; Dr. Hetrich, chief burgess; A. Deeter, ex-president Retail Grocers' Association of Reading; R. H. H. Bogert, of the Episcopal Church of Birdsboro; Dr. Amar and the following Reading merchants: Edward Clammer and C. K. Fisher. Sherrad Ewing, secretary of the Reading Chamber of Commerce, made a splendid talk on the work of organization. The association will apply for admission to the State association. The following visitors were present from Reading: E. M. Clammer, A. Heist, Sherrad Ewing, A. J. Achenbrenner, A. S. Deeter, J. Sheneman, E. H. Kramer, Charles Yeager, Edward Hassler, J.

eppler and W. C. K. Fisher. Constitution and by-laws will be adopted at the next meeting. Plans being made for aggressive work.

Merchants of Kutztown have appointed a committee to arrange for a banquet in the near future.

Mr. Smedley has sent out the following personal letter to all secretaries of local associations:—

Dear Secretary:—This is a personal request to you to help me get a big attendance at the next convention, to be held September 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th at Philadelphia.

I have worked hard this year to revive interest in association work. I have succeeded in becoming mighty interested in the work, and in an experience of over 30 years in association work, I never had a harder year, nor a more pleasant one. I have traveled thousands of miles, made visits to over 100 associations and have organized a lot of new ones. Thousands of new members have been added to the associations. Our State Association is on the map.

Now to get back to the convention. We want a big attendance. I have predicted there will be at least 500 visitors, and I am hoping that there will be 1,000. Philadelphia is ready for you. Good talks by good talkers, splendid discussions, lots of entertainment and a hearty welcome await you.

Now to the point. Won't you help get this big attendance? You can do it and you are the only man in your association to do it. Start at once to arouse an interest among your members in the convention. Any member who attends the convention will be a better member of your organization. Experience has proven this. Then, every visitor and delegate from your association will count big for you in securing an award under the Pennsylvania Plan.

Now, please, Mr. Secretary, won't you help yourself and help me by bringing to Philadelphia the largest attendance of retailers ever gathered together in convention? Everything possible for the comfort, entertainment and edification of our guests will be provided. What we want is a big attendance. Won't you help? How many can we expect?

C. M. Wessels, author of the Pennsylvania Plan, was a guest at the week-day luncheon of the Pittsburgh Publicity Association on July 1st. By request he delivered an address on the "Pennsylvania Plan."

Cocoanut Display.

Just now we sell about twice as much cocoanut as at any other time. Picnic time means plenty of home-made cocoanut cakes. Make a window display of it. To arrange this one: First cover the bottom of the window with brown crepe paper, a light shade looks best. Along the front place a neat sign card, with the words as in cut. Cover the two cheese boxes with the brown crepe paper, turn the rim of the lid up. Place paper napkins around it so that the corners hang over. Cut some of the brown crepe paper in strips about one inch wide, tack around the rim of the lid, twist and tack to the bottom of the window. Fill the lids with loose shredded cocoanut. In the center, in the rear, build a pile of fresh cocoanuts. At each side place pyramids of cocoanut in different size boxes. Across the window, in the bottom, at the rear, place some of the brown crepe paper. Finish at the top with twisted strips of the same.

Japan Tea.

Tea is always a good article to use for a neat and attractive window trim. This is a neat one and not very hard to arrange. You are always sure of doubling your sales by having attractive windows. To arrange: First cover the bottom of the window with green crepe paper. In the center, in front, place a sign card, with the words as in illustration. At each side display loose tea on paper napkins. Make a little summer house, with four small saplings for side posts; they should be about four feet high; use some heavy wire to form the curved Japanese roof. Cover the top with red crepe paper. Fasten a Japanese lantern at each corner, place an electric light in each one. On the bottom, in the center, place a Japanese grass rug. Cover a corn box with figured crepe paper and place a little tea set on it. At the sides display tea in different size boxes. Make a little rustic fence at the rear, at each side, and back of it place a large number of paper chrysanthemums. Cover the entire window at the rear with sky blue crepe paper.

Jobbers Show President Wilson Faults in Proposed Clayton Bill to Regulate Business

Delegates From Various Associations Have Audience Last Wednesday and Discuss Measure. Point Out Legitimate Reasons for Cutting Prices and For Selling Some Buyers Cheaper Than Others. Argue For Exclusive Selling Arrangements Between Manufacturers and Dealers.

Staff Correspondence of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World"

Washington, D. C.,

July 31, 1914.

By prearrangement President Wilson on Wednesday last received a delegation from several wholesalers' associations in different lines at the executive offices to present their views on current business conditions. This was the first opportunity that the wholesale interests of the country had in this capacity, and therefore great importance is attached to the visit. High hopes are entertained that it will result in great advantage, not only to the members, but to the distributors throughout the country. Eight jobbers' associations were represented by thirty delegates, including the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association and the National Hardware Association. Calvin M. Smyth, of Young, Smyth, Field Co., president of the dry goods body, of which he is president, with several Baltimore members; and J. E. Baum, president of the Supplee-Biddle Hardware Co., together with a half dozen other members from Cleveland, Pittsburg and elsewhere, for the hardware organization, were among those present. The President received them in his customary pleasant manner and gave close attention to the statement presented by Mr. Smyth, on behalf of his colleagues and the interests they were connected with. As a preliminary the speaker explained who they were, and the purpose of the call and then stated its object and reason as follows:—

Mr. President.—This body is composed of officers and delegates from trade associations of wholesalers doing business in the various parts of the country, from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf.

The business houses, comprised of the membership of these organizations, are firms and corporations of medium size, being free from any entangling alliances with trusts or other similar corporations which tends to enjoy a monopoly of the trade in the products which they handle.

We are merchants buying under great competition and selling under competitive conditions which are quite keen.

Our sympathies are with you as President, and it is our earnest desire to render you every assistance possible in the conduct of your high office, so that the interests of the public may be properly protected and promoted.

To come quickly to the object of our visit, we wish to commend the efforts which you are making to lessen the area of uncertainty which surrounds some of the present legislation affecting commercial interests. Business men have suffered from a lack of positive information as to the legality or illegality of many acts and there has been natural hesitation because of this uncertainty.

With regard to the establishment of a trade commission it has been our belief that a bill providing for the establishment of a commission to which business men could submit propositions before putting them into effect, would serve to better advantage than a body who would merely investigate and order suspension of acts already committed. It is accordingly our hope that such trade commission may be established, for universal expressions of all these associations has been that they wish to have their actions fully in accord with the letter and spirit of the law and they would heartily welcome the establishment of some tribunal which would assist in the effort to serve the public in proper ways under approved methods.

Clause II of the Clayton Bill, now pending in the United States Senate, contains a clause which, insofar as it applies to price discrimination by trusts or by those who seek to monopolize the trade, we fully concur; and it is our firm belief that the practice of selling at low prices for the purpose of injuring a competitor or creating a monopoly is wrongful and should be punished to the fullest extent. In fact, it is our belief that several of the pernicious trusts have been found guilty of engaging in those practices with the purpose and intent of injuring the business of a competitor, and they have been punished under the terms of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law for such wrongful acts.

Therefore, insofar as Clause II is concerned, as applied to trusts and monopolies, it has our approval, but there are numerous cases where a merchant in the ordinary conduct of business finds it necessary to quote a lower price in one section of the country than in another. We cite such reasons as, a need for turning over stock into cash; credit conditions, such as the taking of a greater risk in connection with one account than another, and the addition of a small percentage to cover the greater risk.

A full consideration of Clause II has led us to the conclusion that its enforcement as at present constituted, might result in harm to the business of the average small merchant, be he wholesaler or retailer, and that it might lead to hamper his action in competition with the great corporations. Therefore, this clause which appears to be expressly aimed at trusts would include individual business concerns which are in no sense trusts, and the result would be to "cripple" these concerns when Congress undoubtedly aims to leave their legitimate activities entirely unimpaired, so they might enjoy the greatest freedom in competition.

Many of those whom we represent enjoy exclusive selling arrangements, which would be destroyed by Clause IV of the Clayton Bill. Manufacturers often find it advisable to establish exclusive agency arrangements with the dealers for the purpose of inducing a dealer to carry a full and complete line of their goods in stock, where he would not do so were he not to be assured of a fair volume of trade in that particular commodity, sold under exclusive selling arrangements. Where there are no exclusive selling arrangements, merchants feel less interested in maintaining a complete stock, with the result that three or four merchants may have an incomplete assortment and the interest of the public suffer through their inability to secure the goods which they want.

Those who have exclusive selling arrangements, for merchandise, invariably carry a good stock, for they are interested in keeping the customer satisfied with the goods, and in such lines as machinery, they invariably carry a stock of parts for machines for which they are agents. If it is made unlawful for these exclusive selling arrangements to exist, it will destroy valuable agencies for the firm and complete service for the public. It is entirely within our knowledge that exclusive selling arrangements have some time been made by trusts for the purpose of preventing competing manufacturers from doing business with wholesalers.

It is our opinion that the purpose of Section IV, insofar as it is directed toward the prevention of a monopoly, is most commendable; but that, in its present form, it is not limited to that purpose, but made to comprehend other transactions of the nature described, even though such transactions were made in good faith to meet competition and to carry out legitimate purposes in the interest of the consuming public.

The Senate Judiciary Committee made an amendment, as reported by them on July 22d, to Section II, which permits discrimination in price made in good faith to meet competition and not intended to create a monopoly. Possibly a similar amendment could be made to Section IV, so that the transactions mentioned shall be considered unlawful only where they are conducted for the purpose of creating a monopoly.

In closing we wish to call your attention to the fact that we are members of that class sometimes slightly referred to as middlemen. There are those who sneer at the term "middlemen," thinking only of two facts, viz.: the manufacturer and the consumer. It is at once admitted by us that the consumer is king and the manufacturer is a person of great importance; but to "bridge the gap" between the two, and to supply the goods wanted at the time and in the quantity and place desired at a fair price, is our part of the transaction.

The American market is probably the most complex in the world, occupying the largest economically high-grade area under one political control with uniform trade customs, laws and language. It is the effort of the middlemen whom we represent to gather together in their warehouses the goods of hundreds of manufacturers and to maintain constant supply for distribution in small quantities to the retail trade which supplies the consumer.

If the manufacturer were to endeavor to perform the service of distribution to the consumer, he would be confronted with great expense and the ultimate cost to the consumer would be far greater than through the dealer, with added fact that great inconvenience would result and serious loss ensue by reason of the absence of the convenient dealer. The facts and figures concerning the value of the service which is performed can readily be given and would surprise many of those who have criticised the value of the service which we perform without having complete facts in their possession.

When Mr. Smyth finished President stated briefly that there was no intention on his part or of the administration to disturb business. The legislation pending on the subjects referred to was being carefully considered and would be enacted into law as expeditiously as possible considering their importance. In fact, he made a formal statement of his opinion regarding the entire commercial situation—previously prepared and no reply to Mr. Smyth's statement. The President, among his other observations, emphasized these words:

I just want to leave the thought with you that we are not running "amuck." We are trying to close this era of suspicion and of recrimination by putting in the law what the moral judgment of the community has said ought to be there.

At a meeting on Tuesday preceding the Washington trip the various associations had a conference, which the Clayton bill and Trade Commissions bill were discussed and several amendments suggested, which were embodied in Mr. Smyth's statement. As to the scope of legislation with respect to those to whom it will apply, it was felt by the meeting to be essential that any or all legislation looking toward the establishment of a Trade Commission and the regulation of trade and commerce should apply equally to corporations, partnerships and those doing business in their individual capacity, so that such legislation would cover any and all types of business.

Help us make the Grocer the family Milkman

Everyone of your customers now pays the milk peddler $3.00 per month (some pay much more) which ought to go to you. You must supply their sugar and get very little profit out of it. There is no reason why you shouldn't supply their milk for you can give them better service—and clean, sweet, pure milk—and you can make money doing it. You can switch the milk trade to your store by building up a sale on

PRESIDENT SMYTH'S POST IMPRESSION OF THE PRESIDENTIAL INTERVIEW.

When Calvin M. Smyth was seen in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Thursday morning, after returning from Washington, he was asked about what was his impression regarding their call upon the President, he said:—

The President received us courteously and pleasantly, and listened closely and attentively to what we had to say. We felt he was interested, but in no way, by manner of words, did he commit himself one way or the other. In other words, we drew a blank. After I had made the formal statement for the entire wholesale industry, W. D. Taylor, president of the National Hardware Association, of Cleveland, spoke briefly on the Trade Commission Bill, and B. S. Binsinger, of Richmond and Memphis, representing the Glass Distributors' Association explained our attitude on the single price question, the President delivered his formal reply, which, of course, as you may note, is only a general expression of his views on the business situation at large, and in no sense an answer to what we had to say.

So far as the single price provision of the Clayton Bill is concerned, it is manifestly absurd to say that the same price should be quoted for merchandise to John Wanamaker, for instance, who buys in large quantities and whose credit is impeccable, and John Jones, who is an uncertain quantity in every mercantile respect. That is asking and demanding the impossible. You may have noticed that this clause of the Clayton Bill was not amended until the arrangements for our visit to Washington were completed. Our proposition in connection with the Trade Commission Bill, "authorizing and permitting persons or partnerships, which come within the provisions of that bill, to present to such a commission questions as to whether the business methods or practices employed or contemplated by such business or corporations, are or are not lawful," was promptly negated by the President. He objected very decidedly to the suggestion that the commission should decide what is a lawful or unlawful practice in business. That is, was opposed to giving an "immunity bath" in advance simply on application. That no law existed carrying such a questionable procedure, and he was not inclined to recommend any legislation of that character. On this point he was emphatic. Possibly it was not a wise suggestion on our part, knowing the rulings of the courts on this question, but then one can never tell what may happen until a recommendation is made. There was some desultory talk after the formal proceedings were closed, we asking some questions and the President replying and also making some inquiries. As I remarked before, my impression is we drew a blank, although the occasion was one not without results, broadly speaking.

Grist of Official Opinions on Vital Food Law Questions.

Extracts From Letters Sent by Department of Agriculture to Manufacturers and Packers Requesting Rulings on Various Phrases of Food and Labeling Laws.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

July 31, 1914.

The Department of Agriculture is constantly receiving requests for rulings and opinions as to certain labels and packages of food and drug products submitted to it. I have obtained copies of several of the opinions recently sent out, and present them here for general information. The Department's letters explain themselves:—

45. Misleading trade terms indicating sizes of containers must not be printed on labels.

The letter quoted below is in reply to a request for the criticism of a carton which contained 4 dozen cans of deviled ham and bore the following statements: In large type, "4 doz. 1/4 cans"; in smaller type, "Contents of each can, 3 oz."

Dear Sir:—While the requirements for branding as given in the regulations for the enforcement of the amendment of March 3, 1913, to the Food and Drugs Act (Food Inspection Decision No. 154) apply particularly to the small cans or units in the package, and the branding of the quantity of the contents upon packing cases containing a number of units branded in conformance with the law and the regulations is not obligatory (see Service and Regulatory Announcements No. 5, Letter 34), nevertheless if the packing cases are branded the statements must be in accordance with the requirements of the act.

The statement reading "4 doz. 1/4 cans" upon a package of cans containing 3 ounces is considered false and misleading and not in conformance with the requirements of the act, notwithstanding the further statement, made in smaller type, "Contents of each can 3 ozs."

Respectfully,

C. L. ALSBERG,
Chief.

46. Net weight of comb honey.

Dear Sir:—The net weight of comb honey is to be considered to be the weight of the honey and comb, exclusive of the wooden section. It is believed that the tare weight of these sections is easily ascertained and that the filled sections can be readily sorted into approximately similar weights which may be marked in accordance with paragraph h of Food Inspection Decision No. 154.

The individual units must be marked, and the shipping case may be if desired. The marking should be done previously to their introduction into interstate commerce.

While the regulations do not prescribe the manner of marking, as to whether a rubber stamp may be used, the law requires that the statement shall be plain and conspicuous. Stamping by means of aniline ink is frequently illegible, owing to failure to print or to the running of the ink. If such a stamp is used, care should be taken to make the statement plain and conspicuous, as required by the act.

Respectfully,
A. S. MITCHELL,
Secretary Committee on Regulations, Net Weight and Volume Law.

47. Oils of the nature of cottonseed oil should be marked in terms of volume.

Dear Sir:—Referring to your letter regarding the statement of the quantity of the contents upon cottonseed oil, you are informed that in the opinion of this department oils of the nature of cottonseed oil are not viscous substances under ordinary conditions within the meaning of the regulations. Cottonseed oil should, therefore, be considered as a liquid and marked in terms of volume, gallons, half gallons, quarts, pints and fractions thereof, or, if the quantity is less than one pint, in terms of fluid ounces.

Respectfully,
C. L. ALSBERG,
Chief.

48. The quantity of the contents must be marked in terms of the largest unit contained in the package.

Dear Sir:—Replying to your letter submitting copies of labels reading "— Brand, Weight of Contents 16 oz.," you are informed that the marking is not in conformance with the requirements of the regulations as laid down in Food Inspection Decision No. 154. Please note the requirement under paragraph d that the quantity of the contents shall be marked in terms of the largest unit contained in the package.

Respectfully,
A. S. MITCHELL,
Secretary Committee on Regulations, Net Weight and Volume Law.

49. Extension of time for the use of labels on which the quantity of contents is not marked in terms of the largest unit contained in the package.

Dear Sir:—Replying to your letter regarding the use of the expression "Contents 26 Fluid Ounces," for the marking of the quantity of the contents upon liquids, you are informed that the form of statement submitted does not comply with the requirements that the statement be made in terms of the largest unit contained in the package, which is in this case 1 pint.

The following decision has been reached by the department concerning labels where there was evident intent to comply with the requirements of the law:—

In order to prevent unnecessary destruction of labels and cartons which were printed before the issuance of Food Inspection Decision 154, the department has decided that, prior to June 1, 1915, it will not recommend proceedings solely upon the charge that the statement of the quantity of the contents on a package, if otherwise satisfactory, is not in the terms of the largest unit in the package, provided that upon investigation it is found that the labels or cartons bearing such statements were printed prior to May 11, 1914, and plainly indicate an honest attempt to comply with the provisions of the law.

Respectfully,
C. L. ALSBERG,
Chief.

50. Use of labels bearing alternative statements of contents not permissible.

Dear Sir:—Replying to your communication asking if it will be permissible to use one label at the same time for large and small bottles of liquids, the labels bearing a statement reading:—

"Contents: Large bottles, 28 oz.
Small bottles 14 oz."

you are informed that a statement of this character is not in compliance with the regulations and is not satisfactory. Each size of the should be labeled with a plain statement of the quantity of the contents in terms of the largest unit. The statement upon the large bottles should read "1 3/4 pints" or "1 pt. 12 fl. oz." and upon the small size "14 fluid ounces."

A. S. MITCHELL,
Secretary Committee on Regulations, Net Weight and Volume Law.

51. Statements of contents blown in bottles must be plain and conspicuous; statements on bottle caps are not considered conspicuous.

Dear Sir:—The Food and Drugs Act as amended by the act of March 3, 1913, provides that the quantity of the contents in the case of food in package form must be plainly and conspicuously marked on the outside of the package. Sub-division c of regulation 29, as amended (Food Inspection Decision 154) provides that "the statement of the quantity of the contents shall Important Change in Butler Bros.

Mr. Edward B. Butler, one of the founders of Butler Bros., the big jobbers of general merchandise, and its president for 25 years, has retired as president, but retains the newly created office of chairman of the Board of Directors. He does this to obtain more leisure for artistic pursuits, of which he has long been a devotee. Mr. Butler's successor is H. A. Stillwell, who went with the concern at the beginning of his career as a stock boy and has worked up to the presidency.

Convention Program About Completed. Sugar Futures May Become Regular Trading Features. Various Notes and Market Summary.

New York, July 30, 1914.

Indications are that trading in sugar futures will soon be regularly established on the floor of the New York Coffee Exchange and will become an important feature of the business of the Exchange. Copies of amendments to the By-Laws providing for trading in sugar futures have been sent to all of the members, who are to vote on these amendments August 21st. If the vote be favorable, as is expected, then trading in sugar will begin September 1st. Detailed regulations for the trading, with a form of contract, have already been prepared by the Board of Managers.

Sugar refiners are studying the new drawback rules issued by the Treasury Department. It is claimed by the Department that the rules are an improvement on the old regulations and will prove more fair to the refiners. It is likely, however, that the refiners will find some objectionable features, as they have always found occasion to offer more or less of criticism of the drawback methods of the Government.

In fact, it is said that the Federal Sugar Refining Co. will begin a suit in the courts to test the legality of the new regulations.

The principal issue, as in the past, is in relation to making the drawback depend on the selling price of the molasses or sugar that is exported. The refiners would prefer that the drawback be computed on the basis of the contents, the same as the customs duties are figured on sugar that is imported. But the Government takes the position that the molasses and sugar are by-products, and that the proper way is to base the drawback on the foreign selling price of such by-products.

The city's new Market Commission is about to begin its work of investigating and improving market facilities in the city. An examination will be conducted by the Municipal and Civil Service Commission of candidates for the position of secretary of the Market Commission, who will receive a salary of $4,000 a year. As soon as the secretary is selected, active work will begin, and it is expected that the results affecting the distribution of food products in the city will be of much importance to the trade and to the public.

Austin, Nichols & Co., have lost their case brought before the Board of United States General Appraisers on an assessment of duty at 40 per cent. on an importation of Spanish red peppers.

The Board, in its opinion, said that the question turned on the meaning of the term vegetables in the customs law and that in its opinion these peppers are vegetables. The Board said that the peppers are prepared by an elaborate process of manipulation, but are vegetables, used in connection with food products, and that the duty shall stand at 40 per cent.

Much sorrow is expressed on the West Side over the death of James E. Nichols, who was for many years head of the wholesale grocery house of Austin, Nichols & Co. In recent years he had been the vice-president of the Irving National Bank, located near the wholesale grocery district. He had continued a director in the grocery company of which he had long been the head.

Mr. Nichols died unexpectedly of heart disease in Marienbad, Austria.

He was born in Mercedith, N. H., April 23, 1845. He and others, in 1878, organized the firm of Austin, Nichols & Co., which became one of "the big four" in local jobbing houses and he continued the senior partner until 1901 when he retired, and the business was continued as a corporation.

The programme of the convention to be held in the Broadway Central Hotel in this city next week, from August 3d to 6th, has been completed.

The convention will be called to order Monday at 10.30 A. M. by President John Steeneck, of the New York City Association. There will be addresses of welcome and responses, after which the regular order of business will be taken up, beginning with the annual report of the president, Wm. Jeffery, Hornell.

Sessions will be held morning, afternoon and evening of the first day. Among the speakers will be Counselor W. H. Stienkamp, of the New York City Association, who will address the convention on "Business Laws and the Retail Grocer."

Frank W. Mendum, as a trustee of the National Association, will speak of the work that it is doing.

Fred. Mason, of the Shredded Wheat Co., will be the principal speaker of the evening, and he will discuss market problems of interest at this time, in a usual comprehensive way.

During the day reports will be heard from a number of the officers and committees. Opportunities will be given for general discussions by the members and this will be a feature of the proceedings each day.

Tuesday there will be an address by President John Steeneck, of the New York City Association, on an important subject: "The Maintenance of the Retail Selling Price, the Only Salvation of the Manufacturer and Distributor."

L. W. Winckelmann, Brooklyn, will report as the delegate to the last National convention.

The afternoon will be given up to a trip to Coney Island, on which all will be the guests of the New York City Association.

Wednesday morning there will be more committee reports. The speakers will include S. L. Stix, the first vice president of the New York State Wholesale Grocers' Association; C. Tuttle, Hornell, former president of the New York State Retail Grocers' Association, and R. H. Koehler, the counsel of the Brooklyn Association, who will speak on "The Workmen's Compensation Law."

Wednesday afternoon the city merchants will entertain their guests in a sight-seeing tour of the city. In the evening there will be a smoker in the hotel and drawing for a Royal electric coffee mill.

Thursday the final business session will be held and in the evening the convention will come to a close with the banquet to delegates and friends in the hotel.

Jobbers are still thinking most earnestly of the answer they will send to the letter received by them last week from the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes Co. The letter reads as follows:—

Gentlemen, shall we sell through the "chain stores"?

We want you, as one of our distributors, to help us decide the question at the head of this letter; the most important question relating to our selling policies that we have ever tried to solve.

Any jobber is blind who shuts his eyes to the increasing menace of the "chains"—a menace to your business far more than ours.

The letter, which is signed by W. K. Kellogg, goes on to ask the jobbers whether or not they believe it possible to compete with the "chain" stores? It asks each jobber individually just how many cases they think it possible to sell during the summer season.

While this letter had been sent throughout the country, it arouses unusual interest among the New York sellers. They want to be fair to the manufacturers. Your correspondent, after talking with many of them, has found that the average jobber would advise the manufacturer to sell direct to large retail dealers, providing, of course, they buy in sufficiently large quantities.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

In the spot coffee market the buying continues of a hand-to-mouth kind. The distributors are evidently waiting for the option market to settle down. Prices are inclined to be heavy. Rios 7s are quoted at $7\frac{3}{4}$ to $7\frac{7}{8}$ cents and Santos s at $11\frac{1}{4}$ to $11\frac{3}{4}$ cents.

Teas are not active. The trade is waiting for developments in the foreign situation and meantime is buying only for requirements. It is expected that the war panic will check importations temporarily. Prices are maintained and brokers say that there is not likely to be any weakness in view of the restricted supplies in the warehouses.

An improved demand for granulated sugar is reported. Withdrawals are in fair volume. In general, the trade is quiet. There is some expectation that the distributors will soon show more interest in refined sugar, as the war in Europe may have an effect on the beet crops, which may tend to reduce prices. The Federal has been booking considerable business at 4.25 cents for standard granulated and the other refiners continue to quote 4.40 cents.

There is little activity in rice, but the tone of the market is firm, reflecting conditions in the South. The policy of the distributors is to buy only in small lots as required until the movement of the river and Southwest crops. Bids are withheld on foreign rice because of the unsettled conditions of exchange, due to the war situation.

In spices the trade is inclined to hold off at present to await developments abroad. The inquiry is limited to small spot supplies for the needs from day to day. Holders have not withdrawn from the market, but shipment business is out of the question at present.

Molasses is dull. Prices are un-

WITH THE EDITOR

Some time or other the Federal food officials, good as their motives are, will get slapped in the face so hard that forever after they will be able to remember that court decisions are superior to technical theories.

Wanted—A Swift Slap in the Face.

Several weeks ago the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, the highest Court of Federal jurisdiction next to the United States Supreme Court, decided, after a hearing, that it was illegal for the Department of Agriculture to rule that sausage could not be sold if it contained more than 2 per cent. of cereal or more than 3 per cent. of water. The court said in substance that sausage with more than these percentages of cereal and water was a perfectly wholesome product and a legal one, provided no deceit was employed in its sale; in other words, that the seller did not represent that it contained less cereal or water than it did, or contained none at all.

A sound, fair, logical decision.

The Department of Agriculture now says it will not recognize this decision as being the law, except in the St. Louis district, where the court sat when it handed it down. In all other sections it will still forbid the sale of sausage containing more than 2 per cent. of cereal or more than 3 per cent. of water. We are waiting interestedly to see how far the Department will get with this. Its attitude would be perfectly justifiable had the decision been made by a State court, because the effect of a State court decision stops at the State borders. But the United States Court is a horse of another color. Its jurisdiction extends in a sense over the entire United States, and one Federal court practically follows the decisions of others, particularly the decisions of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. Unless there is something in this case which does not appear on the surface, any packer or dealer attacked by the Government from now on need only appeal to the United States Court and cite the St. Louis decision that "the Secretary of Agriculture has no power to prohibit the manufacture of sausage and cereal where the cereal is in excess of 2 per cent."

Is the plan to have the metric system of weights and measures adopted in this country in all our commercial transactions, making much headway? It may be, but if

Is the Metric Movement Growing?

C. M. Wessels Has No Connection With the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World"

Various papers are doing C. M. Wessels, president of the C. M. Wessels Co., advertising agents, a very serious injustice when they say, as a number of them have done recently, that he is a part owner of this paper. The purpose of the statement is to convict him of unfairness toward other members of the Grocery and Allied Trade Press, in the distribution of advertising, and to connect him with certain criticisms of the National Association of Retail Grocers' Associations published in this paper. Before he formed the Grocery and Allied Trade Press, Mr. Wessels was president of the Grocery World Publication Company and owned stock in this paper. Since he was representing all the members of the trade paper organization, however, he desired to be above every imputation of unfairness and partiality, and he resigned all connection with this paper and disposed of his stock holdings in it. Since that time he has been connected with it absolutely in no different way than he is connected with the other members of the Grocery and Allied Trade Press. This severance of relations meant a distinct business loss to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," but we respected Mr. Wessels' desire to be fair and therefore concurred in what he did.

At no time has Mr. Wessels showed the slightest partiality to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" in the matter of advertising. So far as we know we have gotten merely what we deserved upon the merits of the proposition. Why should he show partiality to this paper when he is paid by it precisely the same commission that other papers pay?

THE PUBLISHERS.

so it is hardly apparent. Mr. Drake, the Easton, Pa., wholesaler, is one of the leaders in the movement and he is at it early and late. Every National and local convention listens to an able paper by him on the subject, but nothing comes of it. Mr. Drake's papers are always interesting and highly convincing, but nobody seems to be very warm about the matter, and so nothing happens.

Is the plan a good one? We believe it is. Uniformity of conditions among countries and States trading together—uniformity of food and other laws, and of standards of weight and measure—would save an enormous amount of trouble. The metric system is in use in most of the countries that send us goods. Translating their metric terms into our own is a time-consuming nuisance and opens the way to inaccuracy.

But making the standards uniform is no small job. It means revolution and education, both of which are more than usually difficult in this case because nobody is very warm about the thing. There seems to be no public demand for the change. Such a thing must be done completely and generally if at all. It can not be done gradually. No American packer in complying with a net weight law could, for instance, express his contents in metric weight to-day, for he would be violating the law. His act would be looked on as a fraud and a subterfuge. There can hardly be piecemeal in the change. We must first get proper laws and then all move together.

Thank God, Retailers, You Are Not Tied Up With Labor Unions

Retail grocers and general storekeepers should thank God every day of their lives that their business is not tied up with labor unions or with any phase of the organization of labor. If labor unionism ever enters the domain of retail merchandising, retail grocers and general storekeepers will confront a trade evil beside which all the present ones will seem like trifles.

Before me lies the text of an agreement which the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen and Helpers is endeavoring to have Philadelphia jobbers accept. I suppose it has also been submitted to jobbers elsewhere. The organization has not yet threatened a strike if the agreement is not accepted, but in every such situation there is always that probability.

There are seven "rules" in the new agreement, some of which are unobjectionable. The first fixes $11 as the minimum wage for a single team driver and $13 for a double team driver. Certainly there is nothing exorbitant about that. Rule 2 fixes 66 hours as a week's work, which is 11 hours a day for six days a week. I work longer than that myself, but I don't believe other men ought to. That is a very reasonable provision.

Here is Rule 3:—

That none but members of the I. B. of T. C. S. & H. with paid up cards shall be employed. Union men shall have preference at all times when employing new men. When no union men are available, new men may be employed, but they must join the union after one week's work.

In other words, personal fitness for a job is not the criterion, but "does a man belong to the union?" If two candidates present themselves for a job, one a first-class non-union man and the other a second-class union man, the employer must choose the latter. Even where no union men are available, the union's permission to employ a non-union man is qualified by the provision that he must join the union within one week. Join whether he wishes to or not, and if he fails, the employer, presumably, must discharge him—even though there are still no union men available!

Here is Rule 4:—

That no discrimination shall be shown against any member for acting on a committee, or performing the duties of steward of the stable, and that he, or they, shall be the last man to be laid off.

The union men "shall be the last men laid off," though they may deserve to be laid off the first! Here again the man's value as a workman—the only factor that is of the least importance—has nothing to do with it. If he is a union man, that alone entitles him to stay on while perhaps better men are discharged.

The 5th, 6th and 7th rules are unobjectionable. They name legal holidays, fix a rate of pay for work on those days and on Sundays. Rules 3 and 4, however, are absolute outrages. Labor unions will never cease to be objectionable as long as they put mere membership in an organization above personal ability.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s
Department Food Stores, Dover, N. J.

"My" Customer.—Let the boss call her your customer if he wants to, but don't you do it. It isn't good taste. It isn't good business. I have yet to meet the storekeeper that likes it. That's a pointer. It suggests that you own her—not the concern. It may lead you to believe that were you to quit your job she'd follow you. Lots of boys have made that foolish mistake. Your personality may be agreeable, but you'll find the goods and service and prices are more so. I don't infer that you use the possessive pronoun in an egotistical sense. It is rather in a friendly sense. But in any case it sounds out of order.

The Whining Clerk.—A bad habit is whining. No man under 80 should whine. After that age there are cases when it's excusable.

A whiner isn't a business getter. He's too busy. A whiner has no faith, no hope, no health—according to his way of thinking.

The object of "Straight Talks" is to step on some fellow's toes occasionally. To grow you have to be told something that hurts. The more it hurts the more you grow. A big word is "invulnerable." It means that you never touched me. A man that isn't touchable is in a bad way. If you whine, cut it out. Turn right about face, boy, and believe in truth. Truth is all faith and all hope, all health. God made these and "they were good." You can't get ahead if you whine. But you can and you will get ahead when you say and believe that "My work is right back of this counter, and I'll do my duty to the latter and do it cheerfully and hopefully."

Out of Work?—Did you discharge yourself? Lots of men do. They may not know it, but they do it all the same. As soon as you begin to see the system is all wrong, the manager a bull-head and the boss a lightweight, you're taking your discharge in your own hands. Keep up the grouch and the thing will come.

These articles are entitled "Straight Talks." Therefore, you're not always patted on the back, nor you aren't always told how bad you are. The man that isn't encouraged occasionally by a whisper from the heart has a dull time of it. The man that jogs along without ever getting raked over is to be pitied.

Now, then, if you're out of work—get in. Get in at any price, and never be guilty of discharging yourself again. When you apply, apply with a clean break, a clean collar and a clean shave. Let the manager fix the price and tell him you'll do the rest. Don't disappoint him. Your buckings are over. Keep your tongue in your teeth.

Over Weight.—The man who habitually gives the public more for their money than the public pay for is a thief. It's a nasty word to use, but let facts be facts. There is no moral difference in giving away a dollar's worth of goods in a day than there is in your putting your hand in the till and handing a friend of yours a dollar for friendship's sake. Many a time I have wondered how on earth some grocers pay their bills and have anything left. Be a man about weighing and you'll hold respect. Be a monkey about it and you'll be held in secret contempt.

Another thing—if you're a fresh meat clerk and use computing scales, never 40—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because the whole of mercantile experience is against you if you don't.

¶ Go into any large, successful store in the United States, no matter where it is, and you will see nationally advertised products the minute you enter the place. Hidden under the counter? Pushed into the background? No, indeed—out where everybody can see them—"pushed to the front."

¶ We live and learn. What everybody who is successful does, it must be profitable to do. All the leaders in successful merchandising have found that it pays them well to feature nationally advertised products, for thus they get the benefit of a heap of work and spending that cost them nothing. Is there any possible answer to that?

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

The Boss' Ideas.—It would seem sometimes that the boss' range of vision has an extension. He sees beyond your horizon because he has been away out there. The reason the boss' ideas are considered sometimes unworkable is because circumstances haven't permitted us to delve as deeply into human affairs as he. If he gives you an idea to work on—work on it for all it's worth. Not only that, but be glad of the chance to test your ability on a good thing. Never question the boss' ideas for two reasons. First, because you'll be put down either as too conceited to learn, or as an old foggy; and, second, because it's very bad business taste.

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade topics, it being understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. All communications must be accompanied by the writer's name and address as an evidence of good faith, but not necessarily for publication. Mechanical Massage for Eye Trouble.

Adamstown, Pa., July 27, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—How or where can I get advice of one who knows and is neutral and honest, whether massage with patent vibrators worked by electricity is a good remedy for eye trouble? We are living in an advanced age, yet at the same time one must be cautious, but it sometimes appears logical, as exercise is very beneficial to other organs of the body, and why not the eye? Glasses do not cure, and I think they should have found some other means more modern. I do not want to do anything not beneficial and also know we have oculists, but they do not care to give much information on such a question. They want to sell glasses.

Thanking you for advice you may be able to give, or refer me to some other course, I remain,

Yours truly,

H. F. SNADER.

P. S.—Is the Wills' Eye Hospital a good place for such purpose? Some condemn it.

The very best place to get expert and unbiased information on this subject is from an oculist. We do not mean an optician, who merely examines eyes and sells glasses, but a medical specialist upon all sorts of eye troubles, who has nothing to sell except his services. Any good oculist can tell you whether mechanical massage is good for eye troubles. The writer knows something of electrical vibratory massage, and believes it would probably be too severe for application to the eye, unless applied very mildly, indeed.

The Wills' Eye Hospital of Philadelphia is a thoroughly high-grade institution.

As to a Collection Agency.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., July 28, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Can you give us any information regarding "The Commercial Underwriters' Collecting Agency," of Scranton, Pa.?

There is a party trying to get us interested in the agency and we would like to know, if possible, something regarding same.

Any information you can give us will be greatly appreciated.

Thanking you very kindly for your trouble in looking into the matter, we remain,

Yours truly,

B. B. CROMPTON.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has never been able to get much information about this concern, although it has tried several times. We have no reason to believe that it differs materially from other collection agencies.

Ask it to give you the names of 50 customers, and then write to five at random and ask information. Also ask for a copy of the contract you will be expected to sign. Also for some bank reference.

How Shall He Run a Cash Business

Jax, N. C., July 21, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Pity me. I am in a town that never had a cash grocery, and I guess it never will if some of the old ones don't move out or move up. With an up-to-date store and stock and prices averaging 10 to 12½ per cent. below the credit stores, I find a class of people who are grossly insulted to think a Northern man should have the nerve to insist on their paying cash for groceries! "Why the idea? My grandfather and my parents were of the first families and never paid cash, and it was an honor for the grocer to have their names on his books!"

I need advice, and plenty of it, to butt up against this so-called aristocracy, who are too proud to carry home a pound of coffee or a shoe string (the send-it-up habit predominates). Now, brothers, tell me how to rub in the cash system in here without offense.

Yours truly,

You can start with the fundamental principle that nobody—that is, practically nobody—who can get credit will pay cash unless he makes something by it.

Sometimes he won't do it even though the average person will if it can be impressed on him often enough that he is profiting by it. Therefore the way to run a cash store—if it can be run at all in the given town—is, first, to make buying for cash pay your customer better than buying for credit and then to tell them how it pays better. Tell them and tell them and tell them—tell them early and late and in every conceivable way. If it is at all possible to run a cash business in the given town and it undoubtedly is possible to do so in most towns, the above plan will do it in time. It may take a long time but after the fight is won you will be glad you fought it, for truly the man is to be envied whose business is a done for cash.

How can you make it pay a customer to pay cash? First, by selling cheaper. Your expenses are less if you do a cash business, therefore you should be able to sell for less. Sometimes a good premium plan is a help. The average person is a good deal more attracted by merchandise in the form of a premium than by the value of that merchandise paid him in cash.

What Ails Kelloggs?

West Chester, Pa., July 28, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—What's wrong with Kellogg and the wholesalers in Philadelphia? Square dealer lost his senses or is he asleep? Things gone wrong or what's the matter with Kellogg? He'll make

A Service Department for Subscribers.

Are you thinking of buying a cash register, new or second-hand?

A coffee mill or roaster?

A computing scale?

A cheese cutter?

A cash carrier system?

An oil-pumping outfit?

A waste paper baler?

An adding machine?

An account register?

A slicing machine?

A refrigerator?

A typewriter or adding machine?

A safe?

A delivery wagon, team or motor?

New fixtures of any kind, or any store appliance?

Are you dissatisfied with your jobber?

Is there any other move you are about to make on which you would like some honest, fair, well-posted advice?

We can help you. We have all the principal catalogues of all the store appliances used by retail merchants on file in this office. You can see them if you call here, or we will send you any information from them which you want.

As to any other things, we have a staff here which is pretty expert about most things connected with merchandising. It is entirely at your service without limit and without price.

Generous? Not at all. On the contrary, selfish. The more we can do for you the longer we will keep you a subscriber. It is straight business all the way through.

Advice as to an Insurance Company.

Scottsville, N. Y., July 27, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We have been considering the matter of taking out insurance in the Grocers' Cash Deposit Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Huntingdon, Pa.

How would you advise us as to the standing and ability of the company to pay losses. Of course, we understand what a mutual company is, but how has it been conducted?

Very truly yours,

DUNN BROS.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has known of this company for years and believes it to be thoroughly reliable and all right.

Making and Packing Peanut Butter and Pepper Sauce.

Philadelphia, July 25, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly advance the following information and thereby favor an old subscriber?

(1). Where can we purchase one-gallon stone crocks for packing pepper sauce?

(2). Can you give us a good receipt for making peanut butter; also where glasses for packing same can be purchased in quantity?

Thanking you in advance for information to the above, we remain,

Yours truly,

JNO. EVANS SONS.

You can purchase one-gallon stone crocks for packing pepper sauce of the Star Stoneware Co., 203 Cuthbert street, Philadelphia.

Glasses for packing peanut butter may be purchased of Park & Grace, 139 N. Front street. Peanut butter machinery of the Enterprise Mfg. Co., Third and Dauphin streets, both of Philadelphia.

Peanut butter is made of ground peanuts, butter and salt. Use one-half as much butter as you use of the powder and season with salt—a small pinch to a pound of butter, etc.

Wants Dry Goods Samples.

East Greenville, Pa., July 27, 1914.

KARO

The Most Popular Syrup

Even the school children know KARO and love it for its delicious flavor. Quality plus extensive and persistent advertising, has made KARO the best known syrup in America. You are always sure of sales of KARO if you keep it displayed where your customers can see it, and you want the sales because KARO pays you a splendid profit. KARO is not only used as a table syrup and for cooking, baking and candy making, but it is being extensively used for preserving instead of sugar. We are advertising KARO (CRYSTAL WHITE) for preserving purposes, and you should take the opportunity to recommend this use as often as possible, because KARO (CRYSTAL WHITE) insures more satisfactory results. Send for supply of Preserving Booklets to give your customers.

Corn Products Refining Company NEW YORK

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"If you'll add KARO to your sugar when preserving, it will bring out the fruit flavor and make a smoother, richer syrup than sugar alone."

Goods That Are Being Advertised to Your Customers

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

THE MILK THAT SELLS

ADVERTISING AND QUALITY MAKE Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk and Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk THE FASTEST-SELLING BRANDS

Our steady advertising is constantly stimulating the demand for Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk and Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk, making new customers every day. Keep them well displayed in your store and secure the sales we are sending to you; because your customers will like their quality and flavor so that, once started, they will always buy these brands. You can not only start new customers on Borden's Milks but you can get regular buyers to buy more if you'll call their attention to the many delicious dishes they can make with them; many people who are only using them for tea and coffee will make cookies, doughnuts, cinnamon bun, milk bread. If you'll suggest it you'll not only sell more, but you'll also sell cocoa, cocoanut, spices, butter, eggs and flavoring extracts. We'll help you stir up these sales; send us your customers' names and we'll mail our Recipe Book to them for you.

Awards in Contest as to Quality of Nationally Advertised Products as Compared With the Quality of Products Not Nationally Advertised.

The prizes for the best papers in the above contest are awarded as follows:—

First Prize—$7.50—EDWARD C. CROMPTON, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Second Prize—$5.00—J. D. PATTERSON, Durham, N. C.

Third Prize—$2.50—SOLOMON MANN, Plainfield, N. J.

By Edw. C. Crompton, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

As one who has had to do with the purchasing and selling, as well as the consumption of both Nationally advertised goods and those which have not been so extensively advertised, I wish to state that I am thoroughly convinced that Nationally advertised goods are far superior in quality to those which are sold without general advertising. There seems to me to be no very strong argument necessary to prove this statement.

Goods to be Nationally advertised must be as represented, else the advertisement is neither profitable nor lasting. No one will advertise poor goods, for they realize there is no sale for them, and if poor goods are advertised as good, the purchaser of them will not be satisfied and no future sales will result.

There are of course some goods of very fine quality which are not advertised at all, or only perhaps through local papers. Such goods of course sell on their merits, but the sales are generally small, as the territory is not large, nor the demand very great. The sales of such goods would be greatly increased if more extensive advertising were done. But while there are some goods of fine quality, the advertisement of which has never found its way before the eyes of the reading public, it must be remembered that there is a tendency and indeed a practice among many producers who do not advertise their goods extensively, to put upon the market an article which is inferior and not up to the standard. They have made no statements in papers and magazines, hence they have none to abide by. Why then do these goods sell? Simply because they are cheaper, and cheaper in price because they are cheaper in quality.

Many attribute the usually higher price of advertised goods to the expense of advertising. This is not true, for this additional expense is offset by the increase in sales. The reason for the higher price of Nationally advertised goods is the superior quality. As said before, goods to be successfully advertised must not be inferior; and not only from the standpoint of the party having the goods to sell, because of the injury done to future sales, but the publishers of magazines and widely circulated papers are becoming to realize more and more the importance of quality back of their advertisements. No publisher who has built up for himself by years of hard study and careful management a good reputation for his paper, cares to have it shattered by allowing to appear through its circulations an advertisement which would tend to injure in any way the subscribers of his magazine. So that back of the reputation of the advertiser is the reputation of the paper in which the advertisement appears. This gives the consumer of advertised goods a double protection and assurance that the goods are all right.

It may be said also that Nationally advertised goods are not only superior in quality, but they can always be depended upon to remain so; and not only is the quality stable, but the label, which insures one when buying of the quality of the goods within the package, also remains the same. This can hardly be said of goods which are not Nationally advertised. They are put upon the market one year with one label, and if they do not prove to be satisfactory, the label instead of the quality of the goods is changed the next year. The labels of Nationally advertised goods cannot very well be changed. People seeing advertisements in papers look for corresponding labels and trademarks when purchasing the articles. If these labels are continually being changed from year to year, the desired demand will not be created for the article no matter how good the quality of the goods may be. How many Uneeda biscuits would be sold if the National Biscuit Co. were to change the label of their package and call their cracker by some other name?

Then again, goods which are Nationally advertised must be produced and packed under better sanitary conditions than those which are not. On account of the widespread demand for Nationally advertised goods as resultant from the advertisements, consumers are desirous of seeing the buildings in which these goods are made, and to know the conditions under which they are packed; because of this great demand to "see" and "know," producers have been forced to throw open their doors to the inspection of the public. Very little attention is called to the conditions under which goods that are not so well known are produced. They may be made and packed in small buildings, the interior of which no one but the proprietor and his few employees have ever seen. Cleanliness is next to Godliness, it is said, and goods which are not packed in the cleanest possible manner are minus the quality, no matter how fine the selection of them may have been before they were packed.

By J. D. Patterson, Durham, N. C.

The question for debate calls for my experience with the quality of Nationally advertised goods and the others. I hardly expect that my experience is on the popular side, but nevertheless I will attempt to give my own rather than another's ideas.

I fail to see the force in the contention of manufacturers that Nationally advertised goods have to be the best in the world in order to maintain the advertising standard. The little manufacturer in any corner of the earth is dependent upon the same thing that the large manufacturer of Nationally advertised goods is dependent upon—the verdict of the consumers. The pigny may be located in a cosmopolitan city, where his customers represent all nationalities, and he is just as much concerned about having the quality of his product to be good (superior) as any other man, or set of men, are anxious to turn out the best. And being as earnest about it, it is possible and probable that he has the means, the resources to put out a superior article, or else he would not be in the business.

But it is well known that not all manufacturers who do no National advertising are pignies. Many large and absolutely reliable concerns put out brands that are the equal of any. While these (or some of them) do advertise in various journals to get their products before the distributors whose business it is to supply the consumers, they are not known as National advertisers. After their products reach the distributors, it is a case of "deeds, not words." They may become Nationally in favor automatically on account of their excellent quality.

Just because an article has had millions spent on it to put it before the public does not indicate that it is good, any more than an anarchists's continuous evil which has put him in view of the public indicates that he is good.

I have gone over our stock and compared different items and find good and bad in both the Nationally advertised list and where they are not. In spite of what I have written I believe, as a rule, Nationally advertised goods are better. But I like to give those meritorious articles which are not Nationally advertised due credit. And no man can honestly condemn, or detract from, any article just because it is not Nationally advertised (in words).

Here are two lists of articles whose quality is pronounced good by the final jury (the consumers). Many people do not know, or care, whether the products they use are Nationally advertised or not so long as they best please their palate.

While, as stated, some Nationally advertised articles are good and better, we find in the list that follows as many superior articles in the list that is not Nationally advertised, decided not by our own palate alone, but by the people, our customers:—

NATIONALLY ADVERTISED.

Gold Medal Flour
Clover Hill and Meadow Gold Butter
Cream of Wheat and Wheatena
Quaker Oats
Karo Syrup
Blanke's Coffees
Log Cabin Maple Syrup

vs.

(Somewhat Local)

NOT NATIONALLY ADVERTISED.
Rob Roy and Dan Valley Flour
Appalachian Butter
Wheat Hearts
Monogram Oats
Duchess Syrup
Chase & Sanborn's Coffees
Welche's Maple Syrup

Two of the best articles that are produced (and I challenge the world for contradiction) are North Carolina Yams and Long Valley (Idaho) Irish potatoes, neither of which are Nationally advertised. People are fast learning the truth about it on account of their merit.

By Solomon Mann, Plainfield, N. J.

I would say the only difference I find between the Nationally advertised or those not Nationally is the price, and not the quality, that is to say I know (and we all know, I mean any good, real merchant) when it comes to Nationally advertised articles the more it is Nationally advertised the more we have to pay for it, and the less profit we make, as the chain stores, department stores, mail-order houses, the first thing they do is to pick out the Nationally advertised things and cut the life out of them. That is to say, they sell them for far below what we can buy them for. It becomes more serious every day, every week, and every month.

When it comes to quality whether Nationally advertised or not, it has to be made up to a certain standard to comply with the law and to meet the ideas of the consumer. That is to say, when an article is made up and the manufacturers are not going to Nationally advertise it, I think they are going to try and put all the quality possible in order to get the market, and the grocer should try to push this article; as we all know that this article is good but not Nationally advertised. He can't afford to spend a million to advertise his product, but he can give you quality—a living profit. The article is not cut far below what you can buy it for. Then it becomes your duty for your own interest to give this article your warm support in your store, first, you are making a better profit, next for the benefit of the manufacturers or jobbers. That is to give a piece of goods that has quality and not five million dollars' advertising. You do the advertising for him, your word goes further than lots of billboards, newspapers, etc.

Just to illustrate my article and prove to you that quality doesn't exist only in Nationally advertised goods, I am in a neighborhood where I sell a lot of Kipperd herring to people who know what Kipperd herring is, as I have quite a few English and Scotch customers, and most of them know about Kipperd herring, in fact, they know where they are packed and how, etc. Marshall's Kipperd herring, I presume, has the market, and I presume he gets the price, and a good many of you retailers see them advertised or maybe have to sell them yourself for 10 or 12 cents a can. How much do you lose on it? Did you ever figure? But in my store you would not find a can of Marshall's Kipperd herring. I have good Kipperd herring I consider as good as Marshall's, if not better. My customers are the better judges. I am paying at the present market to my jobber $1.25 a dozen; I never sold a can for less than 15 cents. It is packed at Aberdeen, Scotland, probably by Marshall, but it has not his name, but it has the quality. The proof of it is, I am selling a very large quantity, many hundred dozen cans, and never get a can back for not having quality, but on the contrary, they tell me "this herring I got from you was fine." Probably my neighbor grocer will say he can't sell anything but Marshall's. Now take, for instance, Blue Label catsup. I don't handle it at all. To sell it for what you ought to sell it you can't, and to sell it for what the cut-price stores sell it for you don't do justice to yourself. There is one thing left to do. Get catsup of quality, but not Nationally advertised, and sell it with a profit. You would have no trouble in getting good catsup in our big markets, and if you know anything about the grocery business, and you possess any qualifications of a grocer, you can sell it without a bit of doubt.

Let's take, for instance, Mother's or Quaker Oats; they are Nationally advertised, and they charge you for them the Nationally advertised price. We all know this. Take, for instance, Sunbeam oats, I can buy it at present at about $1.08 per carton, 18 packages, or 6 cents a package, and as far as I know the quality is as good as in all the Nationally advertised oats. The next question would be, if you could sell the jobbers' package as well as the Nationally advertised? I will say that this all depends on yourself. If you are qualified for the grocery business you would not have any trouble in selling every customer a package of quality oats that you make a better profit on and is not cut to pieces. So it goes with flour, cocoa, soap, jelly or jam, and baked beans, etc. I can go through the whole line and match you one against the other almost, and you will find a big difference in the price and very little in quality. We all know on Nationally advertised articles the manufacturers must have a very large profit, or he must necessarily add to the amount spent for advertising to the cost of the goods, raising the selling price to the consumer.

One more illustration before closing. I had a big sale here in my store on a Nationally advertised flour. While the sales for it were good and big the profit was very small, in fact it did not pay my running expenses. As I said above, the more an article is Nationally advertised the less profit you can make, and in some cases you are losing yet. So I asked the manufacturer's representative if he could not give me a better price on this flour. I was getting away with an awful lot of it, but making very little profit, as I had to sell it very close as competition is very keen on this flour. He said to me, "I will sell you this flour under your own name for 75 cents to $1 less per barrel. You know we only mill one grade of flour and we have got no better nor poorer quality than our one quality Nationally advertised, but if you contract a quantity we can put it up for you under your name for about 75 cents or $1 per barrel less than you pay for our Nationally advertised flour." I said all right. I gave him the contract, he submitted me a design for my bag. I ordered the flour and I will be frank and say that I have never had a better sack of flour in my store and never made a living profit on any other flour. I don't care whose flour I sold until I began to handle my own brand. I have hundreds of testimonials from my customers telling me how fine this flour is, and what good luck they are having with their pastry, bread and cakes since they are using my flour, and I am enjoying the profits on this flour which I am justly entitled to receive in order that I should remain in business and pay my creditors 100 per cent.

J. P. FORBES, Forbes Building, Coshocton, Ohio

Just how strong the flour became in my store I will prove it by this. My car did not arrive last week and I was a couple of days without flour, and my people had the nerve to send back to me Nationally advertised flour and say they will wait a day or two for my Herbert flour. This is as true as I am writing this article. Now I have illustrated to article.

By H. F. Snader, Adamstown, Pa.

Nationally advertised goods are superior to most unadvertised goods on the market for the following three reasons:—

1.—Manufacturers who do advertise the products they desire to get the public to use are required to keep a standard equal or higher than their competitors to realize from the advertising.

2.—The greater the output the more modern the improvements that are used, and thus, with the better facilities and more skilled workmen, the goods are usually better and are treated in a more scientific and sanitary way. The Government verification of purity of material used, together with increased output, speaks for advertised goods.

Lastly, allow me to say the public is the most discriminating and from experience think more advertised goods are sold than goods not advertised. The public also is fully protected in advertised goods, as they are guaranteed by manufacturer to give entire satisfaction, or can get their money back on demand to their dealer, and are requested to do so. Hence the advertised brands are generally better than brands not advertised.

By J. Warren Frame,
West Chester, Pa.

My experience with advertised goods is, first of all they are the goods that are constantly in demand and our customers insist on having them. Therefore we seek to cater to our customers wants and needs and necessarily carry a pretty good line of advertised goods. Again, they do not become shelf worn or dusty, because they are constantly moving. On goods that are advertised we do not have to lose time in explaining to customers anything about quality because they know about that before they come to the store. Customers have learned by this time that Nationally advertised goods have quality and there is no danger in their use as far as purity goes. I find that advertised goods are of a superior quality, have handsomer labels, are more attractive on the shelf, and wherever you place them they are a credit to any store because of their attractiveness. I want to say it is a very rare thing that I buy any new article except it is advertised, for the simple reason I have not the time to stand around and explain this and that, trying for a half hour to convince a lady customer so and so is just as good. Do you catch my meaning? Nationally advertised goods for me every time.

By H. M. Mann, New Brunswick, N. J.

Is it true that Nationally advertised products are better than others?

I say yes, they are. If they are not better you can always rely on their quality. Every sale a sample.

One of the foremost assets of a manufacturing organization to-day is good will, so known. Among buyers of manufactured products certain brand names stand not alone for accepted high quality, but also as an assurance that this quality is not variable or accidental, but continuous, absolutely uniform, constituting a guarantee for both present and future, based on the record of the past.

This then represents the buyer's belief in the manufacturer's "good will" towards such brands in forthcoming business.

No large manufacturer can exist to-day without a general knowledge, on the part of the buyers and the users of his brand, that the product possesses the quality and uniformity necessary to merit the confidence they give it and the assurance of permanent satisfaction in usage. In other words, the consumer purchases the product itself and also this assurance of permanent satisfaction in usage. Among prudent and progressive merchants the value of dealing in articles bearing well and favorably known brand names is widely recognized, and the tendency indicates continued widespread recognition of the standard by which other makes are measured.

Push Nationally advertised goods to the front. They are the silent salesman. A line of Nationally advertised goods such as these will decorate your store as well as your pocket book: Heinz 57, B. Fisher Co., National Biscuit Co., Borden's Condensed Milk Co., and several hundred others too numerous to mention.

By M. L. Ziegler, Dallastown, Pa.

This question seems to be almost a matter of supremacy for the merchant. To hand down his decisions. Yet while it only asks for the experience the merchant has had in selling both Nationally advertised goods and goods not advertised Nationally, and to say which is the better may not offend the manufacturers who get it in the neck; or on the negative side because of experimental knowledge and proof thereof handed down by the merchant. If I understand this question there seems to be a difference of opinion between the Nationally advertised and the non-advertised. Opinions are what people think, and facts are what things really are. For example, I walk up the street, I meet

John Bull on a very cold day. He says it is about five degrees below zero. I think it is not so cold, but about ten degrees above zero. Two opinions. A tested thermometer shows just three degrees above zero, which brings out the fact. Opinions pass, so to answer the question we want to bring out the facts and lay aside the opinions of the two manufacturers.

Every merchant has quality and quantity buyers. The quality buyers ask for the best, the quantity buyers for the large or bulky package. Through the quantity or bulky buyer I could not answer this question to which is the better article, as his eyes are his buying guide and the more bulky the package the sooner he buys it.

But by experience in selling to quality buyer I wish to answer this question and favor Nationally advertised goods as the best on the market, as the quality buyer demands it and says he finds it the best, and by my own test I find it the best.

The consumer or quality buyer gets his confidence in the production of an article when he has tried his product which is Nationally advertised to be the best and he finds it to be as spoken of by the producer. In this manner I wish to prove that Nationally advertised goods are the best, and stand in a class of their own. Were they not better, advertising would not sell them alone, as goods must show up real merit and prove or maintain their standard, or advertising would result in a loss to the manufacturer of the public confidence in him and his product.

Therefore I wish to answer this question of quality through the quality buyer. The most exacting quality buyer demands Nationally advertised goods. By my own test I find them the best, more uniformly prepared, standardized, sanitary packed and carefully labeled.

Here's a Contest Subject Everybody Knows About

We want to know how strong—how determined, in other words—is the demand by the consumer for nationally advertised goods which is produced by the advertising. Here is the subject as we state it:—

How determined as a rule, are customers who ask for nationally advertised articles? Do they mostly appear to have made up their minds to get them, or are they simply "thinking of trying?" Out of ten calls for nationally advertised products, particularly first calls, how many are really insistent?

Have You Got Any Goods You Don't Want?

Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS KINDLY MENTION "MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD"

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. The demand is quite good for new teas, with an occasional inquiry for old grades. Prices show no change whatever and the market seems thoroughly healthy.

Coffee.

The coffee market is rather thoroughly demoralized. The war situation abroad, with its effect upon general finances, has caused a heavy slump in coffee options, and practically a similar one in actual coffee. The fact that actual coffee has slumped also is hardly understood, because coffee in a sense is a war staple, and might be expected to advance. Probably all grades of Santos coffee are 1 to 1½ cents off, due almost entirely to the war situation. The demand is exceedingly dull, as all buyers are playing a waiting game. Mild coffees are also weaker in sympathy. Java and Mocha are unchanged.

Sugar.

The European war has also affected the sugar market, although refined sugar is precisely where it was a week ago. Raws, however, are looking up, mainly for two reasons. The first is that Austria-Hungary produces about 20 per cent. of the European beet sugar crop. If her men have to go to war, crops will be neglected, and there will be a shortage. Second, England has begun to make inquiries for Cuban raws, which if they result in sales, will curtail the supply of Cuban sugar available for us. The raw situation for these reasons is firmer and may shortly advance. The consumptive demand for sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose has advanced 10 points since the last report, and bulk compound syrup is higher also, though there is no demand. Tinned syrup is unchanged and dull. Sugar syrup and molasses are seasonably quiet at unchanged prices.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged, with some reports of a shade of ¼ cent in new prices by some packers. The demand is slow. Peaches, apricots and raisins are all unchanged and quiet, but some holders believe that peaches will begin to move soon. Other dried fruits dull at ruling prices.

Fish.

There is a good demand for new shore and new Irish mackerel, which are ruling at comparatively low prices. Norways are not much of a factor now, because only early caught fish are in market, and these are unpopular. Late caught fat fish will be along in a short time. No prices on late Norway mackerel have been named as yet. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and dull. The fishing is good. Domestic sardines are still firm, owing to the short catch.

Prices unchanged both on domestic and foreign brands. Salmon of all grades is unchanged, and for the most part firm. As stated last week, some new pack red Alaska salmon is being offered in small lots, but no new prices have been generally named.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are in fair condition, both spot and futures. Some new pack tomatoes are being offered at the same prices ruling on spot and futures. There is no particular reason to buy, therefore no special interest. The outlook for the new pack seems satisfactory. Corn and peas are precisely where they were a week ago, both spot and future. Apples are unchanged and dull. California canned goods are unchanged from a week ago, and quiet. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged and quiet.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are unchanged during the week and in fair demand. Marrows are also unchanged. California limas have advanced to 8 cents in a large way, and even higher prices are confidently predicted. Green and Scotch peas are unchanged and dull.

Butter.

There is an active consumptive demand for butter, as is usual for the season. The extreme warm weather which prevailed all over the producing country, up to a few days ago, has curtailed the make somewhat, and receipts are shorter than they were a year ago. No radical change seems in sight in the near future, but a continued good, firm market.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm at an advance of 1 cent per dozen on fancy fresh laid eggs, which are very scarce, owing to the hot weather. The larger part of the eggs now coming in are heat-damaged, and are being sold at the best price their varying quality enables them to bring. Unless the heat breaks everywhere, there will be a continued shortage of fine eggs.

Cheese.

The consumptive demand for cheese is about normal for the season, but the make is reported lighter than usual. The market is steady at unchanged prices, with no important change in sight.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are unchanged and firm, with a good consumptive demand. Stocks are reported lighter than usual, but if there is any change, it might be a slight decline. Pure lard is steady and unchanged, with compound slightly weaker. Barrel pork is steady and unchanged, with a seasonable demand. Canned meats are unchanged and fairly active. Dried beef unchanged and moderately active.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

Trading in evaporated apples has been very quiet the past few weeks. Spot goods are so thoroughly cleaned up that it is hard to quote. Good quality is obtainable at 9 to 9½ cents, f. o. b., in 50-pound boxes, with lower grades selling down to 7 cents. The dealers have been showing more interest in 1914 crop, and business is being done for prime quality, October shipment, at 6¾ to 6½ cents, and 6½ cents for November shipment. Choice grades are held at ½ cent per pound higher.

The raspberry market has been steady at 22 cents per pound, f. o. b., in barrels, for 1914 crop. It is a little too early to determine the output, and until more can be known about this, sellers are not pushing sales very actively.

C. C. HALL.

Rochester, N. Y.

Imported Fish Specialties.

According to cable advices received from Holland, the first shipment real new full herrings will leave Holland by steamer this week. In spite of the good catch, the prices for Holland herrings are ruling quite high so far, for the simple reason that most of the herrings brought in by the fishermen consisted of poor stuff, which was not fit for export.

Fishing of sardines in France continues in an unsatisfactory way and the difference between the fishermen and the sardine packers have not come nearer to a settlement than they were at the time of our last report. Most of the fish taken in France just now are too large to be packed for the American trade.

In Portugal the fishing is disappointing, and the packers seem to be unable to supply the demand and pack orders on hand. There has been a good demand for sprats, owing to the scarcity of French goods, which consequently are held at high prices in the primary market. Prices for Belgian sprats have not as yet advanced in sympathy with the advance in French goods.

Cables from Norway report that they had quite a good catch of brailing, which are used for the finest grades of Norwegian sardines—way up in the North, but in the principal packing districts around Stavenger, the fishing has been very poor; owing to the very hot weather it has been impossible to transport the catch from the northern part of Norway to Stavenger to be packed. Consequently, the sardines are scarce in Stavenger and the packers are unable as yet to execute orders which they have taken early in the season and for which line have been gotten ready quite some time ago. The demand for Norwegian sardines continues excellent in this market and all over the United States, and incoming lots are taken freely at satisfactory prices.

Both tomato and kippered herring are in very good demand, the trade taking quite some interest in these two commodities owing to the scarcity of Norwegian sardines. Stocks of kippered herring in Norway are nearly exhausted and new supplies cannot be packed now before the beginning of next year.

Norwegian stockfish, both round and split, will be very high in price and splitfish will be very scarce. There is absolutely no stock remaining from last season, so the trade may be assured to receive the real new goods, even if they have to pay high prices for it. These extremely high prices may change, but if there were an extraordinarily large demand it could not be supplied, as the present stock would not reach.

STROHMEYER & ARPE CO.
New York, N. Y.

Salmon.

Futures are now merging into spot. High grades—sockeyes, chinooks, red Alaska—will be higher than ever. All grades will probably advance over opening prices. The pack this year will be principally No. 1 tall red Alaska salmon. Next in order of quantity will probably be pinks. We look for a good sized pack of chums and medium reds—probably 200,000 cases in excess of last year. We will probably get a pack of 200,000 cases each of sockeyes and chinooks, which will sell close together in price. Pinks do not run on Puget Sound this year. Owing to the absence of sockeyes principally, the total year's pack will be at least 2,000,000 cases, possibly 3,000,000 cases less than the previous year. We look for comparatively high price the next three years. Pinks are expected to open around 70 to 80 cents, chums 70 to 72½ cents.

Standard Canned Goods.

Favorable weather for the tomato vines continues and with sufficient rain in the next ten days the crop conditions will be greatly improved. As a matter of fact, they were much improved last week, and the Maryland crop will be ready for the canners the first half of August. The first arrivals of fresh tomatoes came in last week, and the Baltimore canners have started the canning season. The bulk of these tomatoes are coming from Southern New Jersey.

The Baltimore canners are now ready to ship tomatoes out of the new crop in carlots or over. The demand for the spot goods continues to be large, and the orders for them are coming from the same sections that have been buying so freely during the last five or six weeks. Evidently a very large number of the jobbers have sold out of tomatoes, and not having bought for future delivery to any extent, they will be steady buyers during the canning season.

During the week the buying of tomatoes for future delivery was not as large as it was expected to be. There was, of course, some buying every day at the market quotations for all the different sizes, but the volume does not measure up to the usual July sales for this week. There are conflicting reports as to the size of the acreage planted to tomatoes this season as compared with 1913, but buying operations should not be based on the acreage proposition alone. If the average yield in bushels is realized from the acreage planted, there will be no famine next winter in canned tomatoes.

In the other lines of vegetables several articles were strong this week, with an upward tendency as to prices; for instance, sweet potatoes, sauer kraut and both low-price and high-price spot corn received more attention than the other items. Green string beans and white wax beans were active also. There has been excellent buying of corn for future delivery, from the cheapest standard grade up to the highest price fancy quality. Peas, spinach and the other vegetables were dull and unchanged during the week.

The canning season here for blackberries is over, the pack is lighter than as expected and the prices are liable to stiffen up. The same is true of both red and black raspberries. Red cherries, as well as white cherries, are fairly active and stronger. No. 2 strawberries, in water, scored another advance this week, to $1.15 per dozen, after selling at 80 cents when the canning season was on last month. All grades and sizes of strawberries are getting scarce here. The latest reliable reports about pears are that the crop this season is short.

The new crop of peaches is arriving and our packers are now ready to ship peaches, seconds table peaches and standard peaches promptly.

Spices.

The market is exceedingly active this week, due more or less to the European war news. Conditions are unsettled, with probabilities of advances throughout the list.

Peppers are very active and in good demand. Stocks here unreasonably low. Prices firm, with an upward tendency.

Red peppers are exceedingly scarce and in better demand. Tendency is upward.

Cloves.—In active demand, with every prospect of higher prices. Stocks both here and in Europe are lowest in many years.

Pimento (Allspice).—Firm and in better demand. Prices, we believe, are likely to react and go higher.

Mace.—Unchanged in price and supplies are exceedingly small, especially for better grades.

Nutmegs are in moderate demand, at prices which are firmer. Present values are considered safe.

Cassias.—Without change. Better grade of bark, however, is scarce, which will be more apparent as consuming season arrives.

Gingers.—Some little higher. There is very little offered in any grade at quoted prices. Higher levels being anticipated.

Green Ginger Root.—Exceedingly scarce and firm. All arrivals quickly taken up.

Paprikas.—The demand is on the increase, but we note no change in price.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—More favorable reports on the new crop caraway has caused easing off the price for future delivery. Cummin seed is reported very much firmer. Other grades unchanged and in good demand.

changed on the grocery grades. Buying only in small lots for requirements.

Canned vegetables are quiet, both on the spot and in futures. The buying of spot supplies is only to piece out lots as required. In futures, the distributors seem to have covered their early requirements, as a rule, and are content to await developments before placing additional business. There is little demand for tomatoes, but prices are steady at the level of the last week or two. Prices on all varieties of peas are rather nominal. It is said that small sizes of Western and State peas of the new pack will be in short supply, but there is likely to be heavy stocks of the heavier grades. String beans are strong, as the old pack has been closely cleaned up and the new crop is said to be light. The demand at the moment is light, however. Corn is dull, but steady.

California canned fruits are reported as steady and even firm on some varieties. The representatives of the packers say that they have booked quite a satisfactory business in the new pack. There is not much offering of Western and Southern canned fruit at present, and the feeling is firm.

Buyers here are showing little interest in California dried prunes. Reports from the coast say that the war in Europe is likely to affect the market greatly, as the Austrians may destroy the Servian crop and in other parts of Europe the crop may be affected if the war spreads. Such developments would of course increase the demand from Europe for California prunes. However, the local buyers refuse to become excited over these reports. There is little trading in either spot or future supplies in this market. There is little doing locally in California seeded raisins, although reports indicate more lively buying in other parts of the country for prompt shipment. It is said that the officials of the Associated Co. are satisfied that the old crop will be well cleaned up before new raisins are ready for shipment in any large quantities. Currants are quiet, as are other kinds of dried fruits.

Reports from Maine indicate that the sardine catch has again fallen off and the packers are offering high prices for supplies. The packers are accordingly asking more money for the canned fish and some of the earlier offerings have been withdrawn. Imported sardines are scarce. Spot Alaska red salmon is said to have been sold at $1.37½ within the last few days, but most holders are asking $1.42½ and some $1.45. Pinks are active, with an upward tendency. Medium reds are selling well and are firm. Tuna are moderately active and firm.

Flour has been going up rapidly. Advances of 35 to 50 cents were declared early in the week by many of the mills, and in some instances the quotations are about a dollar higher than they were a couple of weeks ago. For the most part the market is at a standstill, as buyers regard the prices as prohibitive. Traveling men in many instances have been called from the road because of this situation. Spring wheat patents are quoted at $5 to $5.25, in barrels. A car of soft winter wheat flour, in wood, brought $4.50. Kansas straights are quoted at $4.25 to $4.50, in sacks.

The egg market is generally quiet. There is still some accumulation of lower grades, which are moving slowly. High-grade eggs are scarce and prices fairly firm. Storage eggs are meeting with considerable demand. Nearby white eggs are in light supply and on strictly fancy grades the prices are slightly higher. The quotations on fresh-gathered extras are 25 to 27 cents; extra firsts, 23 to 24 cents; firsts, 21½ to 22½ cents. The best grades of refrigerator eggs bring from 24½ to 25 cents. Nearby eggs have a range up to 29 to 31 cents for fancy supplies.

There is a fair volume of business in butter. Much of the stock arriving is defective. Most lots of the creamery extras that are sold here bring from 28½ to 29 cents, but particular buyers are paying 29 cents for fancy lots. Most of the firsts sell at 25 to 26 cents, but better lots bring up to 27 to 28 cents. Seconds range from 22½ to 24½ cents, and are moving fairly well, especially the better lots. Process is moving rather steadily, with manufacturers firm in their views and getting from 21½ to 23½ cents for the best grades.

Government Will Not Obey Court Sausage Ruling.

Says Recent Decision That Government Cannot Legally Restrict Water and Cereal in Sausage Applies Only to St. Louis. Inspectors in Other Sections Will Still Condemn Sausage Containing More Than 2 Per Cent. of Cereal and 3 Per Cent. of Water.

Washington, D. C., July 30, 1914.

In a recent issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" it was reported that the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, sitting at St. Louis, Mo., had decided that the Government had no right to limit the amount of water and cereal in sausage. During the past week the Department of Agriculture has announced that it will not obey this decision, in points outside St. Louis. The American Meat Packers' Association has issued the following statement to its members:—

There will be no change for the present in the regulations regarding cereal and water in sausage. The Department of Agriculture construes the order of the Circuit Court of Appeals as applying only to St. Louis and adjacent stations. It maintains that the original regulations still apply to all other parts of the country, and it is the intention of the department to have the original case set for hearing this fall, to take testimony and have the question settled on its merits. No testimony was taken in the original case, and the department refuses to accept the decision except in the jurisdiction in which the case was brought.

The prosecution of this matter will be continued.

The effect of this attitude is that meat inspectors everywhere except at St. Louis will still refuse to pass sausage containing more than 2 per cent. of cereal or 3 per cent. of water. The trade had supposed that the ruling of the highest court settled the principle in this case, and that the Government would amend its regulations and permit the marketing of sausage products under the court decision.

Hardware—Tools—Specialties

Builders' Hardware Profitable for Merchants of the Live Kind.

If a suitable stock is carried, builders' hardware is a profitable line for any general storekeeper to handle in his department devoted to kindred merchandise. That trouble is had with these goods resides in the dealer himself, the experienced ones say. The manufacturers of builders' hardware are undoubtedly putting out goods that is a credit to everybody, both in the production and the retailing. Of course, there is an insistent and persistent demand to scale prices when a merchant comes to placing an order. This everlasting pounding of the manufacturer for price always has one result; that is, goods are made up to meet the standard fixed by the dealer, and that is anything but high grade. This change is true in other lines, and when a merchant handling hardware in any of its myriad forms believes the stock to handle is attractive from its cheapness, a bigger mistake was never made.

If a merchant complains there is no profit in builders' hardware, he is right so far as low-priced material is concerned; for the simple reason there is no value offered on which to make a profit. It is in the high-grade goods, properly presented, where the money is for the dealer. Naturally it is not practical for a merchant in a town of 200 or 500 population to have an elaborate and expensive display of merchandise; but the man with a general store in a town of 2,500 to 3,000, who is up to date and alive to his opportunities, will have a stock of builders' hardware of which no one need feel ashamed.

Hardware Distribution via Retail Mail Order Houses.

Mention of a retail mail order house is always sufficient to make "goose flesh" with the average general merchant. Here and there attempts are made to counteract their influence by meeting prices with better merchandise, but these are isolated instances of progressive, energetic dealers. The others—a long, long list of grumblers and chronic kickers hold aloof and want some law passed that would upset the "apple cart" of the catalogue houses by restriction or prohibition provisions, that would not "hold water" for a minute in a judicial review. The buncombe legislators, State and National, keep on humbugging their constituents by promising to pass bills to abolish and annihilate these great aggregations of capital and improved methods of merchandising. To be sure, the bills will be introduced, and that is the beginning and the end of such attempted legislation.

No line is harder hit by the retail mail order house than hardware. If dealers will not or cannot carry adequate lines to meet and overcome competition of this kind; or the merchant lacks ingenuity and resourcefulness in marketing his goods, what can be done? Not a thing. Many hardware manufacturers sell their product to the mail order houses in direct competition with his own trade with legitimate merchants. Not a few concerns, however, openly declare their opposition to these institutions by publicly announcing in print a positive refusal to place goods in their hands; and then open communication and sell by the underground route via some jobber or other means. It is a great game, and its only equal is the professed jobber, who at the same time sells at retail. An evil apparently also beyond eradication, even by perfervid speeches at conventions, National, State and local.

In this connection it may be pleasant to note—if one is in that frame of mind—that Scars, Roebuck & Co., for the six months ending with June, did a business of $47,901,000, as compared with $44,909,000 for the same period last year. It is confidently expected that the total for this year will pass, for the first time the $100,000,000 mark. The company's new fall and winter catalogue is now being distributed at the rate of 25,000 daily, the annual total reaching about 2,500,000. This is something else again.

Motor Accessories a Profitable Line.

With his hardware department covering ready-to-use paints, brushes and allied goods, the general merchant will find it profitable to stock automobile accessories, gasoline, etc. The use of the auto is now so general that a customer for supplies is likely to drop in almost any hour during the day. The gasoline reservoir, if it is to be an underground affair, is easily provided for; but if it is carried by the barrel or in a tank either can be accommodated at little cost. An initial stock does not necessarily mean the expenditure of a large amount of money. A sample line of lubricants, spark plugs, horns, tool kits, wrench outfits, air pumps, tire savers, grease guns, funnel measures, valve lifters, jacks, dusters, carborundum valve grinding compound, carburetors, oil and cleansing soaps, a few pairs of tire chains, storage batteries, would make a fine showing if placed in a window for people to see as they motor by. Of course, even a less stock can be utilized to begin with, but if the store is in a commanding location a larger quantity of goods would attract still more attention.

The universal use of the automobile provides ready trade which will grow as the storekeeper succeeds in satisfying his customers. The word of "a good place to go" is passed along the line quicker than one imagines. Every dealer who added auto accessories and supplies has found a new field of activity and profit opened up. The goods are easy to handle and, as one retailer remarked when asked the question, "the sale of motor specialties, which sell quickly, has kept us busy all through the spring and summer; they have brought new life into the business. Very often a party while waiting for the repairs to be completed, after buying whatever is needed by their machines, will wander about the store and before leaving will have purchased quite a few things in our other departments."

There are a number of new things in auto accessories coming out all the time, and a disposition to keep the newest and most reliable speedometers, bulb horns, vulcanizers, etc., is soon appreciated by tourists and local people. A number of hardware manufacturers and jobbers put up specialties, such as repair kits, for instance, in such an attractive form that not infrequently a customer will be taken with the beauty and completeness of the outfit as compared to the one possessed that a sale is made offhand. It is up to the salesman or the boss to make the most of his opportunity in talking up his line when the casual motorist hauls up for something or other. It must be remembered goods will not sell themselves as a rule.

Boots Shoes Findings

More Money Added and a New Name.

Following the announcement in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" that the Emerson Shoe Co. had been reorganized, the following letter in explanation of the change was received:—

Rockland, Mass., July 18, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I wish to state that neither Mr. Emerson or the Emerson Shoe Co. has consented to the use of its name in any way, only that it is the property of the Emerson Shoe Co., who operate its own stores and sell shoes through its own agents. The changing of the old Emerson Shoe Co. into the new was for the purpose of taking in the old Emerson shoe stores which have formerly been run under the name of the Specialty Shoe Stores Co., and are now all in one company. I might also add that the Emerson Shoe Co. has taken in an active member, who has added capital and whose intention it is to increase the business.

Most respectfully yours,
HERBERT T. DRAKE,
President Emerson Shoe Co.

Law to Prohibit Misrepresenting Footgear.

At the recent convention of the National Shoe Retailers' Association in Boston recently a plea, unanimously supported, was made for a law that would make it a felony to misrepresent any article of shoe merchandise, such as is a common practice in a great many places where fire, bargain or sacrifice sales of these goods are announced.

The so-called merchandise act of Pennsylvania was recommended as a model law for the shoe men of every size and description to support. It reads as follows:—

An Act, To prohibit the making or dissemination of false or misleading statements or assertions concerning any merchandise, securities or services, and providing penalties for the violation thereof.

Section 1. Be it enacted, etc., That whoever, in a newspaper, periodical, circular, form, letter or other publication, published, distributed or circulated in this Commonwealth, in any advertisement in this Commonwealth, knowingly makes or disseminates, or causes to be made or disseminated, any statement or assertion concerning the quantity, the quality, the value, the merit, the use, the present or former price, the cost, the reason for the price or the motive or purpose of a sale of any merchandise, * * *, or concerning the method or cost of production or manufacture of such merchandise, or the possession of rewards, prizes or distinctions conferred on account of such merchandise, or the manner or source of purchase of such merchandise * * * which is untrue or calculated to mislead, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction be sentenced to pay a fine of not more than one thousand dollars ($1,000), or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding sixty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

A committee of prominent retailers was appointed to petition Congress to substitute for or incorporate this law in the so-called Stevens bills now in committee.

Shoe Findings Profitable Lines.

Any number of shoes—men's and women's—are being sold just now, and this means outside of the "special sales" being carried on everywhere by active dealers. This, of course, covers the retailers in the large cities and more important towns, whereas the general storekeeper does not, as a rule, indulge in this practice unless he is a live wire who believes in not carrying over any stock; especially the novelties, the sale of which should always be made "on the run," so as to leave no "stickers" on the shelves. Calling this a between seasons period, the general merchant with a shoe annex should not overlook the profitable possibilities of findings. The small town dealer, unless he has had his attention called to this branch of his business specifically, is apt to overlook the line in its entirety and handle what may be called the "bare necessities."

It is certain merchants do not concentrate on findings as they should, nor do they generally make proper provision for their accommodation, display and easy access. For example, take shoe polishes, hardly a shoe on the market but requires cleaning with the special goods made for this purpose. The old-time blackings have about disappeared and are seldom called for. Polishes, including black, russets, etc., as well as colorings or dyes, are in demand according to the footwear to be treated. That is to say, there are different varieties of polishes—good, bad and indifferent. Many a fine shoe is ruined by the application of a low-grade polish, and the quality of each and every polish of any standing on the market should be familiar to the merchant or the manager of his shoe department.

Manufacturers of polishes are none too enterprising in educating the public to differentiate between reliable and harmful polishes. Their selling campaigns, as a rule, are conducted along narrow lines, and no one product stands out in the public mind sufficiently strong to influence a demand. If a dealer uses or sells a customer a polish and says it is all right, what knowledge of the truth of this statement has the consumer? Nothing whatever. The trade may and do know; but that is not sufficient to create the demand which merchants depend upon to increase and broaden sales. Any quantity of shoe polishes and cleansers is being sold, and the manufacturer who is too dense not to see why he should not exploit his line in every way imaginable that is judicious and forceful, and every general storekeeper who does not stock goods which are known and are dependable, are missing opportunities for making a handsome turnover.

Dwelling upon the primary importance of polishes and their correct handling in the store, the importance of other findings should not be overlooked. Shoe trees are becoming better known and appreciated by the public, and the salesman should not leave a customer unacquainted with their merits and advantages for keeping shoes in proper trim and condition. Rubber heels are staples, and in addition to fitting out a customer, the dealer should have them attached on the spot. The appliances for this work are simple and no merchant handling shoes should be without an outfit. Other lines include brushes for renewing the nap of buckskin, suede, velvet and velouze shoes. How many merchants think of this item in making up their stock of findings. Then, to go into the refinements—all essentials for a rounded stock and readily salable—are insoles, foot powders, heel cushions, corn and bunion plasters, corn paring safety razors—a big seller if properly described and its utility over the old-fashioned murderous tools shown—not to mention orthopedic appliances and remedies of various kinds.

Laces of different colors, sizes and widths are among the commonest of the findings, as are also buttons, button hooks, shoe horns, etc. Rosettes, bows and pompoms, buckles, tango sets, footwear jewels and accessories all belong in this interesting and profitable findings department. In fact, new articles of this kind are constantly appearing, and the merchant who wants to make the most of his shoe department and hold trade cannot make a mistake in providing a line of up-to-date findings to complete the attractiveness and sales possibilities of his stock.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"STOLLWERCK'S COCOA won't disagree with you because it's made by the original Dutch process which brings out the flavor and makes cocoa perfectly digestible."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

right word in the right place—a work of genius. This is an illustration: A shoe manufacturer who wanted to get a stronger line of copy asked his advertising manager to prepare for him a series of advertisements that would not contain the words fit, feel, style or wear. Several good men tried their hand. Some mighty good copy was written under this handicap, but it was handicap copy and it sounded like it. Common sense wouldn't permit it to be O. K'd.

No rule in the use of words in shoe or any other kind of advertising can be adopted as absolute. Good advertisements and strong, forceful, pulling letters have been written that broke entirely away from tradition; but the advertiser who wants to play safe is justifiably right in wanting to stick to good, old advertising English—short, meaty words. There is nothing in hifalutin.

What Makes a Presentable Shoe.

Quality is an essential attribute in good shoemaking, appearance is also of considerable account with merchants selling the product. One item that helps to make a shoe look good, even to a tyro, is the two set edges; and a slight space on the sole gives even a medium grade shoe a distinctive look. A heel with the right pitch adds to the beauty of the goods. It is poor policy, says an expert shoemaker, to use a 6-8 heel on a last designed to carry a 9-8; the tread will not be right and the whole line of the shoe is thrown out. These points the general storekeeper will not find amiss in looking over the new fall lines.

Stocking High Grade Shoes Cautiously.

In the West—particularly in the St. Louis territory—shoe manufacturers and wholesalers are receiving small orders from merchants, ranging from 6 to 12 pairs, and since the 50-pound limit, these and other small orders are forwarded by parcel post. Orders of this kind, says "American Shoemaking," are taking the place of filled-in orders of previous years. Every year the merchants all over the country are paying more attention to the latest styles, and this year more than usual they are buying in small quantities so as not to have any of this season's goods left over. The merchants throughout the West and Central West deny that the times have anything to do with them being cautious in their buying. They contend that it is neither good policy nor good business either to stock up heavy on the high-grade shoes, especially on women's shoes, since styles on both high and low cuts are being shown twice a year.

A Shoe Innocent of Leather.

Attention has been called to the statement of a Western shoe manufacturer of making and selling what they term the "All Leather" line. Now a Massachusetts manufacturer is turning out a shoe in which no leather is used. It is a man's low cut or oxford model. The upper is of brown army duck, waterproofed; the counter is of horn fiber; toe box of felt, and the sole and heel are rubber. The heel seat is nailless. The shoe carries a rubber welt and it has an insole of felt and a toe lining of duck. Not a handsome shoe, to say the least, though its utility is not questioned.

Dry Goods Notions Knit Wear

No Price Reduction in Underwear. Status of Union Suits.

At a recent meeting of Pennsylvania underwear manufacturers in Hamburg, the conclusion not to reduce prices in order to stimulate buying by either retailers or jobbers was reached. Knitters feel that they must eventually get the business at any rate, and that in the end they will be better off by maintaining prices than if they invite a price war, for which, they affect to believe, the leading jobbers and buyers for large retailers are waiting. Merchants are not inclined to place orders for underwear at present for various reasons, and the general storekeeper feels as if he can easily afford to await further developments.

While much was expected of the union suit, in its various manifestations of open or closed or drop crotch, but the trade is not getting wildly excited, so far as can be ascertained. Last season, reports say, union suits did not sell up to expectations and no little stock remained unsold on the shelves of the general merchants. This, to some extent, also accounts for the cautious buying. It is believed, however, no matter how good or otherwise business in union suits may finally be, it is clear, from the large number of new lines—mostly "orphan" merchandise, which is risky to handle always—on the market, and particularly the amazing increase in cheap garments, that competition will be exceedingly keen.

Beach Cloth a Popular New Arrival.

So-called beach cloths are selling in goodly quantities for next season's deliveries and which is believed will, to some extent, affect the heretofore general use of serges in men's wear. Suits of beach cloth have sold well this season, and well informed people are of the opinion that this comparatively new development in the clothing business has come to stay. Further it means that the men of this country are dressing more appropriately during the warm season than for many years. A well-made suit of beach cloth can be retailed for less than $10, with a very satisfactory profit, and their excellent wearing qualities commend the goods to the customer.

These suits appear to be the very thing for the man of small means. The initial cost, to be sure, is small, but in order to keep the goods looking attractive they must be cleaned frequently, which adds materially to the first price, and therefore they may probably not appeal to the general public. Next season the beach cloth fabrics will come in imitations of all kinds of fancy worsteds; and keen observers predict suits of this sort will enjoy an extraordinary demand during the next lightweight season.

Satin Surfacted Taffetas for Fall.

Very few silks are being bought by either merchants or jobbers. It is between seasons on these goods, and uncertainties as to the future weaves also help this condition. A number of sheer silks on the voile and marquisette order are gradually appearing, but the high price of raw material is checking manufacturing operations with its unavoidable price increase, which evidently buyers of all grades are in no frame of mind to accept. Taffetas continue to be liberally demanded for the midsummer frocks of smartly dressed women. Although it is more than probable the fall fashions will discard these very popular fabrics in the accepted weights of the present, they will be reintroduced for fall and winter wear with satin surfaces. Laces are overtopping all other fabrics just now in point of smartness and popularity.

B. V. D. Infringement Suits.

The B. V. D. Co. have entered suit in the United States Court against Isaac Efroymsen, Lafayette, Ind., for advertising "men's union suits of nainsook, made like the dollar B. V. D., 45 cents." The trade-mark "B. V. D." was used in this advertisement to sell other makes of nainsook underwear, and suit was brought to protect fair dealers against such acts of unfair competition.

At the same time and in the same court, suit was entered against Thieme & Schuessler Co., also of Lafayette, Ind., for a similar offense, their advertisement reading: "Men's B. V. D. style 50-cent shirts and drawers, each 37½ cents," and "Men's B. V. D. 25-cent shirts and drawers, each 19 cents."

Weinmann, of "Onyx" Fame, on Returned Goods.

The attitude assumed by some general merchants on the "returned goods" question is altogether indefensible, according to Geo. A. Weinman, advertising manager of the wholesale department of Lord & Taylor, New York. Talking informally on the topic to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" a few days ago in his office, he said: "There is no reason why a merchant should be permitted to ship back goods of any kind to us so long as they are not defective. Why should we or any other wholesaler stand for the errors of judgment made by a retailer in buying merchandise?"

"For example," continued Mr. Weinman, "this season the sale of women's tan hosiery has fallen off—it is in no demand and the fashion has changed. Do you know quite a few of our merchant customers want us to shoulder the blame, or the loss, when it is not our fault in the remotest degree. At the opening of the season, when the orders were placed, no one had the slightest idea but what tans would be the usual good sellers they have been for years. Then the vogue slipped into other colors and now the buyers want us to take the stock back and allow them credit for their own mistakes. In addition, they return a lot of old 'stickers' besides; make good measure, I suppose.

"Well, we do not see it in that light. I admit that in returning some goods to the jobber or manufacturer there may be extenuating circumstances, but as a general proposition it is radically wrong. It is a menace to the proper conduct of business, I might say a 'crying evil' and it should be curtailed if not wholly eliminated. I believe the wholesalers and their associations should and could safely adopt a rule that would deal with this reprehensible practice in a drastic manner and dispose of the nuisance for once and all. Buyers cannot expect to be protected against their own poor judgment. We do all it is possible to assist a merchant in making proper and suitable selections for his stock; but he must not fall back on us for reimbursement if the merchandise does not move as anticipated. It is wrong in principle and should not be tolerated."

Fixed Prices a Dual Problem.

A difference of opinion regarding fixed prices exists in jobbing circles. A large number are firmly of the belief they are a disturbing and a demoralizing factor; others, they are beneficial. In an account of the recent convention of the Jobbers' Association of Knit Goods Buyers, an auxiliary of the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association, this fact was pointed out by the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" to which exception is taken by a prominent wholesale firm in the following letter:

Buffalo, N. Y., July 24, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I would say that as you state your convictions in your editorial regarding the matter in question, it would not serve any good purpose to make comment on same. I might state, however, that the two facts in question, which you seem to think contradictory are absolutely true when considered in conjunction with the other matters that properly belong to this question.

Yours very truly,

CLAWSON & WILSON Co.

Ernest C. Hall.

If Mr. Hall had furnished some tangible clue to the "other matters," it would clarify the situation materially.

Jobbers' Profits of Prime Importance?

At a gathering of notion buyers a few weeks since, Howard A. Baldwin of the old Philadelphia firm of the Sheibley-Tyler Co., delivered an interesting address on "Jobbers and Their Profits." In reporting the event, naturally stress was laid by this journal on what Mr. Baldwin said about the retailer. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World's" field of activity is with the general storekeeper, especially in the smaller towns and outside of the large cities generally. Their attitude ward and position in the market is of direct concern, whereas the profits of the jobber are secondary, as might be expected, while recognizing, at the same time, their rightful place as big factors in the trade. In respect to this Mr. Baldwin, in a letter to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," says: "I note you published my remarks in regards to retailers only. The part in regards to jobbers and their profits is what I wanted you to make note of. However, I thank you for the space you gave me." What Mr. Baldwin evidently means to convey is that the jobber's profits are not what they should be; in other words, negligible when their services, convenience and general accommodating character are considered.

Storm Center of Optimism West.

Evidently the West continues to be pretty well satisfied with itself and its bright prospects. Merchants are buying more freely, but at the same time in limited quantities. Chicago is, as usual, pretty well pleased with itself for various reasons, chief of which appears to be that its jobbers are not only equal to any demands from merchants in their own section, but they are gradually working into Eastern territory and selling retailers in places heretofore taken care of by jobbers in New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, not to mention Boston and Pittsburg. In the weekly review by the John V. Farwell Co., Chicago, something of this is reflected as follows: "The aggressive policy of Chicago wholesale dry goods houses in reaching out to the largest retail distributors, who formerly confined their purchases to the East, is showing pronounced results. One prominent feature which has brought about this result is that many Western jobbers are now converting large lines of cotton and silk goods, and are also direct selling agents for several woolen mills. Many local department stores who formerly placed large early mill orders find it more advantageous to depend upon smaller orders placed early and then to call upon local jobbers for repeats. Styles of fabrics used in wearing apparel have been so changeable that buyers find it more profitable to keep stocks low and buy often as changes develop. A big increase in manufacture of garments in Chicago has created another big outlet for local dress goods distributors, who were quick to appreciate the situation, and now control a large portion of business which formerly went to the Eastern markets." This is good, old-fashioned Chicago talk. It has not changed in ten years—only getting more emphatic in expression. Besides, there is a great deal of truth in it, just the same.

Optimism is also the note in the reports from Marshall Field & Co., as follows: "Optimism seems to be the one word that epitomizes the situation as to business in general throughout the country—the 'ifs' and 'ands' relative to commercial and economic problems seemingly are being pushed into the background. Visiting merchants are buying liberally and have apparently made generous allowances for the new wealth created by the increased harvests. This has had a tendency to stimulate merchants to make early visits to market. Sales of holiday goods have commenced earlier this year than usual, and orders are larger."

Cheney Name Defended in Court.

Originators of branded fabrics carrying the firm's name as a guarantee of quality to the public are beginning to defend their rights in the courts more generally. One of the latest cases is a suit involving the use of the Cheney name in connection with silk neckties is pending in the United States District Court at Cincinnati, Cheney Bros. having filed a complaint against the Thomas Manufacturing Co., charging the improper use of the word "Cheney" in connection with the cataloging of a lot of neckwear.

The answer of the defendant company, recently filed, sets out that the company had no intention of violating any of the trade rights of Cheney Bros. in listing the ties in question as "Cheney silk ties," and alleges that this was done on the representation of the Kumler-Patchin Co., of whom the goods were purchased, that they were made from Cheney silk.

The answer also alleged that the use of the name accomplished little, if anything, toward the sale of the ties, few sales being made, and other methods being necessary to dispose of them, such as offering them for sale under the name of Milton ties, at three for a dollar, with a set of cuff links and a scarf pin free.

This scheme ("Oh! Oh! Delphine!"), it is alleged was successful, and the ties were disposed of by use of the premium offer, and not by the use of the name of Cheney. The amount received from the sale of the ties in question is estimated by the company at $15,000 gross. This is an answer that will call for the closest examination. It sounds pretty thin, but is one which might be expected under the circumstances. Cheney's silk ties are too valuable a property to allow of the indiscriminate and unwarranted use of the designation without at least a legal protest.

Claflin & Co. Getting on Their Feet.

While the Claflin failure was a disturbing factor, disorganizing dry goods credits to an extent never known before, the settlement in sight of this famous firm is viewed with satisfaction by everybody, excepting that class of lawyers who would wreck a church to reap a pecuniary advantage. The recent sale of merchandise by Claflin & Co. has realized quite a handsome figure, and now fall goods will be placed on view and selling, especially to merchants from the smaller towns, who have already cut an important figure in the entire proceedings. The nominal assets are over $8,000,000 in excess of the liabilities, the receivership will doubtless soon terminate, although conceded to be in able and clever hands, so much so that the harpies who always hover around such an unfortunate happening with sharpened talons and insatiable appetite, are kept at bay and completely foiled in their attempts to make a "mess" of it for their own enrichment. All of the retail stores will be continued, as they have proven themselves money-makers.

Playing Safe With Silks.

Many snarls are still visible in the silk situation. There is no pretence in saying that any particular weave is to predominate, and therefore some manufacturers are showing as many as ten different kinds, with the hope of hitting the bull's eye, with one or two or more, as the fashion cat jumps. There have been so many sudden changes in the styles and modeling of women's gowns during the spring and summer—almost as many as feminine whims, and they are countless and unaccountable—that buyers and merchants are cautious in ordering.

Satins are attracting the most attention at present, and some scarcity is reported in the black, bright-finished satins. Leading retailers are in doubt of the position of taffetas for the fall, though enough of these goods have been made up on order to give it a noticeable place in the list of fabrics offered. The quid nuncs are closely watching its development for the future. Another heart-breaking problem to the experts is the width of skirts. The oracles who hand out wisdom along these lines state most impressively that skirts are growing wider by the day, and that there is a probability that old bugbear crinoline may again make its appearance. As this prediction has gone forth twice a year since 1860, when its terrors and ugliness were in full force and effect, it is safe to say that no one need fear its return to favor.

be plain and conspicuous, shall not be a part of or obscured by any legend or design, and shall be so placed and in such characters as to be readily seen and clearly legible when the size of the package and the circumstances under which it is ordinarily examined by purchasers or consumers are taken into consideration."

It would appear that a statement blown in the bottle would be satisfactory if plain and conspicuous and in conformity in other respects with the regulations. Such a statement, should, of course, apply to the quantity of the contents and not to the capacity of the bottle.

I am of the opinion that the statement upon the crown cork submitted with your letter would not be conspicuous within the meaning of the act and would not comply with the terms of the regulations quoted above.

Respectfully,
C. L. ALSBERG,
Chief.

52. Statement of contents made by means of perforations are not plain and conspicuous.

Dear Sir:—Replying to your communication, there is inclosed a copy of Food Inspection Decision No. 154 containing the regulations under the amendment to the Food and Drugs Act requiring a statement of the quantity of the contents upon food products in package form.

Inasmuch as the statement is required to be plain and conspicuous, statements made by means of perforations in the label or wrapper are deemed not in compliance with this requirement.

Respectfully,
C. L. ALSBERG,
Chief.

53. Bottled-in-bond goods and bulk packages bearing internal-revenue brands not exempt from requirements as to declaration of contents.

Dear Sir:—The marking of the quantity of the contents upon all packages of food products should be in conformity with the regulation as given in paragraph c of Food Inspection Decision 154.

No decision to the contrary has been rendered regarding the marking of bottled-in-bond goods and bulk packages bearing internal-revenue brands.

Respectfully,
A. S. MITCHELL,
Secretary Committee on Regulations, Net Weight and Volume Law.

54. The term "stringless" not applicable to any one variety of beans.

Dear Sir:—This bureau has taken up the question of the meaning of the term "Refugee Beans" with the Bureau of Plant Industry.

The term "Refugee" is a class name applied to several distinct horticultural varieties of beans which vary markedly in the quality of stringiness.

As was explained in the bureau's letter of a few weeks ago (Bureau of Chemistry Service and Regulatory Announcements No. 3, letter 19), the age of the pod is an important factor in determining the amount of fiber or stringiness in the bean. Some varieties develop fiber earlier than others, and on this account those varieties which are slowest in developing the fibrous character are classed by seedsmen stringless varieties of beans. It is not thought that the term "stringless" should be confined to any one variety of bean.

Respectfully,
C. L. ALSBERG,
Chief.

55. Tomatoes with puree.

Dear Sir:—Your letter inquiring as to the attitude of the bureau regarding the sale of tomatoes with puree is at hand.

It is the understanding of the bureau that the term "puree" implies a certain degree of concentration. A product consisting mainly of tomato pulp which has been put through a cyclone or a cyclone and finishing machine would hardly be entitled to the name "puree."

There appears to be no objection to the sale of tomatoes with puree made from trimmings under the label "Tomatoes with Puree," provide the statement that the product is made from trimmings is printed in a conspicuous manner.

One label has come to the attention of the bureau which bears the legend "Puree from Trimmings with Tomatoes" on the face, while the other face bears a picture of a whole tomato, above which is printed the name of the brand and below the name of the canning company. Such a label is not regarded as proper, but no objection will be made to it if the legend "Puree from Trimmings with Tomatoes" is also printed across the face bearing the picture of the tomato.

Respectfully,
C. L. ALSBERG,
Chief.

56. Meaning of the term "orangeade."

Dear Sir:—Receipt is acknowledged of your letter requesting information concerning the labeling of an orange beverage. It is noted that you state the product is made from orange peel, orange juice, citric acid, sugar, water and color, and that you have requested information as to whether or not the word "orangeade" may be properly applied to this product.

In reply you are informed that it is the opinion of the bureau that the word "orangeade" should be applied only to a product consisting of orange juice, sugar and water, flavored with more or less orange peel. The above product, which contains citric acid as a substitute for orange juice, would not, in the opinion of the bureau, be properly described as orangeade. It should be plainly labeled to show that it is an imitation or compound. If the product is termed a compound, the ingredients used, including artificial color, should be plainly stated on the label in connection with the term compound.

Respectfully,
C. L. ALSBERG,
Chief.

57. Meaning of the term "orangeade powder."

Dear Sir:—You are informed that, in the opinion of the bureau, it would not be proper to apply the term "orangeade powder" to a product made by mixing citric acid, oil of orange and artificial color. Such a product might be sold under a label which clearly indicates it to be a compound or imitation, as provided for in section 8, paragraph 4, under foods, of the Food and Drugs Act. If labeled as a compound, the ingredients should be stated, including the presence of artificial color.

Respectfully,
C. L. ALSBERG,
Chief.

58. Calculation of gluten or protein in gluten flour and other wheat products.

Dear Sir:—It is still the practice of many manufacturers and dealers in cereal products to calculate the percentage of protein or gluten in wheat flour and gluten flour by multiplying the percentage of total nitrogen in the product by the factor 6.25.

At the time of the adoption of certain food standards by this department (see Circular No. 19, Office of the Secretary of Agriculture) this factor was generally used, but subsequent investigations have shown it to be incorrect, and in 1911 the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists adopted the factor 5.70. Regulation 4 for the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act prescribes the methods of analysis adopted by that association for the examination of food products in connection with the enforcement of that act.

It is, therefore, the opinion of this bureau that all statements of protein or gluten content on labels of wheat flour, gluten flour or other wheat products should be calculated by multiplying the percentage of nitrogen, as determined by the Kjeldahl or Gunning method, by the factor 5.70, and after June 30, 1915, this bureau will regard as misbranded such products in which an excessive amount of gluten or protein is declared on the label owing to the use of the incorrect factor 6.25.

Respectfully,
C. L. ALSBERG,
Chief.

Pittsburg, Pa., July 1, 1914.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed find one of our weekly price lists, to be used in the "Science of Advertising" page of your paper.

Yours truly,
HUEY & MATHEWS.

Huey & Mathews have a chain of six stores in the East End of Pittsburg. The circular which they send measures 9 x 12 inches and is printed in black on white paper of rather poor quality. Better paper, gentlemen, would enormously strengthen the impression created by this advertising. Here is the reduced reproduction:—

little spacing between the lines, which are mostly the full width of the sheet, and all this makes a very hard-reading combination. It is a fatal mistake to set an advertisement that way, for obviously you must make it as inviting as possible.

This is typical chain store advertising, and I have no doubt, generally speaking, that it pays, since almost all the large chain store systems use advertising much like this, and have done so for years. It has come to be a style typical of chain stores rather than of single stores. I believe I could greatly improve this advertisement, however.

means nothing to anybody. But if you pick out your 10-cent grade and talk about that—how fine it is, and why it is how superior to other 10-cent salmon, then you have a direct appeal that ought to sell salmon. To further strengthen it, I should put less stuff on the sheet, use larger type, put more spacing between the lines and use columns only half as wide as the sheet. I mean columns the width of "Regular 10-c. glass of jelly, half price," rather than columns that go clear across. Leave yourself space enough to say a little more for the goods you are offering, and the pulling strength of your advertising ought to be doubled, at least. Huey & Mathews cannot only, in my judgment, help the business getting the powers of their circular by changing it as I suggest, but they can give it a very much better appearance, suggesting a higher grade business. There is very much indeed in the appearance of the advertising that a store regularly issues in settling the store in a fixed place in the mind of the public. If it is cheap looking, the store is apt to be considered that way by the people who see the advertising. If it is carefully prepared, well printed and looks well, people intelligently get the same impression regarding the store and the business, and would much rather they had that impression of my store than the other one.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

Corn, Always Palatable, Reaches Perfection in "Corn Puffs."

By the time you read this most of you will have been told something about Corn Puffs, the newest thing in corn, and one that will prove a welcome addition to your stock. It is one of Prof. A. P. Anderson's creations, put out by the Quaker Oats Co., who say that "you have never known any product of corn anywhere near so delightful. The toasted corn flavor is brought to its fullness and it comes in fragile globules ready to crush at a touch."

It is being extensively advertised to your customers and the fact that the Quaker Oats Co. is behind it is sufficient assurance that every phase of the work will be well done.

Now would seem to be the proper time for you to stock up.—Adv.

CCLXX.—A Sample Damage Suit Against an Employer for the Acts of an Employee.

When an employee or agent of yours, out of zeal in what he believes to be the protection of your interests and your property, has somebody arrested for supposed stealing of goods, or trespass, or some other offense against your business, and the arrest proves subsequently to have been without good reason, when can damages be recovered against you for false arrest, and when must the victim get his damages, if he is entitled to any, from the employee that had him arrested?

This question always presents itself in such cases, mainly because the employer is usually financially responsible while the employee is not. The theory which victims of false arrests always invoke, when they can, to make the employer liable, is that an employer is responsible for the acts of his employees, when those acts are within the scope of the employee's authority. The conventional defense of the employer, when sued in such a case, is that the arrest of the plaintiff was not within the scope of the employee's authority, therefore the employee is alone responsible.

A case has just been decided which lends point to this discussion. Dilworth Bros. Co. are Pittsburg, Pa., wholesale grocers, and had an employee named T. P. Walsh. L. Goldsmit & Bros. were wholesale tobacco dealers, also of Pittsburg, and doing business within a short distance of the Dilworth business. One day a messenger boy went to the Goldsmit store with an order for some tobacco, purporting to bear the signature of Dilworth Bros. Co. The Goldsmit clerk for some reason suspected the signature and telephoned the Dilworth firm about it, receiving information that no such order had been issued. The messenger boy was then held while Walsh, the Dilworth employee, came over. The boy said two men in a back street had given him the order, and just then two men passed in the street. The boy pointed them out as the men who had given him the false order. They were reputable business men, but Walsh nevertheless had them arrested as the perpetrators of the fraud, and they were taken in custody and held for some hours. Then they were released and promptly sued Dilworth Bros. Co. for damages for false arrest, on the above-stated theory that Walsh, in having them arrested, was acting on behalf of his employer and was therefore within the scope of his authority. This made them responsible for his acts.

The case was tried before the lower court, and resulted in a verdict that Dilworth Bros. Co. were not responsible. It was appealed, and the Supreme Court has now also decided that the Dilworth Co. was not responsible. In its decision the Appeal Court cites a number of English cases as well as cases from all over the United States, so that the case becomes one of National authority.

The reason for the decision both in the lower and in the higher courts, that in this case—unlike hundreds of other cases which have been decided the other way—the employer was not responsible, makes clear the very crux of the law as to holding an employer liable to third persons for the illegal acts of his employee. Here is what the court laid down as the general principle:—

The defendant (Dilworth Bros. Co.) could only be made liable for the unlawful act of its employee when such act was expressly authorized or was ratified by the defendant or was done by the authority implied in the duties and powers of the employment. The general rule is that the employer is responsible for all acts done by the employee in accordance with the express direction of the employer and also for all acts done in the management of the employer's business within the scope of the employment, but when the act was not expressly authorized or was outside of the implied authority, the latter is alone responsible if the thing done be unlawful. Authority has been implied in numerous cases, but these all arose out of efforts of the servant to protect or recover property of the employer or to protect the employer's servants or business. One of the cases cited went so far as to hold that an employer was liable for the act of a servant in causing an arrest not involving the loss or recovery of property or the protection of the employees or property of the master.

This, being applied to our case, means that if an employee sees a thief stealing out of his employer's stock, and having him arrested is the most practicable way to protect or recover the goods, then he is justified in doing it, and if the arrest subsequently proves to have been unwarranted, the employer must pay damages if anybody pays them, because the employee was acting directly within the scope of his duties, one of which was certainly to see that nobody stole his employer's property.

But when nobody is stealing his employer's goods, and the goods are not in danger, then an arrest by an employee is not within the line of his duties, and the employer is not responsible. As the decision in this case puts it:—

If the arrest is made by the agent in the absence of the principal for the protection of property that is in danger, and in some cases where the arrest was to recover the property, or when the crime was at the time being perpetrated, authority may be implied, but where the act is done for the punishment of the supposed criminal or the vindication of the law, it is the individual act of the servant and not of the employer, and the latter is not liable.

A careful examination of the evidence does not disclose any facts from which it should be inferred that either Walsh or Collins (another employee of Dilworth Bros. Co.) was acting under the implied authority of his employment in causing the arrest of the plaintiff. The defendant had lost no property nor was it in danger of such a loss. The order presented to Goldsmit Bros. neither caused a loss to that firm nor to the defendant. The attempted fraud was promptly detected by Goldsmit Bros., and whatever offense was committed by the maker of the order was a past transaction when Walsh and Collins came onto the scene.

There are times when one's employees have to act quickly, and when arresting somebody seems the only practical way to avoid loss for their employers. As I explained in my previous article, issuing a warrant of arrest is always a serious and dangerous business and should never be done where there is any other way of accomplishing the result. Where an employee has somebody arrested merely in order to punish him for doing something in the injury of his employer, and the arrest later turns out to have been a mistake, the damages must come out of the employee, and not out of the employer.

Where the arrest is done to protect the property of the employer, which will be endangered if the arrest is not made, and this too turns out to be illegal, the damages come out of the employer, and the employee is regarded as a mere agent.

To sum the whole thing up, an employee makes his employer liable for a mistaken arrest or other illegal act against a third person only when that act is done in order to protect the employer's property against a threatened loss or injury. When the loss or injury is past, and the employee seeks only to punish the perpetrator, his arrest of the latter, if illegal, does not make the employer liable because the employee has no right to cause arrests for any such purpose.

Question: R. A. Bates, Cowart, Pa.—We have a number of customers who send their children after tobacco. Is it unlawful to deliver tobacco to children if you are sure their parents sent for same?

Answer.—In Pennsylvania the acts of 1889, 1901, 1903, 1905 and 1913 govern the sale of cigarettes and other tobacco products to minors. The clear idea running through all those acts is that what is intended to be prohibited is selling or giving the goods to minors for their own use. When it is shown that a minor is coming for a tobacco product only as the agent or messenger for some adult, my judgment is that there is no violation of law in giving it to him. I advise being very sure, however. The best way is to require a written order from the parent.

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

Some Suggestions How to Meet the Impression That Coffee is Harmful.

By WILLIAM B. HARRIS.

The grocer has recently seen so many articles in the papers and heard so much as to the injurious effect of coffee on the nerves of the average person that he is often at a loss to know what to say to counteract the impression that is being created very largely in the interests of the dealers who are selling cereal substitutes.

No one denies the fact that there are some people so constituted that they ought not to drink coffee. Where a person is physically weak and possesses nerves that are unbalanced, and finds in consequence the results from drinking coffee are unsatisfactory, he should without question leave the beverage alone.

There are a great many people who are forced from one cause or another to deprive themselves of certain food products. Doctors frequently tell patients that they must not eat starchy foods or they must not eat acid foods, and where coffee is included, on account of the physical condition of the patient, there is nothing else to do but give up. Sanitariums and hospitals are built for persons of this description. The strong healthy busy world, on the other hand, drinks coffee and then drinks more coffee, and it consists of the people who are doing things worth while.

It must not be overlooked, however, that the making of coffee has a great deal to do with its effect on the system. Coffee, like other food products, must be carefully prepared, and this fact is in many cases overlooked. Whether or not the caffeine in coffee is an objectionable property is a disputed question. Much has been written to the injurious effect of caffeine on the system, but there has also been as many experiments made and as much written on the other side of the question to the effect that the system is benefited by the stimulant in a cup of coffee from which there is apparently no reaction. There is much to be said, however, that coffee to be properly made should be quickly made. Where the ground coffee is put in a pot on the stove and allowed to boil indefinitely both the aroma and cup character are spoiled, and we find that there is extracted a larger percentage of caffeine and a larger amount of tannic acid. If these substitutes do effect the system unfavorably, then the coffee should be prepared as quickly as possible so as to extract the smallest quantity of both substances. If this is done there are very few persons who will find that coffee bothers them in the slightest degree, and not only this, but they will also find the beverage very much more palatable.

The dealer, therefore, should endeavor to impress upon his customers the desirability of more care in making coffee. The coffee pot should be free from every particle of sediment that is sometimes found where the pot is not properly cared for. The water should be fresh and boiling hard. The coffee should be fine ground and the beverage should be quickly made and the grounds removed. Making coffee is considered such a simple matter that very often the fact that the entire process must be carefully watched is overlooked, and the resulting beverage in consequence is far from satisfactory.

Here's A Law We All Need Bad.

When I get to Congress—have to get there pretty quick or I'll be too fat to go in the door—I'm going to pass a law letting other people butt in when a fellow starts to get married to some woman that he hadn't ought to marry.

You can't do that now, and my law's going to be the biggest thing that anybody ever put across. When a man starts out to get married now, ten chances to one he'll pick the last woman in the world that he ought to take up with.

And we've all got to stand by and see him do it without raising a kick. As it is now, it ain't any of our business. All right, my law is going to make it some of our business.

I'll wait a minute till the clapping is over. Much obliged.

There's many a fellow that has married a big bust and got darned little else. A big bust is all right in its place, but it ain't the whole thing.

These solemn remarks, gents, have come about because of the hole a fellow I know is in because of the messy hitch he made. He ain't a customer exactly, though I do sell him a bill once in a great while. Still I know him pretty well and know all about his case. Understand, he don't know he's in a hole, but all the same he is.

He's got a retail store in a good-sized town up in Montgomery County, Pa. His father paid $2,000 for a half interest in it for him. The thing wasn't big enough for two and father put up another $2,000 and bought the other half, so now the boy's got the whole thing. It takes some store in a country town to bring $4,000 and this is a good stand. There's a grand living in it for one man.

About a year ago he got married. Before I go on from there I want to say something more about him.

He's a good bit of a sport. Nothing rough, you understand, but he likes to run up to the city once in a while with a gang and stay over night. When he does that he's apt to blow in too much money and maybe hit 'em up a bit.

He's so blamed good natured that you can sell him darned near what you want to. Half the time he buys too much, and he's got a thousand dollars too much tied up in stock right now.

He's as careless as the devil about his books and about all his money business. Lets his books run down and his collections too. As long as he has a little bunch of coin in the bank, everything's fine. All of a sudden, a lot of bills will come due and then it's a mad scratch to get in enough to pay 'em. Nothing steady about it—first a loaf then a hustle. That ain't the way to run a business.

The fellow is a peach of a worker when he wants to be, and as a salesman nobody in the place can touch him. What he's always needed is a manager, if you know what I mean. Somebody to keep him down and keep him up. Put a halter on him and drive him along and he'd be a big winner.

All right, now we've got him going out to get married. Suppose I'd been to Congress and had got my law. It's up to me and the rest of the committee—I'm going to be the chairman, though, or I won't play. What? No, I ain't too fat to be the chairman, neither! It's my scheme, ain't it? All right, then you shut up! I'm chairman of the committee to pick the wives! That being settled, I'm out to pick one for this fellow. What kind ought he to have? He ought to have one of these nifty little managers, like a girl, say, that has taught school for five or six years. One of these little dames that are on the job. The kind that can keep books and run things if she has to. Nothing flighty or up in the air—she knows how to get a dollar's worth out of a dollar because she's been doing that for herself. A neat clean little thing with something in her skull besides air.

There's plenty of 'em like this. Maybe they ain't got a bushel of bust wobbling all over the streets, but they're there with the real goods every time.

Did my young friend pick one like that? He did not. He picked one that was below par everywhere he was, and then some. He picked one that wouldn't go in the store to help wait on trade, or on the books, because first she didn't know how and second that ain't what she got married for. She was a minister's daughter who had been brought up a lady! She didn't know anything about business and she didn't care anything about business. When it came to business she was the same neat little help that a big stone is when it's hung around the neck of a fellow in a swimming race.

And as for money, she was a bigger flinger than her husband. Manager? Sure, she'll manage to get him in the poor house before she's through. I say that she's the last girl in the world that he ought to have saddled himself with—the very last. Instead of bolstering him up where he needs to be bolstered up, she simply makes him worse than he was before.

I will say she has some shape, but shucks! Shape's all right, but good Lord it ain't everything. Sometimes it ain't anything!

I ain't meaning to say anything against her. She's a clever girl—good-looker and all that—thinks a heap of Sam, too, and he thinks she's a queen. But she ain't the woman for him and if I'd had my law she wouldn't have got him.

The quicker I get to Congress the better for everybody, I'll tell you that. THE STROLLER

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The Butler association has a convention club of twenty formed and it will attend the convention body.

The Pittsburg grocers' picnic July 22d at Westview Park was a big success. It is estimated 25,000 persons were present. There was some picnic. C. M. Weaver and William Smedley were present by invitation.

A feature of the day much appreciated by the large crowd was the free lunch served to all comers. From 11 o'clock A. M. until noon a fall lunch was handed out with a prodigal hand. It was good lunch too. President Durbin, secretary C. A. Bell and chairman Don were ably assisted by a committee of one hundred willing workers.

The Pittsburg association will send a big delegation to the Philadelphia convention. It is expected that the delegation will come by automobile.

Secretary Spotts, of Tarentum, was a visitor at the Pittsburg picnic. Secretary Spotts is president of the Pennsylvania Secretaries Association and he promises a programme for the annual meeting.

The Pottstown association will hold its annual outing on August 6th.

The Pottsville association will hold its "day out" on Thursday, August 20th. This is Pottsville's big event. All stores close on that day and if you want to find a Pottsville merchant you must attend the outing to do so.

Pittsburg butchers gave a picnic on July 22d at Idlewild. It was largely attended. Among the attractions was an ox roasting and calf dressing contest and free lunch. Attendance, 15,000.

The annual outing of the Northern Cambria Business Men's Association was held on July 30th at Sunset Park. Music was furnished by the Hastings Band. There was a big ball game, a shooting match and a picnic. The following towns participated:

ton, Hastings, Barnesboro, Cartown, Spangler and St. Benedict. was a big success.

The Butler Grocers' Association are a splendid picnic on July 22d at a local park. Stores all closed and the event was one that the grocers feel mighty proud of.

The Butler Merchants' Association have raised over $500 with which to entertain the guests of a picnic, which will be held in the latter part of August. All the amusement features of the park will be free and lunch will be served at all corners.

Mr. W. J. Troutman, the new president of the Butler Business Men's Association, is a live wire and a great believer in organization.

While in Butler we met ex-president Patterson. We hope to meet him again at the convention. He has just moved into a new building one of the most complete furniture establishments we have ever seen.

We spent a day with the newly formed Johnstown association and had the pleasure of meeting the officers and directors. This is a live wire organization and if it is met a big success it will not be the fault of Secretary McGarry. We have arranged to spend two days with this association, viz., August 5th and 6th. A meeting will be held on the latter date. The association now numbers 138 and will reach the 250 mark before the convention.

Organizer Smedley will address the merchants of Kittanning on August 4th.

Judging from reports already received the Philadelphia convention will be a great big event. Every reader of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" is invited to be present.

If this item meets the eye of a merchant in an unorganized town in Pennsylvania, please take it as an invitation to attend the merchants' convention at Philadelphia on September 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th. Come and catch the spirit of organization. If you do you will return to your home determined to organize your fellow merchants. Depend upon it, we will help you.

"As Easy to Handle as a Can of Tomatoes"

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is as easy for the grocer to handle as a can of tomatoes or a bottle of pickles. It's ready to sell when you get it. It requires no weighing, no wrapping, no tying—we've done all that for you at our refinery. We pack FRANKLIN SUGAR in CARTONS because the margin in sugar is so small that if you buy it in bulk and weigh it out, put it in bags, stand for the cost of bags, twine, labor and loss by overweight, you LOSE MONEY. FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR enables you to make a PROFIT instead of a LOSS, because it costs you nothing to handle. Your customers like the clean, neat CARTONS and, once having bought FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR, will always ask you for it because of its cleanliness, quality and purity.

The Convenience of the "Container"

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is packed in containers holding 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs., according to the grade of sugar, the fastest selling grades not being packed less than 48 lbs. to the CONTAINER and you are thus enabled to buy to suit the needs of your trade. The CONTAINER is a heavy fibre case that is guaranteed to carry its contents in perfect condition, but, is easier for you to open than a box or barrel—a penknife will open it.

Two Seasonable Trims

No. 1.

During this hot weather nobody cares to cook. Cold sliced meats and fruit, with dainty cakes, make a tempting lunch. To arrange this trim: First cover the bottom of the window with white crepe paper. In the center, in front, place a large neat sign card, with lettering as in illustration. Place white paper napkins around on the bottom and on them display sliced beef loaf, tongue, ham, etc., in platters garnished with some fresh parsley. On two of the plates place small dainty cakes and pound cake. In the center on a tall dish display fruit. Place some crepe paper across the window at the rear, use white for this, same as bottom. Cut some pale green crepe paper in long strips, about two inches wide, arrange them as in illustration. Place pyramids of canned goods under the twisted strips, in the spaces as in illustration, display salmon, lobster and canned fruit. Out of black glazed paper cut the letters to spell the words as illustrated. Place the letters on three very large palm-leaf fans and place them as in cut.

No. 2.

Rice is always a good article to display, but especially now, when a great deal of it is sold every day. To arrange this trim, first cover the bottom of the window with dark blue crepe paper. In the center, on a paper napkin, place a nice casserole, to suggest the tasty and delicious pudding. In front of it place a bottle of vanilla, a can of evaporated milk and a plate of raisins. On each side of paper napkins place a large pyramid of rice. At the back these place pyramids of the rice in one-pound bags. Use some of the blue crepe paper for across the bottom of the window at the rear; but before you tack it in place, first lay it on a flat surface, like a table or counter, and with a brush and some glue paint the letters as in illustration. Sprinkle the letters with the rice. Leave it lay long enough so the rice will stick fast; when thoroughly dry place it across the bottom of the window at the rear and finish at the top in the corners with twisted strips of the same.

European War's Effect Upon Markets in Foreign and Domestic Products.

Every Foreign Product Either Withdrawn or Sharply Advanced.

Cause is Difficulty of Shipping. High War Insurance and Advanced London Exchange. Most Foreign Products Will Be Unavailable, Outside of Spot Stocks, Until War is Over. Domestic Products Chiefly Affected Are Those Having Foreign Demand, Which is Temporarily Destroyed. Result is Probable Price Reductions. Detailed Statements as to Food Products, Dry Goods, Hardware, Shoes, etc.

The principal question of interest to the trade at the present time is the extent to which the European war situation is going to affect the markets in this country, not only for such staples as are brought over from abroad, but domestic products.

Most markets have been seriously disturbed during the week by the outbreak of war, and unless the conflict comes to a speedy end, the chance is that they will become more disturbed, with a general advancing tendency in prices.

As a general proposition, it may be said that every foreign food product which is accustomed to be brought into this country will be unavailable for the present, so far as getting any new supplies is concerned. Of course, in many lines there is stock on spot which will advance; in fact, has advanced in many cases already. New goods, however, will not be presently available for several reasons.

The first is the difficulty of getting vessels to bring them over. There are vessels available, but they hesitate to go out because foreign cruisers of the combatting countries are going about in search of whatever prizes they can find. As a result of this insurance companies have all announced enormous advances in war insurance, and shippers cannot afford to pay it.

Another reason is that the business in many foreign products is done on the basis of London Exchange, which has sharply advanced since war broke out, and may advance further. Any advance must be added to the cost of the goods, and this, with the increase of war insurance on shipments, would probably make prices in this country so high that nobody would pay them.

There are exceptions to this, such as tea and coffee, which are not produced in this country, and which, therefore, will be bought here no matter what the price becomes.

As to domestic products, there are two main factors in the situation. For many of these products there is a regular export demand. That will temporarily be cut off for the same reasons which prevent foreigners from sending their goods here. This will throw an increased supply of domestic goods upon our own markets and will almost certainly depress prices. The other factor is that on account of the general uncertainty in business a great many American buyers are curtailing their purchases to a very large degree, and this may still further tend to depress the market and reduce prices.

Probably the most directly affected product in the grocery line has been coffee. Immediately after war was declared the coffee market slumped, and all grades of actual coffee made a very sharp decline. As soon as the situation hardened a little, however, the market not only recovered all it had lost, but more. The New York Exchange closed and almost all speculation has ceased for the time being. Brazil coffees have advanced from the low point from 2 to 3 cents and mild grades at least 1 cent. Mocha has also very sharply advanced. The main reason for the present feeling of firmness is the difficulties that are outlined in the first paragraph of this article—the great advance in the cost of war insurance on floating cargoes, and the increase in London Exchange, on the basis of which all coffee is sold.

The stock of coffee in this country is calculated to last us probably three or four months, which would seem sufficient to prevent any famine.

The following detailed report on the coffee situation has been prepared for this paper by William B. Harris, the New York importer:—

As soon as war was formally declared on the continent, the coffee market broke, options showing a loss of over 150 points in two days. This resulted in closing the Coffee Exchange which will remain closed until further notice. In spite of the reaction in options, spot coffees remained exceedingly firm, no following the decline to any appreciable extent.

Within the past two days there have been advances in actual coffees of from 2 to 3 cents and in some instances, jobbers have withdrawn their coffees from the market or are quoting prohibitive prices. Some jobbing houses will make no contracts, selling for spot cash only.

The greatest activity in months has been noted. Thousands of bags are changing hands, and with each sale all quotations have been placed on a higher level. Exactly where the situation will end it is difficult to predict. Some dealers are looking for a further advance of at least 3 cents a pound. Certainly coffees will be very much higher, should the situation abroad show no improvement.

It is impossible to do any cost and freight business, as importers cannot secure exchange on London. Mild coffees are not at all plentiful, and available lines are being rapidly absorbed. The general opinion is that dealers should secure abundant supplies for the next sixty days, and many jobbers are wiring their out-of-town trade to this effect.

Supplies of satisfactory cup coffees are very moderate and naturally dealers who secure their selections first are likely to find them much better than the coffees that will follow after the selected chops have been taken up.

There is a considerable amount of undesirable coffee in the warehouses that is certain to be offered on this market and dealers should be careful in making their selections so as to avoid such chops.

The visible supply of coffee in the United States is approximately 1,500,000 bags, which is a supply for about three months. Although local buyers are alive to the situation, the market has not yet begun to hear from out-of-town trade. As soon as the roasters from the interior become fully alive to the situation, New York and other markets will be flooded with buying orders, and there will be a clamor which it will be a very difficult matter to satisfy.

That the market is an uncertain one all are willing to admit, and the dealer must in any event use his own best judgment as to what he is likely to require while the market is in its present tense condition. There is very little question, however, but that purchases for the next sixty days are perfectly safe at present prices.

The situation is an extraordinary one, and although it is advisable for the trade to protect itself as far as possible, yet on the other hand, care should be taken not to overdo the matter, as the reaction that will follow any possibility of a settlement of the existing difficulties is apt to be just as rapid as the advance that has recently taken place.

Teas have also been very seriously affected. The spot stocks in this country are very low, and any factor which promises to interfere with them is certain to be regarded as important. On account of the increase in war insurance and also London Exchange, it is probable that new teas will actually cost, delivered in this country, about cents per pound more than before the war broke out. Old teas are very scarce and are intrinsically worth about 5 cents per pound more than a month ago. New teas on spot also show a very decided advance. The point of the market is the great uncertainty in getting any more teas than are now in the country. In some cases vessels carrying teas, a short distance out of primary points, have been ordered back on account of the danger of capture. Only under extraordinary conditions will vessels come from the tea producing ports to this country while the present war is on. If we are entirely reduced to our present spot stock of teas, prices can, and undoubtedly will, go materially higher.

Imported fish products have been particularly hard hit by the war. The following general statement on the subject has been furnished to this paper by Mr. Gustav Porges, secretary of Strohmeier & Arpe Co., New York City:—

Owing to the present political disturbances in Europe, it is almost impossible for us to-day to give a satisfactory market report. Since the outbreak of hostilities between the various nations in Europe, we were obliged to send two and three and four cables to our friends abroad before we got a reply, and then the reply was unsatisfactory. They could not tell us whether they were able to ship any goods, and which steamers would be leaving if there were any leaving at all, and taking freight. Of course, it is entirely out of question to figure on getting any goods from German ports, but even our friends located in neutral ports are unwilling to commit themselves and promise shipments, because they do not know what the next hour may bring forth and how the situation may change and affect them.

Practically on all food products the prices for stocks on hand have been advanced very materially during the last few days. This particularly applies to goods which come from Germany, and also those coming from France and Russia. We could have sold practically our entire stock of merchandise to speculators, but we feel it our duty to our old clients not to do so, and to keep the stock on hand to be able to supply our regular trade at prices which have been advanced by us only to meet the increased cost of exchange, warage and other incidentals. Of course, we are

This Truck Builds Business and Saves Time

Consider the three-quarter ton Willys Utility Truck just as you consider a telephone.

You have a telephone because you know that its cost is only a small fraction of the cost of the time it saves—and because it gives you the power to talk, quickly and easily, with people too far away to call on.

You must use a telephone or be badly handicapped. This was not so years ago. It is so to-day because the 'phone has come into universal use and set a standard that you cannot afford to fall behind. Things change.

Just so with the Willys Utility Truck. Motor trucking is becoming universal in every line of business—in yours. The Willys saves far more than its cost, in time and in contented, well served customers.

And it reaches out and gets new customers that you cannot possibly reach and serve with horses. It builds business and saves time. It multiplies profits. You cannot afford to drop behind the standard it has set.

The Willys Utility is the best proposition on the truck market. It costs thirty per cent. less than others of its size because we are manufacturing in large quantities, and as production goes up, cost comes down. It is a better truck because it is made by a larger, more skilled and better equipped organization.

obliged to cut down all orders, and we are making only percentage deliveries.

It would be useless for us to give any particular report about any special article to-day, because everything in our line to-day is in excellent demand, and stocks of practically all goods handled by us are very limited, and unless further supplies are forthcoming very shortly, there will be a shortage of everything that we handle. Just at this moment we received a cable from our representative in Holland, advising us that up to date the arrival of Holland herrings amount to only 63,389 barrels, against 100,802 barrels in 1913, from which figures it appears that fishing of late has been rather unsuccessful. Our correspondent also cables that reports from Scotch fishing quarters are also very bad. Consequently, the herring market is tending firmer. Besides the quality of the Holland herrings taken was not fit for export. In view of the European disturbances there is all reason to believe that prices for Holland and Scotch herring will advance, if they have not advanced already at this writing.

To this may be added the detailed information that all prices of foreign sardines, including French, Portuguese and Norwegian brands, have been withdrawn. There is no certainty whether there will be any packs in these countries, especially in France, which is one of the belligerents. And even if the war should come to a close within a few weeks, the season would be so curtailed that prices would probably remain high during the balance.

Norway and Irish mackerel will undoubtedly be affected, although they have not been very much influenced as yet.

Although Norway is not among the fighting countries, she is very much interested because her mackerel are taken mostly from the North Sea, where several naval engagements have already taken place. Even if the fishing were not interrupted, the dangers of shipping would be so great that probably no Norway mackerel would be brought here, nor would any from Ireland for the same reason. The same applies to herring from Holland, Scotland and Norway.

Very fortunately, there is this year an unusual supply of our own shore mackerel, which are ruling low in price. How far this supply will go, however, in satisfying the entire demand is problematical.

Domestic fish products have not as yet been interfered with. The main line is salmon, which is just now beginning its season. A very large quantity of salmon has been sold to jobbers, subject to approval of price. Undoubtedly some of these will curtail their orders on

Here Is a Truly Novel Scheme

Pittsburg Department Store Establishes a Children's Store on One Floor and Establishes Child Elevator Starters, Clerks, Wrappers' and Floorwalkers. Sell all Sorts of Merchandise, Mostly Samples From Manufacturers, For "Play Money," Which Can Only be Gotten by Buying Regular Goods at the Main Counters.

One of the cleverest stunts the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has seen in a long time was pulled off a few days ago by Kauffman Bros. department store in Pittsburg, Pa. The scheme is described in the following advertisement, which was one of those used to exploit it:—

"Play Store"

(In our new Auditorium, Eleventh Floor.)

Closes
Wednesday Evening

If your children have not yet visited the "Play Store," bring them in To-Morrow as no "Play Money" will be redeemed after Wednesday.

Hundreds of useful and pretty things will be on sale. Boys and Girls up to 14 years are the customers, and boy and girl clerks are behind the counters. A package of "Play Money" with which the children make their purchases, is given to parents making purchases of 25c or over in any department of "The Big Store."

(Play Store Open Mornings
10 to 12—Afternoons 2 to 4.)

Part of the eleventh floor was practically given over to a children's store. There were children elevator starters for the elevators that took people up to it, children floorwalkers, wrappers and clerks. All sorts of merchandise was on the counters, mostly that which would appeal to children. A large part of the merchandise which was disposed of was contributed by manufacturers in the form of samples. The children cheerfully gave up their play money for it. There were also some articles from the regular stock, mostly small and inexpensive.

In order to patronize the Play Store, a child had to have play money, and the only way to get that was to buy regular goods at the main counters. Every 25-cent purchase got a package of play money. People who saw the scheme worked say there was a surging crowd of children pushing through the store the whole time the plan was on, and a very great apparent increase in the regular business. Naturally the children, being greedy for all the play money they could get, solicited business for the store every minute of the time.

account of uneasiness about business, and this may or may not affect the market to some extent. There is some export demand for salmon which of course will be lost for the time being.

Spices, being entirely imported, have felt the effects of the situation and have very sharply advanced through the whole line. Since war broke out many sellers entirely withdrew from the market, and at least temporarily, the situation is very sensitive.

Tapioca, being another product not raised in this country, also advanced a substantial fraction.

All foreign dried fruits have felt the advancing tendency. Possibly currants have felt it more directly than any other article. Owing to the improbability of getting in more currants for the time being, sellers of futures have withdrawn their prices, and currants on spot have advanced from 1 to 2 cents per pound within the week. Undoubtedly they will advance further unless the situation is relieved.

Imported raisins, meaning particularly Smyrna Sultanas, have advanced from 1 to 2 cents from the same cause and California Sultanas, which are the nearest thing to currants available, are also a fraction higher.

The situation in prunes is rather unfortunate, from the standpoint of the American holder. Anticipating the usual very large demand from abroad for new prunes, the growers and the packers have been holding their stocks at exceedingly high prices since the opening of the season. Already, since it has appeared that this foreign demand will either not be forthcoming at all, or will be very seriously curtailed, the market on new prunes has declined at least one-half cent per pound. If the situation fails to clear up very shortly indeed prices will undoubtedly go lower, because, without foreign demand, this year's production of prunes will be much larger for our own use.

The same thing applies in even greater force to California apricots. The bulk of our production of apricots is sold abroad. If the demand from there is not forthcoming, apricots will be a drug upon the American market.

To a certain extent the same applies to evaporated apples. The business on futures has been brought to a standstill on account of the European conditions. Exporters are doubtful of being able to make shipments and are therefore taking no business. As a matter of fact, they could not get a market even if they would take it. The market is easy on this account.

As to fresh apples, they, too, will feel the effects. There is an enormous crop of apples this year, as told in detail in another column. If the usual large export trade in apples is lacking, the supply left for our own consumption will be enormously in excess of ordinary requirements. Prices will very likely suffer in consequence.

Another line to feel the effect of the war is flour. When the war first broke out the wheat market advanced very greatly and flour prices usually followed. Prices jumped about $1 per barrel. Later, however, wheat declined, and so did flour, losing probably 75 cents from the original advance of one dollar. Later, though, it advanced 50 cents more, and at the present writing is about steady, but sensitive enough to change almost at any moment. The wheat market is undoubtedly much easier than it was, and by the same token so is flour. If anything occurs to interfere with our shipments of wheat abroad, the market will undoubtedly decline very greatly here, as will the market for flour. A more desperate effort, however, will be made to prevent interference with wheat shipments than in the case of shipments of other products, for the reason that wheat is a war necessity and for gners want all of ours which they n get.

No effect has been experienced yet upon domestic brands of anned goods. Our export business in these is not especially rge, meaning particularly Eastern anned goods, and the situation is erefore about undisturbed. How-ver, in California canned goods
e packers have been considerably t to it to protect very nearly one illion dollar's worth of their oods which were afloat when war oke out. They have already paid ery high insurance rates upon this, ad undoubtedly will not ship any ore until the situation clears.

All handlers of foreign nuts in is country withdrew prices almost immediately. The same rea-ons which animated sellers of ther products animated the sellers f nuts, and until they know that ey are going to be able to ship ithout interference they will offer o goods. There are some foreign uts on spot and of course large available supplies from California.
rices, however, will undoubtedly e higher. A very large supply of alifornia walnuts has been sold to merican jobbers all over the coun-y, subject to approval of price.
here is some expectation that ese orders may be cut down
o matter what prices are named.

During the week the dealers in eylon cocoanut have also with-rawn prices, and the sellers of imported citron have advanced prices cent.

Sugar has very sharply advanced uring the week, as it is intimately ssociated with the foreign sitution. Raws, because of the direct ffect which the situation in the European beet countries will have pon the coming crops, have advanced very sharply, and as much s 3 cents per pound has been asked or them. All refiners have advanced their prices for refined sugar. Nominally 5 cents is now being asked for granulated, although some refiners, if not all, will sell at a shade under. One actor is that England, being un-ble to buy sugar in Europe, is coming to this country both for raw and refined sugar. A price of 6 cents per pound for granulated, if resent conditions continue, would not be in the least surprising.

Another line to be affected is ocoa. Spot holders are asking higher prices, and the entire market

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS KINDLY MENTION "MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD"

WITH THE EDITOR

There has never been a time within the writer's experience when the business conditions in this country were so seriously disturbed as they are now by reason of the European war. But by disturbed we mean nothing worse than unsettled. There is nothing especially depressed about them, and there is not the slightest reason for anticipating any calamity. It is true that we are all going to pay more money for a lot of products than we have been paying, and some foreign products that we have been accustomed to sell and to consume, we are probably going to get along without for a while. But that in many cases will be nothing more than a temporary inconvenience. In the long run it may teach us that we did not need foreign products as much as we thought we did. Woolens in the dry goods line, and macaroni and olive oil in the food line, are cases in point. If the supplies of foreign products are cut off temporarily, as they certainly will be if this war keeps up a while, it will demonstrate that we can be a great deal more independent of other people than we would otherwise ever have had the courage to become.

Meanwhile our own conditions are all right. There is plenty of money in the banks, and if that is not enough, the Government will furnish more. There is not the smallest reason for any greater scarcity of money for legitimate business purposes to-day, than there has been, although undoubtedly the man who wants to borrow money to speculate with will have some trouble getting it from banks. The closing of all the speculative exchanges eliminates practically all speculation, and incidentally the writer would be exceedingly glad if the exchanges should never reopen. The good they may occasionally do by steadying values is much outweighed by the harm they do by lending themselves to all sorts of crooked market movements.

Practically all our crops are good. Some are enormous and almost unprecedented. To be sure, it would be inconvenient if there should be no foreign demand to take the surplus of these, but if there is not, the result will be sharp lowering prices at home, and we can stand a little of that. The unpleasant effect of this upon the producer may be offset by the increased consumption which the lower prices will bring and the fact that lack of the imported will inevitably bring better demand for the domestic.

As a matter of fact, if this war doesn't last too long, it may bring to the business interests of this country the greatest boom in their history—a boom beside which that of the Civil war may seem like the merest flurry. All Europe as well as England, is at war. Their men are drafted for fighting, their industries are neglected—though their consumption is increased. Their spot stocks will soon disappear. If peace should come just about then, there would come in an hour's time such an avalanche of orders for the products of this country that we would be plunged into a perfect maelstrom of activity. For it is certain that when these foolish nations begin to cool off and want goods, the logical place to come for them will be the United States.

How long will the war last? Many opinions are expressed, ranging from one week to thirty years. The writer's opinion is that it will last only until the German Kaiser learns that the most gigantic bluff of his life has been called. At the present rate of progress, that should not take long.

One does not often need to come to the defense of C. M. Wessels, president of the company which represents the Something About a Wessels Incident.

Grocery and Allied Trade Press as advertising agents. Mr. Wessels is generally known as a man able and perfectly willing at all times to look out for himself. However, a story has been put into circulation against him which reflects on his methods as an advertising solicitor, and in that subject this paper has a keen business interest, outside of its desire not to see lies told about any man.

The story appears to emanate from Mr. John Bratton, editor of the "Southern Merchant," whose bump of humor seems to be a deep well in which the old oaken bucket could easily fit. Mr. Bratton devoted something like an entire issue of his paper recently to discussing the advertising methods of Mr. Wessels, a subject doubtless of sensational interest to his clientele of Georgia retailers. In the course of his article he referred to Mr. Wessels as having once bludgeoned or stormed his way into the offices of the American Salesbook Co., and having gotten an advertising contract from them, practically at the point of a pistol. Furthermore, Mr. Bratton, who is going to feel bitterly ashamed of himself in a minute, said Mr. Wessels boasted about it.

At the time this incident is supposed to have transpired, the sales manager of the American Salesbook Co., and the reputed victim of the Wessels assault, was A. Landon, who was then and is now Mr. Wessels' warm friend.

Landon was invited to address the convention of the Grocery and Allied Trade Press at Niagara Falls and related in a humorous and exaggerated way, how the organization's advertising representative, M. Wessels, got an advertising contract from the Salesbook Co. In this, which was absolutely jolly, there was the talk about dynamite and murder which Mr. Bratton is now resurrecting.

Mr. Landon's methods as a humorist were too subtle for two of his auditors, Col. McLean, of the "Canadian Grocer," and, it now appears, Mr. Bratton. After Mr. Landon's speech Col. McLean sent his manager to Mr. Wessels and cancelled his authority to represent his paper. "Why?" "Because that's the way you solicit advertising, I don't want you in my employ." Mr. Wessels at once told Mr. Landon to Col. McLean, and the manager of the Salesbook Co. was not very happily, as we may imagine, explained that it was all a joke. Col. McLean then apologized and Mr. Wessels went on representing and still represents the "Canadian Grocer." Furthermore he kept the business of the American Salesbook Co. for two years after he is supposed to have helped them up.

At the time, friend Bratton gave no sign that the Landon humor had gone over his head. He comes up now with this awful charge, and says with a perfectly straight face that that is why he is taking no advertising from the Wessels agency. Now we have no information why he is taking no Wessels advertising, if he is not, but we are willing to make a small wager that it is not the reason he gives.

Has Courtesy Over the Telephone Become Remarkable?

While in the office of a client recently my attention was attracted by a young man who was answering the telephone. He answered it several times and once or twice called people up. The remarkable thing about it was the extreme courtesy and suavity with which he spoke to everybody. He even thanked them all, as if he meant it. One could easily imagine the person at the other end mellowing under the agreeable and unusual experience of being spoken to politely over the telephone.

My attention became so fixed upon this performance that I finally asked myself: "Is it possible that politeness in any phase of business has become so unusual that such a small exhibition of it as this will attract attention? This young man is doing nothing in the least remarkable—he is simply being po-te when he should be polite." was forced to admit that politeness—perhaps I had better say courteousness, which is politeness carried to the maximum—in dealings over the telephone has become so unusual as to attract attention. The telephone is not conducive to extreme courtesy. You don't see the flesh-and-blood person before you, and you may be having trouble making your party hear. I have frequently found myself using with absolute unconsciousness tones and inflections over the telephone which if used face to face would probably have gotten for me a swift slap in the face. It was not my fault—I meant not the smallest disrespect; probably the party on the other end was doing the same thing to me. The fault was and is the telephone's—it does not embody the check upon discourtesy that the actual presence of a person does.

Speaking again of the young man whose conduct at the telephone inspired these reflections, he could probably sell twice as many goods by telephone as the average man. The consumer, expecting the usual gruff, uncivil and brusque tones, would be so delightfully surprised that she would probably order twice as much as she intended. She would at any rate want to, which is almost as much to be desired as the order.

The telephone companies are doing some good with their little advertising talks about "Telephone Courtesy," but the courtesy they want shown is courtesy to their sometimes incredibly stupid operators. Why doesn't somebody have cards printed to attach to every telephone mouthpiece, reading: "Talk as if you were Face to Face."

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

National Coffee Roasters' Association.

The above organization has issued the following statement to its members:—

Dayton, Ohio, July 31, 1914.

To the Members of the National Coffee Roasters' Association.

The Coffee Exchange is closed for the present. Telegrams from members requesting such action were doubtless influential in bringing about this result.

The Exchange's decision is gratifying because in such times, calm deliberation is essential to the successful conduct of business.

Our members should carefully consider the differences between Exchange option values and values of actual coffees. Undoubtedly Rios and Victoria spot coffees have declined in sympathy with options; but fine cupping, desirable Santos and other fancy coffees have not wholly followed this course, though they may have made partial sympathetic declines.

If the course of the market has been influenced solely by the European war possibilities, independent of the coffee statistical situation, the reaction is apt to be as abrupt as the declines. Such reaction might be hastened if war should interfere with transportation from Brazil; a possibility not to be ignored in view of the fact that much of the shipping is in French and German bottoms.

The association's province under present conditions seems to be to counsel careful consideration of actual values for good coffees, to the end that there should be no needless sacrifice of stocks our members may now be carrying.

Old crop, soft Santos coffees of desirable roasting quality are comparatively scarce. There really is no fixed quotation at the moment, the prices asked depending largely upon the sentiment of the owner. Cables from Brazil indicate that the new crop is of desirable cup quality, but poor roasters.

We respectfully submit these views to our membership and feel confident that each one will properly determine upon the right course to pursue.

Very truly,

THE NATIONAL COFFEE ROASTERS' ASSOCIATION.

Geo. W. Toms, Secretary.

41—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because if you don't—especially if you put obstacles in the way of their sale—people will soon come to dislike and resent it.

¶ This is as true as gospel. Take a nationally advertised product on which you feel—perhaps with reason—that you are making too little profit. When you have calls for this you therefore endeavor, as perhaps you have a perfect right to do, to divert them to some non-advertised substitute.

¶ You succeed in this the first time, and perhaps the customer does not resent it. But what about it the second and third and tenth times? Is it not inevitable that after the customer's requests have been combated again and again, she will finally go where she can get what she asks for? Think this over.

Here's a New Line on the Quality of Advertised Goods

Pennsylvania Contributor Says All Unadvertised Goods are Imitations of Advertised Goods, and the Latter are Therefore Sure to Be Better. Cites Several Brands to Prove It.

[The following excellent article was submitted in the last monthly contest, but reached this office a day late.—Ed.]

If certain goods or things are imitated, which are the better, the originals or the imitations? This question should in 90 per cent. of the leading cities or towns of the country be an answer to the question whether advertised or unadvertised goods were of better quality.

Seventy-five per cent. of the salesmen selling unadvertised brands of rolled oats compare them with and use the Quaker or Mother brands, to say "just as good as these." Almost every baked bean salesman says his unadvertised brands are as good as Heinz beans or Snider's or Van Camp beans.

If Rockefeller, Carnegie, or any other big successful money man offered to tip you off to something good you would most likely put your pennies where they said you could turn them into dollars. Now why is this? These men have been very successful in turning their pennies into dollars and, if they say so, you believe in them. Many a Nationally advertised article is like one of these men; it has the reputation and many manufacturers are ready to imitate it. Not only ready, they do. If the law allowed it they would use the same color, style and trade-marks on their various goods.

Speaking of Nationally advertised goods, the advertising does not make the goods any better in quality, but hanged if they haven't the best goods Nationally advertised. You will generally take a chance on a friend being what a friend is supposed to be. The same feeling of trust and confidence is placed in various Nationally advertised goods. The majority of trade ask for goods by name, still there are thousands who buy some of these goods for the first time. They do not ask in a suspicious way, hesitating and undecided, but in a confident trusting way, as though they felt sure of what they were going to receive before they even saw the article asked for. Now with unknown brands there is always a lot of talking and explaining just what they are supposed to be and not supposed to be, and then a final, if it is not as good as such and such return it. The Nationally advertised line is always uniform in quality, to-day they are the same as last week, and so on. The unknown brands seldom can boast of uniformity of quality. When the trade pays 10 cents for a 1½-pound package of Quaker or Mother's oats and refuses the 2-pound package of the private brand at the same price, there must be a difference. Karo syrup is a great big seller at 10 cents for 1½-pound can and Crystal Drip goes begging at 10 cents for a 2-pound can. Kellogg's Corn Flakes, Washington Crisps and Post Toasties are every day sellers, while all the corn crinks and flaked corn under private brands need a premium to move them on their way. Crisco, a vegetable shortening, three pounds for 50 cents, is a wonderful seller; there are other vegetable shortenings at 11 cents a pound. Our average is ten cases of Crisco to one 80-pound tub of bulk vegetable shortening. Crisco must be better. Royal, Rumford and Davis baking powders are the country's biggest sellers. Ninety-five per cent. of other brands, including private brands, need a premium to sell them. Swans Down flour at 25 cents a box is a great big seller. We have other kinds that give the consumer three times as much for the same price, still they prefer Swans Down. Wrigley's Spearmint gum at 5 cents a package is the big seller; there are plenty of other Spearmint gums but Wrigley's is the kind they want. One could name almost every article and compare the price with Nationally advertised and unadvertised and find that the quality line is always dangling from the Nationally advertised, while the unadvertised line is simply a trailer and generally off the track at that.

When you are compelled to say "just as good," then there must be a better to compare with. The Nationally advertised line is the line they try to follow. The consumer generally feels satisfied in buying Nationally advertised goods without check or premium.

Variations From Exact Weight Which Will Be Allowed Under New Pennsylvania Law.

Bureau of Standards Will Pass Shortages Varying From One-eighth Ounce in a Pound of Rice to Ten Ounces in Forty-nine Pounds of Flour. Various Small Package Goods Exempted Entirely.

The Pennsylvania commodities act of 1913, which has frequently been referred to in these columns, contains a section requiring all package goods to bear a statement of their net weight or measure on the label. There is a further provision that the Bureau of Standards shall prescribe tolerances for articles requiring them. Tolerances really mean variations from exact weight, which come from evaporation, shrinkage or hasty packing methods.

The Bureau of Standards has established these variations, and announced them last Monday, as follows:—

What Is Wrong With the General Merchant in His Fight Against Mail Order Houses?

Western Contributor Who Seems to Have Special Knowledge on the Subject, Says They Fail to Show Sufficient Energy. A Convention of 750 Merchants That Laid Almost Completely Down. An Instance Which Teaches a Lesson.

Many a general merchant loses materially to the retail mail-order houses because he insists on having the retail catalogue man's head brought to him on a platter.

He apparently is unwilling to expend the energy in thinking, studying and fighting that is necessary if one is going to win against retail mail-order—and with which one most certainly can win against retail mail-order.

If five thousand general merchants would be willing to go into this thing and fight it hard—like H. Leslie Wildey, of Graettinger, Iowa, for instance—the head of the retail mail-order house would be on the platter in a few years.

These five thousand merchants would buy goods of the catalogue houses and find out for themselves for a fact that retail mail-order goods on the average are not lower priced, freight and service considered, than those of the local dealer who keeps his prices on a fair level.

These merchants would advertise in five thousand or more towns that they would beat retail mail-order price on these items and pay half the freight. They would write not less than fifteen thousand letters to Senators and Representatives insisting upon a National pure advertising law which would make it an offense to use the mails to describe a thing as something better than it really is.

And there is no doubt at all that things would be in different shape within a reasonably short time.

Why, then, all this being the case, do not these five thousand merchants get busy?

They don't because they—well we may as well use plain, simple English in describing it—they don't make this kind of campaign because they lack energy.

In a big convention a year or two ago 750 merchants became enthusiastic over an address given by a live wire retailer and promised to write at least one letter a month on the subjects above mentioned. Of the 750 men, 670 did not write a letter. Eighty wrote one letter each. Eight wrote two letters and one wrote three letters.

What is that but plain laziness?

Then, the general merchant many times is afraid. He hesitates at hurling back into the retail mail-order man's teeth certain things that do much harm to the retail store. He is afraid if he says anything he will advertise the retail mail-order man's business!

The people who read retail mail-order catalogues are told on nearly every page how much less these prices are than the ones asked by the local merchant.

Why don't you put the people right on this?

You certainly can't blame people if they buy where they think they can save the most money. You do the same thing yourself. The average person would never buy a thing from a retail mail-order house were it not for the fact that they think the local merchant charges too much. Some merchants do overcharge.

And good able general merchants all over the country permit the R. M. O. houses to pound away on this statement until finally it is driven home in a way that often is a lasting detriment to the home store.

If you do charge the people too much you have no right to complain when they send away from home.

If you don't charge them too much and are too indolent or too timid to fight back when the retail catalogue makes this accusation against you the same thing holds good.

Industry, nerve, enterprise and enthusiasm on the part of the merchants of this country would soon put them well in the lead in the fight.

Let us tell you a little story—true story—showing how merchants beset with R. M. O. competition hold their fate and future in their own hands.

Efficiency experts connected with a big retail mail-order house discovered that in a certain Eastern county they had not succeeded in selling a single piece of farm machinery. They sent a couple of good men to the county with orders to stay there six months if necessary to find out the reason why. In a week these men found out. They made their report and the house gave it up as a bad job.

They ascertained that a big hardware store which specialized on farm machinery had two automobiles constantly in service, going over the whole county, each taking a couple of expert farm implement men to repair farmers' machinery.

These experts would visit every farmer and go over his machinery with him. If they found that a little tinkering would put a machine in shape so it would last another year they were free to advise the farmer not to buy a new one. In such a case of course the farmer would wait another year, but when he did buy he surely would go to the firm that made the suggestion. Moderate charges were made for the repairs. And, as may be expected, many machines were sold.

That county to-day is absolutely water-tight so far as retail mail-order farm implements are concerned. The R. M. O. people absolutely can't work in there in this respect and have quit trying.

What is the matter with this as an object lesson and an inspiration to merchants who realize the necessity of doing something to check the rapidly growing retail mail-order proposition?

New York Authorities Decide, Contrary to Other States, That Canvased Hams are Package Goods.

The Attorney-General of the State of New York has rendered an opinion that hams, bacon and other meats covered by canvas, paper or other coverings are "in containers," and must be marked with the net weight of the meat under the New York State law. This opinion is directly contrary to decisions and opinions rendered in Nebraska, Montana, California and Florida under similar statutes, and also under the Federal net weight law. The difference between the New York law and that of other States is that it expressly defines wrapper as a "container," and all products in "containers" must be marked. The Attorney-General has consented to a test suit in this matter, and it will doubtless be brought at an early date, so that there may be a clear determination of the intent of the New York State law. Previous to the announcement of the opinion briefs were filed in behalf of the American Meat Packers' Association and individual concerns, in which the contention was made that it was not the intent of the Legislature to consider coverings intended for sanitary purposes as "wrappers" or containers; that the markings required would be untruthful from the time of packing, as the meats would shrink and the coverings would increase in weight owing to the absorption of fats, and that the way would be opened to defraud the consumer by selling at marked instead of net weights. Legal arguments were also made, but the Attorney-General maintains that the word "wrapper" in the statute is so comprehensive that it must include the usual coverings of hams and bacon, and so decides.

The New York Letter

The New York State Retailers' Convention. Foreign Products Hard Hit by European War. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, August 6, 1914.

About 250 members were present when the New York State Retail Grocers' Association opened its annual convention in this city in the Broadway Central Hotel, Monday of this week. At later sessions, the attendance was increased by large numbers of retailers from New York and Brooklyn, who were as much interested in the proceedings as the official delegates.

President John Steeneck, of the New York City society, called the convention to order and prayers were offered by the Rev. J. A. Weyl. Then Chairman Henry Minners, of the Convention Committee, welcomed the delegates in behalf of the local associations. Past President George Suhr, of Buffalo, responded, and thanked the local committees for their hearty welcome and the excellent arrangements made for the convention.

Another address of welcome was delivered by President W. A. Marble, of the Merchants' Association. He compared the warlike spirit in Europe and the troubles and burdens of the European countries with the peaceful and enlightened policy of the United States, which gives all merchants an opportunity to prosper.

Peter Becker, of Brooklyn, vice-president of the State Association, made a fitting response.

Committees were appointed as follows, and it was announced that the presidents of all associations were ex-officio members of such committees:—

Credentials.—Chas. Haslop, New York; Urban Jehle, Buffalo; F. W. Meddaugh, Elmira.

Rules and Order.—Philip DePuyt, Rochester; Henry Heins, Brooklyn; Floyd Fox, Gloversville.

Resolutions.—George Hubbell, Wells-ville; C. C. Gender, Olean; George Schmidt, Buffalo; Henry Menze, Brooklyn.

The Rules Committee reported the usual convention rules. As the time limit of speakers in debate, it fixed five minutes and decided that no member should talk more than once on the same subject.

The annual address of the State president, William Jeffery, Hornell, showed that the organization had enjoyed a prosperous year. There has been some growth in membership and much increase in the activity of the organization in legislative and other kinds of work.

At the afternoon session an important address was delivered by Wm. H. Steinkamp, counsel of the New York City Association. He urged the grocers to take an active part in shaping legislation by giving legislators the benefit of their advice and practical experience.

The speaker pointed out that the legal questions affecting the grocers in New York City are quite different in some respects from those who are likely to interest the retailers in smaller cities and towns. He described how various laws affect retail business and said that there is room for improvement in commercial laws so as to make conditions more certain and thus lessen litigation.

Frank W. Mendum, Boston, Mass., a trustee of the National Association, spoke in behalf of that organization. He urged active co-operation between the National and the State Associations and pledged the assistance of the National Association to New York.

Because of illness, President Louis Runkel, of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association, was not present to deliver his address and his place on the programme was filled by the secretary of the same association, H. T. Thunhorst, who gave an inspiring address on the benefits to be obtained from the various branches of the trade working together for their common interests.

Fred. Mason, the general manager of the Shredded Wheat Co., was expected at the evening session, but sent word that it was impossible for him to attend. Former President C. S. Tuttle, now with the same company, spoke on various trade matters. He received a hearty welcome.

Tuesday morning reports were presented by delegates as to the conditions of the various local associations. The reports indicated that these associations are generally in a prosperous condition and ready at all times to aid the State organization in its various efforts.

L. W. Winklemann, Brooklyn, reported as the delegate to the last National convention in Louisville.

President John Steeneck, of the New York City Association, delivered the principal address of the morning, in which he handled without gloves the questions as to quantity and fixed prices. He described the dangers of the chain stores, as viewed by the ordinary retailers and measures that have been taken to meet such dangers, such as the organization of buying exchanges.

He said that quantity prices are an essential factor in building up a Food Trust, but yet he did not see how a manufacturer can altogether abolish quantity discounts. In this emergency, he said, the only hope, both for the retailer and the manufacturer, is in fixed prices to the public. An unbridled quantity price system would build up a great monopoly that would prove most unpopular, but the fixed prices tend to regulate and balance the effect of the quantity prices.

Tuesday afternoon was given up to a trip to Coney Island, where the grocers saw all of the sights and enjoyed the numerous amusements.

Wednesday the Committee on Resolutions presented its report which was adopted.

One of the resolutions was in relation to a carload of fruit jars made by the Kerr Manufacturing Co., Portland, Ore., and bought by the Elmira Association. The jars bore the guaranty stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association, which is requested in the resolutions to bring about a settlement of questions raised as to the jars. The Elmira Association charges that the jars were not as they were represented to be at the time of the sale.

Another resolution indorsed the Stevens Bill. In the preamble it was set forth that "the unfair practice of price cutting is being generally used as a means of destroying the independent merchants of the country and creating great trade monopolies, thus injuring the prosperity of the towns and smaller cities." It was also set forth that the Stevens Bill would aid in establishing fair, free and honest competition, without cut-throat methods. It was set forth that cut prices are not really in the interest of the consumers, as the loss on standard goods is always offset by the higher prices charged for unknown goods of doubtful quality.

A third resolution asked for the enactment of a State law to license the use of trading stamps, checks, tickets, coupons and similar devices, entitling the holder to receive money, merchandise or other articles of value. The bill, as drawn, provides for the payment of license fees of $500 to $2,000 in cities of various sizes by the dealer in trading stamps. The fees for merchants using the trading stamps would range from $100 to $1,000, according to the class and size of the city.

It is said that such license fees would probably break up the trading stamp business.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Stores, Dover, N. J.

Keeping Down Expense.—When times are a trifle dull the management has to look sharply after the expense account.

I want to point out in this article where your part comes in. I should say "your parts," because there are a number of ways—small in themselves, perhaps, but ways that count effectually.

Sometimes the pay roll has to be cut down and the letting of one or two men out naturally throws additional effort on the others. This effort should be cheerfully extended. It should be spontaneous. You must not become indifferent, consoling yourself with the thought that there isn't enough help to take care of the business. That is not the way to look at things. Right away you are becoming antagonistic instead of being in accord with the purely business move. Put more energy, more thought, more promptness into your work as a matter of duty in meeting the new condition which is inevitable.

Lighting bills may be cut down by a little thought. Lower the gas light or shut off the electric when not in use. This precaution applies more particularly to the basement or the storeroom or the cooler. Get the habit. Before you realize it you will be as economically inclined in the store as you are at home where expense touches your own inside pocket.

Saving boxes helps. Boxes bring $5 a hundred, but not so if you smash the covers all to pieces. It's pretty tough to see a clerk open a box with a carpenter's hammer or a four-pound weight. The man that doesn't own a pocket steel opener is not equipped for work. If I were applying for a job I'd whip one out of my hip pocket and show it as an asset.

Paper bag economy means much. It not only cuts expense, but it reflects neatness. You have seen fellows put a pound of crackers in a 10-pound bag. Awful. Over in Ulster you'll never see it. If such a thing happened the customer would be shocked and the "governor, himself," would be inclined to send out to borrow a rope.

Same with paper. Double sheets, half sheets, quarter sheets and eighth sheets should always be handy. Wrapping a two-ounce bottle in a 12 x 17 size paper is inexcusably wasteful and looks extremely clumsy.

"Even balance is just weight." When you live up to that you are doing justice to two people. The habit of correct weighing is one of the very important habits to form. It means a lot to your employer. It means a lot to you if you desire to keep your self-respect.

Increasing volume means lowering expense. Its another phase of it, of course. A new customer representing a family of half a dozen is a big help. New people are coming to your town, and do you know that the winning and keeping won these new people is largely in the hands of you boys. Personal attention to the filling of their orders and being the business gentlemen at all times wins.

So that helping to keep down expense is very definitely done every new customer you get.

ered the principal address of this session. He said that he doubted if the Stevens Bill would really do as much as is expected by many in relieving trade evils. He said that the bill is weak in not recfirmer. Later, however, exactly the contrary condition may be produced by the fact that shipments of raw cocoa which would ordinarily have gone to Europe will be diverted to this country, thus depressing the market here, or at least putting it back where it was before the advance started.

In addition to the foreign products above enumerated, it can be said that all foreign products sold in this country have either been withdrawn since the war or have very sharply advanced.

In the line of dry goods and kindred staples, business conditions are also an interesting problem. To learn how trade was being and may be affected, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" saw Calvin M. Smyth, president of Young, Smyth, Field Co., one of the best informed and broadest minded men in his line, who said:

The European war is—well, it is a little too soon to say just how it is affecting business. But it is affecting us to the extent that there is a rush on our German made goods, of which we carry a big stock. Of course, the time will be short when we cannot get any more if the war keeps up. I believe, however, it will be short-lived. Then again, our export business is practically killed, because the insurance rates are prohibitive. We cannot charge our foreign customers the prices that this increased schedule demands—advanced 15 per cent. yesterday (Wednesday last). They cannot pay the increased cost, and we are not inclined to demand it, so our export business ceases.

On the German made goods American goods may be substituted; but that would not be the merchandise to which our merchants are accustomed. These goods are made by special machinery, and this cannot be reproduced in a minute or over night! and that ties up that point to us. The banks are not saying anything; they have closed their mouths like clams. No, the people I have talked with casually are of the same mind that I am; that is to say, they are not prepared to express any opinion. There is no feeling of uneasiness whatever, beyond what I have stated regarding the obtaining of merchandise referred to.

Do I believe the United States will be ultimately benefited by the European war, should it last six months?—I do not believe it will be that long—yes. But in the same sense of our taking a dose of castor oil, which will ultimately do a person good, but it is disagreeable in the taking. Possibly this country will be stronger commercially than ever before, and perhaps American goods may displace the foreign stuff. That remains to be seen, however. I am firmly of the opinion that Germany will be set back 50 years by this trouble, and France will suffer immeasurably, and England, in my judgment, the least. Our salesmen are all out on their territory and are doing nearly as good business as a year ago—not quite, but close to it. Prices on certain goods—foreign, of course—are already advancing, and must necessarily go higher.

As to shoes, at the factory of Ziegler Bros., no fear whatever was felt that the shoe trade would be interfered with or embarrassed, excepting possibly from a lack of special goods for which it is dependent upon foreign markets. Lewis D. Ziegler, the proprietor, spoke as follows to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World":—

I cannot say that trade has felt the effect of the European complication. In the respect that the supply of cloths for ladies' shoe tops is restricted, yes; also on French bronze leathers the same conditions prevail. Possibly American goods may be offered as substitute, and eventually prove entirely satisfactory; but the trade has been so used to buying these things abroad that it may take some time for the shoe manufacturers to get accustomed to the change. However, American ingenuity has never failed us yet; and in my humble judgment, it never will.

With the growing scarcity of these necessary goods, prices must necessarily advance. For instance, if we are called upon to pay 10 or 12 cents additional on certain makes of shoes, the way we buy and the quantity of material used is a serious matter. You know, we make up our fall samples in January, in March the men are out on the road taking orders. Then there may be changes to be made in the pattern and by the time the stock is delivered to the merchant or dealer it is from nine to ten months before we realize. So you know what that means.

I have been through troubles incidental to a reduction of wages, and then again the more pleasant experience of re-establishing a more satisfactory scale of pay to our operators, and in both instances things have worked out all right. I feel the same will occur now. I think we are the only food supplying market in the world of any magnitude, and outside of the wheat sent abroad being seized as contraband of war, we must—let me see—300,000,000 or more bushels we can sell. This looks pretty good for us, don't you think so. I believe we will be greatly benefited in the long run, as much as I deplore the war between the most advanced civilizations in existence.

No. I do not believe this European conflict will affect us disastrously; otherwise I am, indeed, far from being a pessimist.

J. E. Baum, president of the Supply-Biddle Hardware Co., and an active director of the Corn Exchange Bank, talked candidly and interestingly of the foreign em-broglie and its bearing on American business, particularly hardware products, as follows:—

I can see no complications ahead of us. On the contrary, as an example of the confidence characterizing trade in our line, I may say that we have just finished putting in three new hardware stocks in the nearby territory. That is to say, we have fitted up three new concerns with a full and complete line of essential merchandise. To be sure, these orders were not finished on the spur of the moment, so to speak. They were in contemplation for some time; but the new concerns saw no reason to suspend the shipment of the goods, nor change their intentions on account of this unfortunate war. They were and are satisfied with their investments and do not believe an extra hazard has been assumed on the account of the trouble abroad.

Personally, I feel no uneasiness whatever; nor does our company. The Government has acted promptly, wisely and judiciously in our financial affairs, so there will be not the slightest anxiety so far as a stringency of money is concerned. Our country is particularly blessed this time, from the fact of our abundant harvests. The only advance I can foresee in prices is for foodstuffs. The countries in Europe must have our foodstuffs, and they can get along without our hardware, and therefore until our stocks of English and German hardware—cutlery mainly—are exhausted, no price increase may be looked for. It is a natural American cutlery that will take the place of the European merchandise; and, furthermore, will be so satisfactory in quality that, should the war last long enough—and not so very long at that—both the German and English goods in that line will be irretrievably lost.

We are the largest importers of Wostenholm's—I X L goods—in this country; and while they are high grade and, in my judgment, the very best made, still American manufacturers of cutlery can and will equal that standard if required. The Germans make a medium good grade of cutlery that commands quite a market here; but with its low price it does not mean American merchandise cannot easily take its place. Should the war last six months, I believe this country will enter upon an unprecedented era of prosperity.

Further, I am confident that when this unfortunate—mind I use the word only in one sense, and that is of the pitiable spectacle of great countries like England, France, Germany and Austria being in fratricidal warfare, one may almost term it, a remarkable and hardly believable state of affairs when their advanced state of civilization is taken into account—but not unfortunately for this country. Just the reverse I think. I feel assured that while the conflict will be bitter and the vanquished almost annihilated, that when it is closed the United States will not only be the leading commercial nation, but permanently so. And I am inclined to say, the financial center as well.

One thing also I feel assured of, and that is the revival of our merchant marine. As yet we are not the carrying nation of the world, as we were once; but we are the only country who is now in a position to supply the other countries with the needed merchandise. The opening of the Panama Canal has directed our capitalists to profit-investments in an American made and maintained merchant marine, and this "unfortunate" (please use quotation marks around this word to convey my true meaning) war will still further stimulate that interest. When we once again recover the lost field, it will abide with us forever! On our own hardware lines, when the Europeans' stocks now on hand in South American countries is exhausted, the merchants will turn to us, and then again we will have an opening offered us to expand our trade, which, once entered, will be opened for all time.

Chicago's Retail Mercantile Population.

Chicago has 294 general stores, 4 furniture dealers, 638 hardware men, 6 jewelers, 973 department stores, 1,2 druggists, 2,939 candy and confection stores, 3,300 boot and shoe stores, 3,4 tailors and clothing retailers, and 7,000 grocers, not to speak of the 15,000 20,000 miscellaneous trades people.

THE WAR IS ON

Whoever dreamed that in this age of enlightenment and civilization all Europe would be engaged in war. The facts are hard to believe. Universal peace has had a setback, and when the clouds lift the map of Europe will be changed.

Don't forget our popular brands, they represent the best goods on the market. Royal Table is a great favorite, likewise Challenge Table Syrup, Very Best, Gilt Edge, King "B" Syrup, Ex. Amber, Quaker City, White Clover, Ex. Maple, etc., all good values. New Century Pure Sugar is bright and good flavor and represents the old-fashioned all-sugar goods. We also carry a good line of New Orleans Molasses, in barrels and half barrels. Buy your Syrups of us.

PREMIUM TEA—Very often an inferior Tea is sold with premiums in order to make a big profit, but our premium Tea is a fine blend of good Teas, and makes a good drink. It is packed in half-pound packages, 50 pound in a case, and the assortment of chinaware is handsome and attractive. You will find with the chinaware displayed the Tea will prove a good seller. Price per pound 40c.

CANNED SALMON—This is the month in which Canned Salmon sells the best, in fact it is becoming more popular every year; it takes the place of fresh meats which are high in price, it requires no cooking and can be easily served. Hapgood's Columbia River, in 1-lb. flat cans, per doz. $2.35; Fancy Red Alaska, Halcyon Brand, 1-lb. tall cans, at $1.65; Choice Red Alaska, Kodrak, at $1.60; Choice Medium Red Alaska, Quartermaster Brand, at $1.15; Selected Pink Klawack, at 95c. Pink Hunter Brand, at 92½c.; Pink Temple Brand, at 90c.

Have You Got Any Goods You Don't Want?

Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS KINDLY MENTION "MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD"

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is much upset by the war situation. Spot old teas are nominally 4 to 5 cents higher, but the supply is low. New teas, which have not yet arrived, show a certain, but still undetermined, increase in cost, owing to the advance in exchange and in insurance. This will amount to several cents per pound. The situation is very unsettled; consumptive demand light.

Coffee.

The coffee market has recovered from the slump which followed the declaration of war, and prices on Brazils are now higher than they were before the slump. Milds have advanced 1 cent per pound. The cause is the difficulties of shipping and receiving new coffees, and the increase in exchange and insurance. Mocha has also advanced and some holders are asking 25 cents for it green and in a large way. This is an advance of 2 cents within a short period. Java is still unchanged, being already quite high. The consumptive demand for coffee is only fair.

Sugar.

Sugar has advanced during the week, both raws and refined. The raw situation is very unsettled, owing to the same difficulties which are disturbing other lines—difficulties with shipments, insurance, exchange and the demand here from England, which would ordinarily get it in Europe. At the present writing granulated is quoted at 5 cents, but this price may advance further before these words are printed. Raw sugar has been sold at 20 to 30 points advance.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged and so is compound syrup. There is a big demand abroad for our corn products, and if this is interfered with it may depress the markets of this country. Nothing like that has happened as yet, however. Compound syrup, sugar syrup and molasses are all unchanged and dull.

Fish.

The Norway mackerel situation is in the same uncertainty as other lines. Certainly, if the present situation continues we will get no more mackerel from Norway, nor, incidentally, from Ireland, for the present. This is sure to affect prices on spot stock, in spite of the comparative abundance of our own shore mackerel. Prices have not materially advanced as yet, but almost certainly will unless relief comes. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and dull, but prices are firm. Domestic sardines are scarce and high, by reason of short catch, which improves but little. Some packers are talking advance. The war still further complicates the foreign sardine situation, which was bad enough before, by reason of scarcity. Prices on foreign sardines have been withdrawn by the packers and the future is absolutely uncertain. Salmon of all grades, spot and future, is unchanged as yet; demand fair.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged, demand fair. New pack goods now being offered are not very good. Old tomatoes and futures are exactly where they were a month ago. The pack outlook is all right, although the season is late. Peas are probably going to be all right, speaking of the new pack. Indications are for at least a fair pack about everywhere. Corn is unchanged, with good indications. Apples are very scarce on spot and command high prices, meaning New York State gallons of last year's pack. New goods will be packed by the last part of this month, however, and this will bring prices down. California canned goods are where they were a week ago; demand fair. Small Eastern staple canned goods are fairly active and unchanged.

Dried Fruits.

Future prunes are a substantial fraction cheaper, owing to the strong prospects of losing the foreign outlet, upon which the high future price was based. Spot prunes are unchanged and quiet. Apricots are also due to be affected in the same way, though they have not been as yet. Peaches are low and dull. Raisins show added firmness and sultanas are slightly higher, as they are the nearest things to currants, which are exceedingly firm and high. Currants are at least 1 cent per pound higher, by reason of the war. Citron shows about the same advance for the same reason. Other dried fruits dull and unchanged.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are about 30 cents per bushel higher, because foreign beans will be unavailable for the present. The quotation in a large way is $2.50 to come forward, but spot holders are still willing to sell at around $2.25. They will probably not be for long, however. Marrows have advanced 25 cents, or to $3.25, with $4 predicted. California limas are up another 1/2 cent, or 8 1/2 cents, with 9 cents in sight. Extreme scarcity on spot is the main reason here. All growers have withdrawn future prices, owing to the probability that imported limas will not come in. Yellow split peas are about 50 cents higher, because of the threatened lack of imported. Other dried peas unchanged.

Butter.

There has been active trading in butter during the week, and the consumptive demand is very good. Prices are firm, but without change from the last report. The quality of the butter arriving is very good, all grades meeting with ready sale on the present market basis. A continued good demand is looked for.

Eggs.

The egg market shows firm prices and an active demand for all grades. The situation is healthy and no immediate change is in sight.

Cheese.

The cheese market remains stationary, with a good consumptive demand. Advices from the producing sections show falling off in the make, and the indication is for slightly higher prices. The bulk of the receipts are absorbed on arrival and the general situation is healthy.

Provisions.

There is an active consumptive demand for all cuts of smoked meats, and prices are firm and unchanged. The speculative market in September and October option is decidedly off, owing to the war and the fact that a large export business will likely be interfered with. The spot market, however, is not yet affected. Barrel pork is unchanged and fairly active. Dried beef unchanged and steady; demand fair. Canned meats tending higher.

ognizing the quantity price, which has a certain economic value. He said that the large store is under heavier expense than the smaller store and should make larger profits, which are made possible by quantity prices.

Mr. Stix said that he believed in fixed prices, but they are not the same thing as the one-price plan. Uniform prices, he said, do not give a fair show to the rights of the seller. It makes a difference to him whether he sells for cash or on credit, whether he sells in small or large quantities, and there are differences as to methods and expenses of delivery. The speaker said that in his opinion the Interstate Trade Commission Bill is a fairer measure than the Stevens Bill. He believed that the proposed Trade Commission could do more in restraining unfair practices than can be done under an inflexible law.

Wednesday afternoon the visitors and members of the local societies enjoyed rides about the city in automobiles and visited many points of interest. In the evening a smoker was given in the hotel, with upward of 600 grocers present.

Thursday morning was devoted to an executive session.

Thursday afternoon a number of additional resolutions were adopted, in some instances after considerable discussion.

A resolution was adopted in favor of a State law similar to the New York City law, requiring the registration of removals and keeping of records of such removals by moving and warehouse companies and truckmen, in order to check the dead beats who move from one place to another and thus evade payment of their bills for household and other supplies.

Uniform containers for farm products shipped in interstate commerce were favored in another resolution, which called for the enactment of a law bringing this about.

The association voted in favor of law requiring grocers to remain closed all day Sundays.

Another resolution asked for amendment of the State labor law as to exempt grocers' clerks. It was set forth that because of the nature of the business the clerks should be allowed to work longer hours than in the case of other kinds of labor.

A resolution was adopted asking for the amendment of the bulk sales law that buyers shall not be responsible for the debts of their predecessors.

A resolution was adopted disapproving the practice of placing coupons in packages of merchandise, magazines and daily papers.

Special votes of thanks were extended to Frank Meyer, of the Fleischman Co. and Mr. Steele, of the National Biscuit Co., for courtesies extended during the convention. Votes of thanks were given to the manufacturers and jobbers who aided in making the convention a success, also to the local associations and the Convention Committees for the labors in making the excellent arrangements.

The election of officers was next in order.

President Wm. Jeffery, Hornell, was unanimously re-elected amid much enthusiasm. Peter Becker, Brooklyn, the first vice-president, was also re-elected by a unanimous vote. For second vice-president, Ervin Jehle, Buffalo, was chosen unanimously, and in the same way P. A. DePuyt, Rochester, was elected third vice-president. For secretary no other name than that of Charles Thorpe, New York, was mentioned, and he was chosen by a unanimous vote.

Before the close of the convention Fred. Mason, of the Shredded Wheat Co., invited all who would remain over until Friday to visit the Woolworth Building, and its famous tower, as the guests of the company.

In the evening the annual banquet took place. The toastmaster was Henry Minners, of the local Entertainment Committee. The list of speakers included W. H. Steinkamp, the Rev. J. Weyl, A. C. Monagle, C. S. Tuttle and George Suhr.

Your correspondent called this week on Louis Meyer, of the Louis Meyer Trading Co., 105 Hudson street, who was recently appointed representative of this country of the new Norwegian mackerel combination. Mr. Meyer was appointed just before the opening of the war in Europe and because of the opening of hostilities is not able to spend much at this time as to the future of the mackerel trade.

Cable messages have been checked and shipments have ended and he is left much in the dark as other people as to conditions and the prospects.

The new combination of mackerel interests is supposed to represent close to 90 per cent. of the mackerel output of Norway. Mr. Meyer expected, ( ceiving his appointment, to start efforts to increase the output in this country and to assist in placing the business upon stronger basis than in the past. At present, however, he has not been informed as to what is being done in relation to the pack on the other side and there is no telling as to how much the pack may be spared for this country. He said that the spot supplies are sufficient for the present, but cannot compute how long they may last. Prices are strong.

Mr. Meyer has been in the salt fish business for 25 years and so is thoroughly familiar with it in all of its phases. He said that, of course, there has never been any situation like the present in all of his experience and it is useless to talk of the prospects under such conditions.

From another source it was learned that according to the letters received from Norway, the work of the packers was interrupted by the calling of the reservists for maneuvers. It is now supposed that the reservists will be held under arms, as in the case of the other European countries and so nothing can be definitely known as to the pack for some time to come.

Importers of food products are hard hit by the war in Europe and the action of various governments in prohibiting the exportation of foodstuffs during the war. Even without such prohibition, the shipping conditions would seem to make it impossible for the importers to get additional supplies while the present condition continues.

Meetings have been held by a number of associations, including the American Association of Importers of Food Products and the Chamber of Commerce. They have talked over conditions, but conclude in general that there is not much they can do. It is between seasons in most lines, when supplies are at low ebb, and there is no way of knowing when any additional supplies may be obtained.

It is certain that calling the reservists away from the factories and fields will seriously interfere with the production of various kinds of food in European countries.

So the importers face a problem that is beyond their solution and all that they can do is to await developments. Many of them will naturally turn their attention to domestic food products as substitutes for the imported food.

Lentils were quoted at 3 cents; now they are selling at 9 cents and still soaring. Dried beans are being sold in place of lentils and the beans of various kinds are also advancing.

Prices of red pepper and paprika have doubled in the last week.

The Italian importers are especially disturbed. The value of the imports of Italian food products into the United States last year was upward of $50,000,000. These products included macaroni, cheese, olive-oil, wines and dry vegetables.

The French sardine importers are among the sufferers.

The extent of the trouble for the food importers is, of course, greatly increased by the fact that even in the countries which have not engaged in the war the exportation of food products has come to an end.

Houses which have confined themselves strictly to imported products are naturally suffering the most from the present situation. Other houses, which deal in both foreign and domestic products, find it easier to shift their trade at this time to the domestic goods.

While supplies of imported food products are now limited, the buyers throughout the country show an eagerness to get stocks, even at the advanced prices. Some of this eagerness is due to the anxiety of dealers to provide for future contingencies and some is caused by speculation.

Additional particulars as to the effect of the war on various products are given in the annexed market summary at the close of this letter.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

All of the markets are affected by the European war, which has made conditions unsettled and uncertain.

The coffee market has been in an excited condition all week. The Coffee Exchange closed on account of the war and in response to requests from members. There was a demoralized state of affairs in the early part of the week. Later, the stoppage of shipments from Brazil and other centers put the holders of spot coffee in control of the local situation and prices went up, until today they are 2½ to 3 cents above the level of a week ago. The roasters are obliged to pay the higher prices and quotations are changing so frequently that there is no telling what prices will be from day to day. Curb quotations on future coffee are also advancing. The National Coffee Roasters' Association has addressed a letter to the members advising them to give careful consideration to actual coffee values so that they shall not sacrifice the stocks they are now carrying.

There is equal excitement as to teas. Holders have advanced their prices and buyers are paying the higher prices for urgent needs. The stoppage of shipments and the light warehouse stocks are the factors making for higher prices. Another factor is the report that the Government will impose taxes on teas and coffees in order to make up the revenues cut down by the effects of the war on general foreign business. While shipments of teas from the East at present are regarded as out of the question, it is considered likely that cargoes will be sent later on the Pacific route. India-Ceylons have been hard hit by the shipping situation. This turned attention to greens. To-day more attention is being given to black teas, including Formosas, Foochows and Congous, especially in the cheaper grades.

Rice has advanced about a quarter of a cent on domestic grades this week. Spot stocks of old crop are light, it is said. New river rice will begin to arrive here in a week or so.

Spices are active. The country is urgently wiring for supplies and is willing to pay the prices, which have advanced sharply in the last few days. The grinders are evidently anxious to provide themselves with sufficient supplies for all contingencies. The holders are accordingly taking profits, but some holders are more inclined to withdraw from the market in the expectation of prices going to a still higher level.

Both raw and refined sugar have been advancing. The Arbuckles, Warner and the Federal put up their prices to 5 cents for standard granulated. How-

A Welcome Call.

Here is a telephone message that is becoming more frequent and more popular every week:

"Send me a dozen packages of Jell-O."

Women are learning that Jell-O can be made up in so many different ways that a new dessert can be served every day, and they find it is best to order a dozen or so packages at a time.

Most grocers encourage the dozen habit, for it makes good customers.

Jell-O is made in seven pure fruit flavors—not artificial flavors. It is just such a high-grade product as first-class grocers like to furnish in response to a brisk demand.

THE GENESEE PURE FOOD CO.,
Le Roy, N. Y.

The name JELL-O is on every package in big red letters. If it isn't there, it isn't JELL-O.

ells withdrew from the market temporarily. The American will sell at 4.50 cents, but only to regular customers, who have no orders on the books and only for prompt shipment.

There is a strong market in domestic canned vegetables of all kinds, but as far as local buyers are concerned, there is little present activity. Most of the distributors seem to have covered their early requirements. Tomatoes are steady. Peas are scarce and firm, string beans tend upward because of crop reports. In the better grades, corn is not plentiful and the offerings are only moderate.

There is only a limited movement in canned fruits, but as there is no pressure on the part of packers to sell prices are steady.

All European canned food is tending upward as supplies are limited and further exports from the European countries are now prohibited.

Sardines are materially higher than they were a week ago and the prices from day to day are a matter of bargaining between buyer and seller. Spot stocks are light, both of European and domestic sardines. Canned salmon of all kinds is strong, with an advancing tendency.

Agents of European shippers have withdrawn quotations on foreign dried fruits, including currants, raisins, citron and other products. There is a speculative demand for spot supplies, which are tending upward, but holders are generally keeping their stocks for their regular trade. Domestic dried fruits are fairly steady. There is only a light demand for California prunes and a few sellers are willing to shade prices slightly. Dried peaches are dull. This is true also of apricots, there being only a slight demand for them in this market. As Europe usually takes a large proportion of the output and the European markets are now closed to such shipments, it is thought that the packers have a surplus for this market and buyers are holding off with this contingency in view.

Flour is being sold mostly in small lots. The buyers, as a rule, prefer to place orders only for requirements and to let the future take care of itself. They know that the war may advance prices, but they also know that if exports should be stopped as the result of the war, supplies would accumulate and prices fall. So the general policy is to buy with caution. Spring wheat patents have been selling in the last day or so in jute from $4.75 to $5 and some mills are asking more money, while others refuse to make quotations. There were some sales of Kansas straights in sacks at $4.25, but these prices were afterward withdrawn.

In receipts of butter there has been an increase in the proportion of fine goods and there is some tendency to weakness in prices of such goods. On large business, concessions can probably be obtained. The extra range from 29½ to 30 cents, with only the finest quality commanding the outside figure. It is possible that some sales may be put through at 29 cents. Most of the business in firsts is within a range of 26½ to 28 cents. Seconds are quiet and range from 23½ to 25½ cents. Process is firm, with the best grades bringing from 22 to 24 cents.

Eggs are quiet. There is a scarcity of strictly fancy qualities. Offerings of average fine goods seem to be sufficient for requirements. Most of the current receipts grade as firsts or seconds, and on these the market is fairly steady, with a moderate demand. The fresh-gathered extras are quoted at 26 to 28 cents; extra firsts, 24½ to 25½ cents; firsts, 23 to 24 cents; seconds, 20 to 22 cents. Nearby eggs have a range up to 32 to 33 cents for fancy, large new-laid eggs. Special marks in refrigerator eggs are quoted at 26½ cents; firsts, 25 to 26 cents; seconds, 23½ to 24½ cents, all charges paid.

Truax Says He Doesn't Belong to the United Retail Grocery Stores Co.

Toledo, Ohio, August 1, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In your issue of July 20, 1914, you make the statement that I, C. C. Truax, am one of the promoters of the United Retail Grocery Stores Co. Now, gentlemen, this is entirely untrue, which fact the writer wishes to state that he is in no way, manner, shape nor form has or had anything to do with the United Retail Grocery Stores Co., and your statement to this effect is injurious to my reputation and the success of the companies in which I am interested, namely, the Pittsburg Wholesale Grocery Co., Pittsburg, and the United Grocers' Co., Toledo, Ohio, which companies are perfectly solvent and in fine financial and physical condition.

I think under the circumstances that a retraction on your part in your next issue of your paper is nothing more than fair and just, both to your paper and ourselves.

Thanking you in advance to give this communication your immediate attention I beg to remain,

Yours truly,
C. C. TRUAX.

To Buy Baskets.

Jobbers Win "Overland" Cars in Unique Sales Contest.

A sales contest, confined to the jobbing trade, instituted by the C. A. Edgerton Mfg. Co., manufacturers of the "President" suspenders, which opened July 1, 1913, was closed June 30, 1914. The following were the winners: Class A.—Michael Brothers, Athens, Ga. B.—J. R. Westlake & Bro., Newburgh, N. Y. C.—R. M. Harrill Co., Rochester, N. Y. D.—Hibben, Hollwig & Co., Indianapolis. E.—Baltimore (Md.) Bargain House; Levi Strauss & Co., San Francisco. It was the privilege of the winners to choose between a five-passenger touring car and a two-seated roadster, and each of the prize winners called for a five-passenger machine.

The order was placed by the Edgerton Co. for six Overland five-passenger touring cars, not only fully equipped as per official specifications, but with electric self-starters, which means an additional cost to the famous $950 car turned out in such complete fashion by the Willys-Overland Co., Toledo, Ohio. The cars were shipped to the half dozen fortunate firms free of cost, F. O. B. destination, on July 10th. The Edgerton Co. accompanied each car with this cheerful message: "We trust that the gentlemen who will drive the cars will be as pleased to receive them as we were to present them." A circular letter to the entire trade was also despatched covering this information, with a "few" pertinent remarks about their product on the side. The literature employed in this unique contest, something new and refreshing going out at regular intervals throughout the year, while forceful and pertinent, reflects no little credit on the Edgerton Co.'s advertising department.

One criticism only might be made in respect to this doubtless effective campaign, otherwise the "Overland" prize cars would not have been delivered to the lucky six, but as Mr. Klausner's artistic feelings might be hurt it will be withheld or, as the serial stories read, "continued in our next."

Court Decree Enforces Cleaner Merchandising.

Another step has been taken by the Federal Courts to enforce trade-mark rights relative to merchants carrying a misleading or fraudulent stock of well-known goods for ulterior purposes. A case in point is that of the B. V. D. Co. vs. Lucien J. Freud, in the United States District Court for the southern district of New York, a final decree being signed by Judge Hand July 22d, as follows:—

This cause coming on for final disposition, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed that a perpetual injunction issue out of and under the seal of this court, enjoining and restraining the defendant, Lucien J. Freud, individually and as Freud Bros., and as Heck, and as Heck & Co., and as Madison and any other names under which he may now or hereafter do business, from substituting for the B. V. D. Co. underwear, underwear of other makes when B. V. D. underwear is called for by customers; and further, from advertising or placarding, or in other public ways announcing the sale of B. V. D. merchandise unless he shall be equipped to sell B. V. D. underwear of the average or usual sizes to customers desiring to purchase B. V. D. underwear; and further, from carrying such placards or announcements in windows or display cases, or otherwise exposed to public view in any one store whenever his stock of genuine B. V. D. underwear in said store is below the stock required to satisfy the requirements of customers for B. V. D. underwear for usual or average sizes; and further, from using or employing in connection with the sale of goods other than B. V. D. goods the trade-mark "B. V. D.," either alone or in connection with other words or devices, such as "B. V. D. Style," or similar expressions, or expressions of the same purport, either on the goods themselves, or in advertising matter, placards, signs, etc.

This is an important decree, applicable to many cases where the reprehensible practice is followed in various lines of branded merchandise which have been made known and become popular sellers through the generous and persistent advertising in National publications and trade mediums. It involves a new line of correction against dealers or general merchants who carry an extremely small stock of the trade-marked article—usually in sizes few people can wear—while prominently placarding the store and window with announcements of the genuine article, and then selling imitation merchandise to the customers thus lured into the store. Doing business in such a way is radically unfair, and if such merchants want the public patronage—on the basis of their public announcements—in order so that the public is not imposed upon, they must keep on hand a reasonable amount of stock in the normal sizes to meet the buyer's requests. The point covered by this decree is surely a step in advance in the direction of cleaner merchandising. The decree also forbids alluding to a trade-mark in any manner and substituting and selling other goods therewith. This company is waging a relentless war in the courts against merchants who either carelessly, ignorantly, and in some instances maliciously, endeavor to palm off spurious for the genuine merchandise, whose sole protection, aside from its merit, is the trade-mark. This is the only guarantee the public have of its identity as the simon-pure goods.

Style Guarantee a Fake. Fashions Lack Metropolitan Indorsement.

The practice of some manufacturers, principally in the East, it is understood, of shipping goods to merchants for sale on consignment, is condemned in no uncertain terms by the largest and most influential firms in the trade. As previously noted in this journal, the Credit Group of the Silk Association of America expressed this view, followed by the emphatic declaration, to the same effect, by Philip Frankel, secretary and speaking for the National Cloak Suit, Skirt and Dress Manufacturers' Association. On this so-called "style guarantee" matter or sending of goods on memorandum, J. P. Hovland, president of the same association, as well as chief executive of F. Siegel & Bros. Chicago, one of the largest cloak making houses in the country, writing to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" says: "I fully believe that our secretary Mr. Frankel, has fully covered our position with regard to the practice of shipping goods on memorandum." Mr. Frankel's statement was published in the issue of July 20th, in which words were not minced condemnatory of the faking guarantee.

In connection with the above association's bulletin on the coming styles in women's wear, it is reported that while the merchants in the West may accept its dictum, elsewhere they are wary until New York has issued its indorsement. According to the latest advice the metropolis has not yet "spoken," and therefore retailers and the cutting up trade are still in doubt as to just what the new styles will be. Doubtless the Western contingent is satisfied that not anything more need be said on the matter whether New York approves or not. At the same time, it is admitted fashions without metropolitan indorsement do not "go" with much rapidity. At least competent judges so declare and this without meaning anything hostile to the energetic vogue makers of the Middle West.

How Suspenders Are Merchandised

Retailers do not, as formerly, buy large initial stocks of suspenders from manufacturers at the beginning of each season. There was a time when retailer would stock up with the season's suspender needs or cover themselves for a good part of the season, and the order went to the manufacturers direct. But now there are fewer suspender maker calling on the retail trade—several of the suspender manufacturers who sold the retail trade have gone out of business. Again, it is too costly because of the change in the retailer's method of buying suspenders for manufacturers to have salesmen call on the retail trade with suspenders exclusively. So a larger percentage of the suspender business now goes to jobbers.

A Great Factor in Dress Goods.

The American Woolen Co. announces that it will show a line of dress goods fabrics to the jobbing trade, retailers and cutters-up for spring, 1915 delivery. The "Textile Manufacturers' Journal." This is not a new departure for the company, as for several years it has been catering more or less to this trade. This season, however, it will show a more comprehensive line in the dress goods department and is preparing

BURK'S Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

Salesmen Booking Good Business West.

Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say: "The increasing numbers of merchants coming to market is stimulating general business conditions most favorably, and as this is the logical time for merchants to come the next few weeks promise to be busy ones. All reports show that more merchants are coming to Chicago than for a number of years. Harvesting throughout the country shows a crop yield that backs up very forcibly the early estimates and in most instances the yield is far beyond those of past years.

"Salesmen on their territory are booking more business than for the corresponding period a year ago. No one commodity is receiving more attention than another—indicating that stocks are in a good average condition. Cash receipts for the past week show a favorable increase over those preceding."

Hosiery Guarantees Not What They Seem.

An interesting symposium has been carried on in "Printers' Ink" on the efficiency of the guarantee in connection with certain classes of merchandise. Manufacturers in a number of different lines have made contributions and what they say pro and con is not devoid of interest to the general storekeeper. One of the best-known guarantees is that covering hosiery, and just what it means is clearly set forth by J. E. Fitzgibbons, of the Phoenix Knitting Works, Milwaukee, Wis., as follows:—

The ideal guarantee for the consumer who wishes to get something for nothing and for the manufacturer, who can afford to give two pairs of hose, for instance, for the price of one, is the hosiery guarantee which is unrestricted and without any "explanations." The consumer who buys hosiery under this guarantee knows that it is stated specifically that he will get new hose free for every one that wears holes within the specified period; and even if this hosiery has given him satisfaction in the ordinary sense of the word, he is going to see to it that the hose are worn so that he can bring them back and get new hosiery free.

In other words, when he purchases hosiery under such a guarantee, he expects to get two pairs of hose for the price of one, and the manufacturer putting out hosiery under this proposition has got to figure this element in when he tabulates his cost. Now, if the consumer would figure this out he would see that instead of buying value in the hosiery, he is simply purchasing a guarantee. If this is what he desires, all very well and good. On the other hand, if he wishes to buy merchandise of quality, he cannot expect the manufacturer to put himself in a position of being compelled, in 99 cases out of a hundred, to constantly replace merchandise.

The word "guarantee" is so much misunderstood and is so abused both by the dealer and the consumer that we have refrained from mentioning it entirely in any of our advertising or on any of our merchandise. We have found much better results by placing the consumer on his honor as to what service he expects rather than to give the so-called time limit guarantee.

We have over 6,000 accounts on our books, and with the possible exception of one or two minor cases, there is not a retailer but what has increased his hosiery sales, and welcomed the change to our present system of allowing the customer's honor and sense of fairness to decide.

There is no end of humbug in these so-called "guarantees," especially with hosiery; but they make excellent talking points in selling merchandise nevertheless.

Fake "Receiver" Sale Gets Its Originator in Trouble.

New York City has an ordinance prohibiting misrepresentations in advertising and the sale of goods. The first conviction under this regulation was secured July 22d, the victim being Jacob Kantrowitz, proprietor of a clothing store. Kantrowitz advertised that certain standard goods were being sold below cost by "order of a receiver." A detective found that no receiver had ordered the sale. Sentence was suspended upon the defendant's plea of guilty. Ordinances of the same tenor will eventually get on the books in every large community some day, when the fake "fire sale" and other fraudulent methods of swindling the public—now openly and shamelessly practiced everywhere—will be stopped, to the benefit of every reputable merchant.

Cancellation of Orders An Abuse.

Every line of trade suffers more or less from that unmitigated nuisance and abuse by merchants, the cancellation of orders. It ranks with the returned goods problem, of which the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has had considerable in the past couple of months. Manufacturers and wholesalers have expressed themselves forcibly on the subject in this department. The dry goods jobbers have protested strongly also on the cancellation of orders, and the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association, under date of August 3d, has issued the following circular letter to its members:—

Our attention has been called to the question of cancellation of orders, one of our members just citing a particularly aggravating case, as follows:—

A concern located in one of the large cities of the Central West ordered in February from us a quantity of coats, giving styles, assortment of sizes, etc., the goods to be shipped on August 1st. As is our custom, we made up these goods during the spring months, packed the goods and had them ready for shipment to this party, who now cancels the order without explanation. The cancellation was made some two or three weeks ago, and we have written them upon the subject protesting against the unfairness of such a cancellation without explanation, but they simply state that they will absolutely refuse the goods if shipped them.

Doubtless similar cases have arisen in your business, and we are accordingly asking for the benefit of your expression and particularly of the means which you have adopted to lessen or prevent unwarranted cancellation of orders.

Our member, of course, understands that he may ship the goods according to the signed order and take legal measures to force the carrying out of the contract on the part of the customer, but in the knowledge that the cancellation of orders is an abuse from which the dry goods trade has suffered for many years, it is his belief that an interchange of expression and method employed to correct this evil may be very helpful.

Any one familiar with the situation can make a good guess what the members of this energetic and useful association will say in their exchange of "confidential news." Perhaps none of these documents will be furnished for publication, but they ought to be pro bono publico.

Studs to Displace Buttons on Shirts.

Through the Styles and Advertising Committee of the American Retail Jewelers' Association, an effort will be made to induce shirt manufacturers to substitute buttonholes for buttons on certain lines, notably soft shirts, in order that the sale of shirt studs may be increased. The resolution passed at the recent convention of North Carolina retail jewelers was as follows:—

Whereas, The manufacturers of men's shirts, and particularly the soft or outing shirt so generally worn, sew pearl buttons on all their product in a way that makes the wearing of studs in these articles impossible unless the wearers have special buttonholes made; and

Whereas, This custom in making shirts interferes with and prevents the sale of a large number of gold and other studs by retail jewelers; therefore be it

Resolved, That this association ask the American National Retail Jewelers' Association to lay these facts before its Styles and Advertising Committee in order that the latter may see if something cannot be done to make the use of studs in all shirts popular again.

Now if the association will use the trade press judiciously this laudable work can be boosted to success. Studs would be an improvement in some respects over buttons, providing they were attached to a neat chain so they could not roll under the dresser or out of sight in the operation of slipping on the shirt. There is room for an improved stud that carries some insurance against unexpected and therefore embarrassing loss.

Aftermath of the Wholesalers' Presidential Call.

When the dry goods, hardware and other wholesalers made their memorable call upon President Wilson, in Washington, D. C., on July 29th, the main facts were reported, but not the informal conversation which followed the set speeches on both sides. This is reported by the secretary of the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association, and as the account throws new light upon what took place, the main facts are subjoined:—

W. D. Taylor, president of the National Hardware Association, Cleveland, Ohio, spoke on Clause IV of the Clayton bill, which relates to exclusive selling arrangements and remarks were made on other phases of pending legislation by W. Hires Turner, of Hires-Turner Glass Co., Philadelphia; W. S. Kenny, of James H. Rice Co., wholesale glass, Chicago; Harry French, of Smith, Kline, French & Co., wholesale drugs, Philadelphia; and T. James Fernley.

The delegation said to the President that Section II of the Clayton Anti-Trust Bill, which refers to price discrimination, was approved by them, as they felt satisfied with the addition of the amendment which provides that nothing contained in the bill should apply to sales made in good faith to meet competition and not intended to create a monopoly. It was the belief of the committee that this legislation would prove to be adequate in punishing discriminatory practices by those seeking to maintain or secure a monopoly without injuring the legitimate interests of the plain merchants of the country.

With regard to Section IV of the Clayton Bill, which prohibits exclusive selling arrangements, our committee favor such legislation as this, insofar as it would serve to punish those seeking to secure and maintain a monopoly and yet not injure the legitimate interests of plain business men. The delegation therefore suggested to the President the possibility of amending this section in the same manner as Section II was amended, to wit: "Provided that nothing herein contained shall apply to any such lease, sale or contract for sale, or other acts herein above declared unlawful when made in good faith to meet competition and not intended to create a monopoly."

President Wilson said that those who were endeavoring to draft this legislation had realized that the exclusive selling problem was one which was very difficult to reach by legislation. He pointed out that if a law were made too narrow there were those who would resort to evasions in order to accomplish the purpose which the law sought to prohibit, and if the law were made too broad, it would injure the legitimate interests of those whose activities the Government wished to refrain from impairing. The President called attention to the fact that exclusive selling arrangements might result in no harm in a large city, because of the presence of numerous distributors, in addition to the one who had the exclusive selling arrangements with one manufacturing concern, serious harm might be done in rural communities where there was but one distributor.

W. D. Taylor, who presented the views of the wholesalers on this section, pointed out the fact that manufacturers and wholesalers often selected a local dealer to handle a particular line of goods, feeling that the sale in towns were limited and that while there might be good business in the line for one dealer there would not be enough business of sales were spread among two or three, enlisting the interest of the dealer in the line by reason of such exclusive selling arrangements. With regard to the trade commission bill, the delegation suggested the possibility of an opinion being expressed by the Trade Commission on a programme or policy before it had been put into effect.

The President pointed out the fact that such a task would be extremely difficult because no matter how hard a business man would endeavor to detail his programme for approval or disapproval by the Commission, it would be found there were cases where deviations would be made without any intention of doing things which had not been passed upon by the Commission. The President further indicated that the Trade Commission might approve of a programme, but that the Department of Justice might differ and might institute a prosecution with the possibility of conviction. This, of course, would lead to bad feeling on the part of those involved, so that the President felt that it would be impossible to tell business men how to proceed in accordance with the law in advance. The President said that he felt that when pending legislation was passed and with the interpretation which had now been made on existing laws, the steering would be easier and that the channel would be well marked and all would know how to sail their craft safely.

The delegation also suggested that any legislation looking toward the establishment of a Trade Commission and the regulation of trade and commerce should apply to corporations and that it was their belief that all legislation of this character should apply equally to corporations, partnerships and those doing business in their individual capacity, so that all such legislation should cover any and all types of business organizations and that none should be exempt.

The President said that he had been told by the Commissioner of Corporations that there were scores of thousands of corporations rendering reports to-day and that to include partnerships and those doing business as individuals, would involve monumental labor and that a new building, the size of the Capitol, would be required to care for the annual reports, to say nothing of the other data and records and correspondence involved in the task of including other than corporations in the scope of the proposed legislation.

The delegation referred to the fact that the position of the middleman was established on a sound economic basis and that the service which the wholesalers and retailers of the country were rendering was of great value to the public and that goods were being placed in the hands of consumers at a lower price than if the service of the middleman was not available. Calvin M. Smyth, of Young, Smyth, Field Co., called the attention of the President to the fact that the middleman was the keystone of the commercial arch.

The President, in speaking of this, said that he realized that the middleman was an economic factor which could not be dispensed with and he thought that the public clamor against the middleman had only been aimed at cases where there had been a multiplicity of middlemen between the source of supply and the ultimate consumer. The President suggested that while the present legislation may not fill the immediate wants of the general business public, that it will by gradual development become an integral part of business life and he suggested that with patience and with the assistance of the business public the legislation would develop into a satisfactory reform and would serve to put the business of the nation on a firm and satisfactory basis. The President, in conclusion, said that all of the legislation pending in Congress is "fluid" until it is passed, and that he would be very glad to bear in mind the suggestions of our delegates when further considering the pending trust legislation, which he hoped would be passed within the next six weeks.

Subsequently J. E. Baum, president of the Supplee-Biddle Hardware Co., who was one of the delegates, expressed himself very frankly about the visit, as follows:—

The President may be big and broadminded, but he certainly is not in sympathy with business men and cannot see their point of view. He made the rather remarkable assertion that there was no difficulty at all in enunciating general principles for the control and conduct of business that were so self-evident in their truth that no explanation or argument was needed to substantiate them, but that he had found, in putting them into practice, that there were many objections and obstructions, and that in order to bring about the desired result he must follow the line laid out without deviation. As the President dismissed the items of our statement or bill of complaint, if you please, one at a time, his attitude suggested 100 per cent. of personal self-confidence and satisfaction in his reasoning, and many members of the committee went away with the feeling that they had been looked upon as schoolboys unable to recite their lesson.

Hardware Tools Specialties

Circumventing the Mail Order Bunch.

A plan to circumvent the catalogue houses has been put into practice by a Western manufacturer. It will rivet the attention of the general merchant whose trade has been demoralized by this pestiferous institution. The Moline (Ill.) Plow Co. has organized a separate company, known as the Tiger Vehicle Co., for the purpose of making vehicles to be sold in competition with those offered by mail order houses, which have been selling, it is declared, 60,000 vehicles a year. It is also asserted in the ads. of the company that many regular retailers have been obliged to buy from manufacturers who supply the catalogue houses, on account of the low prices made.

The new line will be cheap enough to enable the dealer to compete on even terms with the mail order concerns, and will be sold direct from the factory instead of through the jobbers or branch houses, as most goods of this kind are handled. This same plan could be applied to any line of hardware and the manufacturers who are sincere in not

Shorten the Selling Process

Anything that will shorten the process of waiting upon customers will give your sales clerks more time to wait upon more customers. The accepted answer to this selling problem is—advertised goods.

Advertised goods remove the necessity for argument. The purchaser knows advertised goods, knows N. B. C. goods, has confidence in them and buys them. Advertised goods eliminate argument and so save lost time.

By one move—the selling of advertised goods—your clerks can sell to three or four people in the time it formerly required to sell to one. Prove it yourself—sell N. B. C. products—they are nationally known—their quality is automatically repeated in every biscuit.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

selling goods to the retail mail order houses might carry out the same idea.

Gathering Data on Resale Price.

General merchants handling hardware are divided in their opinion regarding fixed resale prices. Many favor the maintenance of a retail selling price and have excellent reasons for their views, and all are very much interested in the question. C. E. La Vigne, of the Bureau of Corporations, Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., addressed the Chicago Auxiliary of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association July 21st. Mr. La Vigne is in charge of the study of distribution methods, particularly in regard to resale, as covered in the Stevens and Metz bills now before Congress.

In his talk Mr. La Vigne described the plan that is being followed in interviewing manufacturers and business men in an effort to get to the bottom of the problem of maintaining resale prices. He explained that this is one of the most important problems the Government has ever undertaken to solve, and the investigations being made will be embodied in a report which will be the foundation of a bill which, it is hoped, will solve the problem. Mr. La Vigne mentioned that present day advertising methods are a vital part of the resale price problem, because there is no more potent force in moving a commodity than advertising.

Boots Shoes Findings

The Fit of Shoes.

It is safe to say that shoemen, manufacturers, retailers and clerks are paying more attention to the fit of shoes than ever before. There are two good reasons for this. One is the improvement in the science of last making, the other is that people are demanding better fitting shoes because they pay more for them. A man pays $5 where he formerly paid $3. He might have been willing to throw away the $3 shoes, if they pinched the toes, but demands that $5 shoes fit comfortably before he leaves the store.

Heeling Shoes to Order.

Some makers of women's shoes are experimenting with a method of heeling shoes to order. They make up shoes for their stock departments, without putting heels on them. After orders come in, the shoes are sent back to the heeling departments, and kidney, spool or Cuban Louis heels are nailed on, according to the kind specified in the order. Of course, the heels must be of approximately the same height. If the last called for a 12-8 heel, a 12-8 heel must be nailed onto it. A manufacturer might use a 13-8 heel. If he undertook to put a 14-8 heel onto the shoes, to please his customer, however, he would spoil the lines and fitting qualities of the last, and ruin the shoes.

Current Apple Crop Will Be Enormous.

The apple crop this year will aggregate between 50,000,000 and 60,000,000 barrels. California will have between 5,000 and 6,000 cars; Colorado's lowest estimate is 5,000 cars; Oregon expects to ship 3,000 cars; Montana 500 cars, and Washington about 15,000 cars. Utah will have more apples than ever before. In Western New York the crop is estimated to be the largest since 1896. The United States Department of Agriculture figures it at 88 per cent. normal and 84 per cent. of a 10-year average. These figures are said to be very much below the mark by experienced and reliable forecasters and growers. Notable gains are reported from all the New England States, with the exception of Connecticut. Maine has a splendid crop of 2,000,000 barrels of which promise to be of desirable size and quality. The Vermont crop is reported to be very large, and the outlook for fruit of fine quality is very bright. In the Central West, notably in Illinois, one of the most important of the apple growing States in that section, the outlook points to a shorter crop than last year, the injury done by codling moth and other fruit pests being severe. Michigan will have an unprecedentedly large crop. Reports from Indiana and Minnesota are conflicting, but these States cut little or no figure from the standpoint of production and of crop guessing. In Missouri the crop will be smaller than that of last year, and if Ben Davis and Ganos were not so plentiful in the Ozark section, prospects there this year would be discouraging. Virginia will have a very large crop—some say a record breaker in point of size—and growers there are already negotiating with railroads for a sufficient number of cars to move their crop. The outlook in the leading producing sections of West Virginia is very promising, and there is more than an average crop everywhere in that State. Hood River will have a larger crop than last year, the Cashmere district of Washington expects to ship from 1,100 to 1,400 carloads, while the Yakima Valley is credited with a very large crop of desirable size and attractive appearance.

I have a circular issued to announce a new store by Benjamin Gebbard, at Ocean City, N. J. It is printed on good pale green paper, 8½ x 11 inches, and is reproduced below:—

There is only one thing I find lacking in this circular, and that is the few get-acquainted offerings that I would have made to give point to the announcement. Here is a new store; here are our ideals, himself, had appeared in it. "Here my new store" (with out of it) "and here am I" (out of himself) "and here what the new store intends to do," and "Here's what I offer you the first crack out of the box." I don't mean that Mr. Gebbard's circular is not a good advertisement, on the contrary, I think it is, but I think it might have been made a little more unique and distinctive.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

AMONG THE TRADE.

Beh & Herter, the well-known manufacturers' representatives of New York, have opened a Philadelphia office at 145 South Front street, with Herbert R. Owen in charge. They will push at this time the goods of the Wizard Products Co., Inc., including their Triangle mops, Wizard polish, dust mop etc.

The annual picnic of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association was held at Woodside Park last Wednesday. As has not always happened, the weather was perfect all day long and the affair a big one. About 6,000 people were on the grounds. There were twenty-two sporting events, racing, baseball, a baby show, watermelon eating contests, a nail driving contest and so on. The committee in charge of the outing consisted of F. C. Smith, chairman; William Evans, Frank S. Hutzell, A. J. Heidmann and A. J. Russell.

New Grocery Store

Fifth St. and Asbury Ave.

Ocean City

New Jersey

YOU are cordially invited to call and inspect our new store, brim full of brand new and absolutely fresh stock, kept in a clean and sanitary condition.

Every piece of goods has been selected with the greatest care, in order to obtain highest quality at a reasonable price.

We have everything a grocer is supposed to carry in stock.

We purpose to keep open all the year around—not only for the season—and intend to make Ocean City our home, and expect to take our place in the front rank of Ocean City BOOSTERS.

The quality of all our goods is guaranteed, and that is what we mean when we say:

"If they are not Satisfactory bring them back and get your Money"

The proof of the pudding is in the eating.

Hoping to have the pleasure of a call and trusting you will favor us with a trial, and assuring you that we will endeavor to deserve your patronage,

Yours truly,

BENJAMIN GEBHARD

SENTINEL PRINT, OCEAN CITY, N. J.

I think this is a pretty good circular. Outside the usual promises when a new store is opened, it makes two statements which have a strong appeal. The first is the money back offer, and the other is the statement, just a little differently than I put it, that "I am not simply a transient, coming here to skim the cream off the summer trade—I have established my residence here and am a part of Ocean City." Of course, that may not have so much appeal to a summer visitor, but it has a very powerful appeal to an all-the-year resident of the place. In fact, I can hardly think of anything that would have a stronger appeal.

and here are a handful of offerings which will show what we can do. In other words, there is nothing in this circular to get people into the new store. You tell them the store is there and that it is all right—money back, and all that—but you ought to go further and get them into it. A few snappy offerings would have helped to do this.

I believe I would also have had the store photographed and put a cut of it in the circular. Pictures help enormously, especially pictures of new places and new people. I don't know how modest Mr. Gebbard is, but his circular would have attracted very much more attention if pictures of his new store, and of CCLXXI.—When a Warranty of Merchandise Becomes Worthless.

At times the most convenient thing in the world to have is a warranty. A warranty of purity, of quality, of count, of grade, of fitness for some particular purpose, in short a warranty that the particular merchandise is up to whatever standard has been represented for it. It is very important to remember that so necessary a protection must be gotten before the sale is completed. If the sale is allowed to go through without a warranty, one can be given fully and with perfect freedom afterward, but it will not be worth two cents if the giver wants to squeeze out of it.

The need of some remarks upon this phase of the law of sales has been emphasized by several experiences which have occurred recently in my own practice, also by the fact that I happened accidentally to read the report of a case which has just been decided precisely on the point. The case involved the sale of a cow, in which the readers hereof are perhaps not much interested, but which makes the principle involved in the giving of any warranty so clear and sharp that I shall use the incident as a text.

The plaintiff in this case had bought a cow at an auction for $60. The animal was sold in the usual way, after being exhibited, and was then separated from the unsold cows. The plaintiff paid his $60, and then went out to look at the cow he had bought a little more closely. The seller of the cows was there and to him the plaintiff observed that the cow "didn't look right; I believe she's got tuberculosis." Up to this time there had been no warranty of the cow at all; it had apparently been sold entirely on sight. The seller, when complained to about its suspicious appearance after the sale, then guaranteed the animal to be all right, and said that if it was not he would make it all right.

As a matter of fact, the cow did have tuberculosis, and very shortly after the sale it became necessary to kill her. The buyer sued the seller on the warranty given after the sale, and the jury gave him a verdict for the full value of the cow. The court afterward set this aside, and the Appeal Court said that was right; the warranty was not binding because it was given after the sale was complete, and when title to the cow had passed to the buyer.

I will explain this a little more clearly in a minute, but just now I want to make an observation: This is unquestionably the law all over the United States, and the court was right in so holding. But it is not good law, nevertheless. There is no moral reason why a man who makes solemn representation about merchandise he has sold should not be held to them, merely because he has already sold instead of being actually in the act of selling.

The law that a warranty given after a sale is not usually binding is thus stated in the following lucid extract from the decision in the cow case:—

As we view it, the important and controlling question here is, had the title to the cows fully passed from the seller to the buyer before the alleged warranty was made by the seller? The essence of the sale is the transfer of the property in the thing from seller to buyer for a price. Under the evidence in the present case we think the property in the cows passed from the seller to the buyer when they were sold to him at auction and he paid his bids to the person authorized by the seller to receive the same.

It is perfectly clear, in the evidence, that the cow was not warranted before the sale. The cow in question was sold to the plaintiff and the conditions of the sale were the settlement of his bids, and he did this by giving his check to the person designated by the seller with whom the buyer could settle. In our opinion the moment the check was delivered the full title to the cows was vested in the buyer. Therefore we conclude, assuming that the warranty was made as testified to by the buyer, that it was made after the title to the cow had passed to buyer and it was void for want of consideration.

A warranty, like other contracts, is not valid unless supported by a consideration. Where it is made at the time of the sale, it is a part of the whole contract, and the price paid for the subject of the sale constitutes the consideration for it. It is not essential, however, in such a case, that the representation or warranty should be made at the exact time of the sale; if it is made at any time before the completion of the contract, and so as to form a part of the whole transaction, the price of the thing sold will afford a consideration. But a warranty made after the sale is invalid; unless it has some new consideration to support it, the consideration already given, i. e., the price, is exhausted by the transfer of the property in the thing sold, and there is nothing to support the subsequent warranty, unless a new consideration is given.

This principle has been applied and is every day being applied in thousands of cases. The point in all of them is that when a warranty is not given until after the sale, obviously the buyer could not have bought with the warranty as an inducement. Therefore, he cannot claim the benefit of it.

Always ask for a warranty before you have said "I'll take it," and paid your money. When you get it then, you have something that you can realize upon if the merchandise is not up to representation. If you wait until afterward, even one minute afterward, you are precisely where you would be if you had never gotten any warranty at all.

There is one way to get around this, and I have seen it done successfully several times. Suppose you have bought some goods and forgot to get from the seller a definite representation as to quality, or grade, or whatever is the main point of the purchase. You have actually placed the order, and the goods have been made for you or set aside for you, which means that the title has passed to you. It makes no difference whether you have paid for them or not; if they have been ordered by you, they are made for you or set aside for you. The title is in you, even though they have not yet been actually delivered.

At this point you suddenly discover that you ought to have a warranty, and you go after it. Under ordinary conditions it will be worthless even if you get it, for reason which I explained in discussing the cow case. The thing to do is to give your seller some new consideration for the warranty, for which it has a new consideration and is valid. This is often done in one way, which is permissible because orders for merchandise are practically never treated as contracts nowadays, but only as tentative agreements which either party, especially the buyer, can cancel at will. You go to the seller and tell him you have about made up your mind to return the goods or cancel the order. You need no real business is conducted so loosely that day that the average seller will most always allow you to cancel and send them back. He will probably not strenuously deny your right to return them under existing customs of the trade, but will of course try to induce you to keep them.

You can then agree to keep them, provided he will give you in writing the warranty which you should have had in the beginning. It is then be as good as any other warranty, for to get it you gave a valid consideration—you waived your right under existing business customs, to return goods or cancel the contract, for any or no reason. Fair-minded men will use this plan to get what they were fairly entitled to at the beginning, never as a means of intimidating a seller into giving more than he agreed to or ought to give. Furthermore, at best this plan is merely a last resort; a warranty ought to be gotten during the sale and as a part of it. There never be any trouble to realize it if that is done.

Question: * * *, N. Y.—Can you tell me anything as to the liability of a member of a mutual insurance company, such as Grocers' Cash Deposit Mutual Insurance Co. of Huntingdon, Pa. What I would like to find out is case of claims against the comp what extent is a member responsible, according to the laws of Pennsylvania?

Answer.—Some mutual fire insurance companies require their members to deposit notes as security that they will pay their share of the losses. Others require members to deposit sums in cash for the same purpose. Judging from its title I assume the concern you mention belongs to the second class. In either case the member is not bound under the law for any more than the amount of his note, or the amount he has deposited, always provided the amount of the members' notes or of their cash deposits is sufficient enough in the aggregate to properly take care of the total liabilities of the company.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out all the facts bearing on the case. All questions should be carefully worded to avoid misconstruction. Write one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless it is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

How to Get More Coffee From the Philippines.

There is a movement to make a more serious attempt at restoring the coffee industry in the Philippine Islands than has been made heretofore. The coffee industry when it flourished centered in the municipality of Lipa, Province of Batangas. At one time coffee was a leading export of the islands. In 1889 the value of coffee exported was $1,237,000 or over 7 per cent. of the total value of the exports of the Philippines. The year following the coffee plague began its ravages and the production gradually fell off until by 1891 it disappeared altogether and the industry has become a memory. The Bureau of Agriculture has for 10 years maintained a station at Lipa, at which limited experiments have been made with different varieties of coffee, to discover one that could withstand or escape the ravages of the pests, but none has yet been found. The general feeling is that sufficient effort has not been made to reinvigorate the coffee industry by overcoming the ravages of these enemies of the plant, and plans are being formulated to undertake the task of discovering means of combating the pests and re-establishing the once flourishing industry.

How You Fellows Ought to Spend Sundays.

Ain't I the busy little butter-in to other people's business? Remember the scheme I put over last week to butt in to other people's weddings? I've got another one now and it's a peach, like all my schemes. This one is a scheme to keep people from putting in their time on Sundays like they oughtn't to do. How's that for a little wonder worker?

I had to stay all last Sunday in a town of about 5,000, where I've gone for years and know plumb near all the business fellows. There's about twenty of 'em all told and they run some pretty good stores. During that day I had nothing to do and I buzzed about, going to see some of 'em and finding out about some of the rest.

What I found out just made me feel stronger about a hunch I've always had—that the average fellow don't know how to put in his Sundays. Can I tell him? Oh, I wouldn't go so far as to say that, but when I get to Congress I'm going to have somebody appointed to tell him.

My idea about Sundays is that they ought to be real pick-me-ups. When a hard-working fellow comes up to Saturday night he's apt to be some stale. If he had to work Sunday, chance is he'd be all grouched up by Sunday night, and if he had to do it every Sunday I don't know what would happen.

All right. He ought to get on Sunday what he needs to let him go back to business on Monday chipper as a wild bird. A whole lot of business fellows don't get that on Sunday and there's the whole point of my grand scheme.

Here's some cases. This Sunday I spent out there in that town one of the grocers in that place, a bully good customer of mine, went off in his Ford and drove the bally little thing all day. I heard afterward he went over 200 miles! Wouldn't that shake you up? It sure would me, in a Ford. Did you know they were calling Fords Teddy Roosevelt's now? Sort of a loving way of speaking of 'em, because Teddy was a rough rider too. All right, but if I was little Henry Ford they could guy my little cars all they wanted to, if they'd go on buying a million of 'em of me every year. Ain't that right?

Well, to get back, what that particular grocer ought to get on his Sundays is a good loaf. He's a thin, nervous critter, and he don't do business easy. When Sunday morning comes he ought to take a late sleep and just stick around and eat and read all day. Then when Monday came he'd be worth something. Instead of that he pushes that blamed car for 200 miles and is worse on Monday than he was on Saturday. And he does something like that every Sunday all summer, too.

I know another fellow out there, keeps the big dry goods store. He's fatter than I am and slow. He gets through a lot, but it don't wake him up and he hardly knows he's working. Neither does his old liver. He spent that Sunday I was out there exactly like the other fellow ought to have spent his. He got up late and ate big meals and dozed and nodded around his porch all day long. He didn't need that. What I'd make him do on Sunday is something with work to it. I'd make him walk eighty miles. What do I care, he ain't any customer of mine? Or he could buy some golf sticks and bang that little white pill around a field. That sort of thing would wake him up. When he got back to his store, he'd have some life in him.

There's another grocer out there that was away all day too—he went to the shore with his whole family. Some family—a husky wife and four children. He's a hard worker, too, and it's no rest for him to go to the shore. But I was told that that was the only vacation his wife got and she thought they ought to do it, so they do that every clear Sunday all summer. Gee, how I would pray for a wet summer if I was him!

He ought to rest up, for as I say he works hard all week. There ain't any rest in toting a wife and four kids on a sweaty train somewhere in the morning and bringing 'em back at night. Rest? Holy gee! Don't he owe something to his family? Sure he does, he owes it to 'em to see that he stays in good shape so's he can go on keeping 'em. And that kind of trips, on the only day he has to rest up on, ain't doing that, believe me.

THE STROLLER.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

E. T. Messick, secretary of Pittston association, has organized the Italian merchants of that town as a part of the merchants' association. They will have their circle meeting. Pittston will send a big delegation to the Philadelphia convention.

Secretary E. P. Henwood of the Bradford and Wyalusing association, will be one of the delegates to the Philadelphia convention. It is expected that these associations will also send a delegation of their members.

We understand that a vigorous effort will be made at the next session of the Legislature to repeal the mercantile tax law.

Percy F. Smith, of Pittsburg, a candidate for Lieutenant-Governor of Pennsylvania on the Wilmington Party ticket. Mr. Smith was a pioneer in the work of organizing the retail merchants of this State. As editor of the "Pennsylvania Merchant" he did yeoman service by voice and pen. At his own expense he visited towns over the Commonwealth preaching the gospel of organization. He has elected the merchants of Pennsylvania.

A Burning Business Question.

The illustration above shows clearly the problem confronting every business man. On one hand is the horse and wagon delivery system with its limited territory and ever increasing cost of hay, grain and horseflesh. On the other, the motor truck, with its facilities for increasing the territory from two to three times its former size, ability to deliver at a lower cost per delivery, and an advertising advantage that is only limited by the owner's ingenuity. Which way is the most profitable?

nia will have a mighty good end.

f merchants knew what a big convention of retailers meant to organization they would flock to Philadelphia in large numbers in September.

Whether organized or not, merchants from every town in the State will be welcomed. Come and catch the inspiration and enthusiasm of this big trade conclave.

Forristown has a good retail grocers' association, which should affiliate with our State association.

Kane, Pa., has a good, strong business men's association. One of its executive committee is a candidate for the Legislature. Kane is a great resort for hay fever sufferers and the association has spent considerable money advertising the State. H. G. Berkhouse is the very efficient secretary.

The picnic of the Pottstown association on August 6th was a big success. Sorry we could not accept an invitation to be present and go to another engagement.

The Freeport Retail Grocers' Association will merge into a business men's association. This is a good move, as the number of grocers in Freeport is so few that it could not do effective work except in grocery lines.

Organizer Smedley visited Kitting August 4th and addressed the association. August 5th and 6th he spent at Johnstown; August 7th and 8th at Pittsburg.

Pottstown was a tightly closed town on August 6th, the occasion being the second annual picnic of the Merchants' Association. It is estimated that 20,000 persons attended the festivities. Practically the manufacturing plants closed the day and business of all was suspended. The festivities commenced with an automobile parade. At 10 A. M. there was a play show at the park with big prizes for the handsomest babies. A big fireworks display at night wound up the day's fun. The association employed two bands of music and an orchestra. Dancing was indulged in all day and there was something doing every minute. Over 1000 of Spring City merchants and citizens attended in large numbers.

Fruit and Vegetables.

This suggestion for a neat trim in fruit and vegetables will appeal to the green truck dealer who wishes to have attractive window displays. To arrange this window: First cover the bottom with green crepe paper. In the center, in front, place a sign card, with lettering as illustrated. Cut some melons and cantaloupes and place them as in cut. At the rear place two pyramids, one of choice fruit and the other of vegetables. Arrange two hoops to form arches at the back of the window, cover them with green crepe paper and support them by invisible wire from the ceiling. Cut some of the green crepe paper in long strips about two inches wide and arrange them from the top to the arches as illustrated. Polish some choice red apples and fasten them one against the other on the arches, at each corner and in the center suspend a cluster or two of grapes.

Peanut Butter Trim.

Peanut butter sells very well just now during picnic season. Make an attractive window display of it and help it along. To arrange this display: First cover the bottom of the window with white crepe paper. In the center, in front, place a large neat sign card, with lettering as in illustration. Open a jar of glass, of the peanut butter and give a taste of it on crisp butter thins or saltines. In the center of the window place three paper napkins, on which display peanut butter sandwiches, use saltines for this, some loose peanut butter on a dish in the center, and home-made peanut butter fudge. Make two arches of hoops, cover with white crepe paper, cut some of it in long strips, about two inches broad, and arrange them for a background, as in illustration. Place jars of peanut butter in different size glasses in pyramids at the sides and in the center. Place a large pile of choice peanuts in each arch and spread them out into the window part way.

European War Continues to Disorganize Grocery Markets

All Imported Products Radically Advance or Become Unavailable. Many Out of the Market. Some Domestic Products Advance Also.

The story of the past week is a story of continued market disturbances on account of the European war. Prices on very many things have risen during the week, including a number which had no legitimate reason to. The principal advances have of course been in foreign products which are in regular sale in the markets of this country. In most cases the reason for advance is a good one, but a number of domestic products have advanced which it would appear from a superficial view of the market should have declined rather than advanced.

One of the most sensational advances has been in wheat and flour.

In spite of the fact that our wheat crops are larger than ever before, and that our export trade would be seriously interfered with, prices on both wheat and flour have very sharply advanced, calling down upon those responsible the general condemnation of the trade and the public.

As announced in another column, a number of resolutions have been offered in Congress looking to an investigation of various food advances, notably that of flour, and the President has ordered an investigation.

Sugar has also made a very sharp advance during the week, and at this writing is quoted on the basis of 7½ cents for granulated. Large foreign demand for sugar which would otherwise have gone to this country is the reason in a nutshell. There is no limit to the predictions which are made as to where sugar may go; 10 cents per pound seems to be considered fairly conservative.

It is upon imported food products, however, that the war has fallen most heavily. These products have come to have a very large demand in this country, and for some of them there is no domestic substitute. All of these have very sharply advanced or are not offered at all.

Since the war began shore mackerel have advanced at least $3 per barrel. There would have been plenty of them for the demand if the usual supply of other grades of mackerel had been available, but under the circumstances shore mackerel are practically compelled to satisfy the entire demand, and they are not able to do it. The few Irish mackerel which are available have also advanced about the same amount. There are some Norway mackerel on spot, but not many and these are all very much higher.

The mustard situation is also attracting attention. Colman's mustard, which is made in England, has been withdrawn entirely, and there will be practically none outside of the small spot stock, which is very light. Domestic mustard is also affected because of the scarcity of mustard seed, which comes largely from Russia and to some extent from Austria and Hungary. American holders of Colman's mustard are parcelling out their stock in half-case lots at an advance of about 10 per cent. to cover the increase in the exchange and advanced war insurance.

Such goods as Crosse & Blackwell's pickles and jams have advanced about 10 per cent. Crosse & Blackwell say they will try to ship to this country, but have no idea how they will succeed.

English marmalades are in the same position. Packers are refusing to promise anything or to offer goods at any price. There is a very small spot stock in this country and after that is gone there will be none at all until the situation clears.

All French canned vegetables are extremely high and very scarce. French peas and mushrooms are reduced to almost nothing in quantity. Peas have advanced about $5 per case. Mushrooms are probably $4 higher.

English sugar syrup, which comes here in tins and has a fair sale, is in the same position with other English products, and has advanced on this side about 5 per cent.

Importers of foreign olive oil are in particularly bad shape. In ordinary times shipments come forward so regularly that no American importer carries more than about a month's supply. This means an early famine in this country unless something happens, and as a result of this prices have advanced 20 to 25 cents per gallon. California olive oil will of course be available, but will hardly be a drop in the bucket.

Olives have advanced 10 per cent. There are very few over here.

Imported sardines are considerably higher, although they were almost prohibitively high before. French sardines and Portuguese sardines are about $5 per case higher by reason of the practical certainty that no more will be had within a very short time. Norwegian sardines have only gone up about one dollar per case. Kipper herring are also on the last lap, and have advanced about 10 per cent.

Some reference was made in a recent issue to the large quantity of Holland condensed milk sold in this country. There was a considerable supply of this on spot, and the market has not yet been affected.

All foreign nuts can be said to be practically out of the market. There are a few available, but they are commanding such prices as to be out of most people's reach. Shelled nuts, for example, which sold before the war opened at 36 cents per pound, have sold during the week at 49 cents.

Another French product which has a fair sale in this country is bar-le-duc. Outside of a little carried over in cold storage, there is none to be had.

Foreign cheeses have advanced very radically. Swiss cheese is about 12 cents per pound higher, and Roquefort about 12 cents per pound higher. Camembert and other cheeses are nearly out of the market. Domestic cheeses are sure to be affected but have not been as yet.

There are no maraschino cherries on spot, consequently there will be no advance. The trade will simply use the domestic maraschino, which is very much inferior to the imported, in the mind of the epicure. However, they will do in a pinch.

Imported macaroni and caviar are also shortly to be unavailable, and both are much higher.

The American market is bare on Turkish figs, and there is much question whether any can be gotten here in time for the holiday trade.

Holiday orders are in now, and it is customary to begin shipping about the middle of September. The bulk of the crop comes over a little later in British steamers. Even if the war should cease almost instantly, there would be some trouble in getting things straightened out in time. If the war continues a few weeks longer it will be impossible to get any imported figs here for the holiday trade. There are practically none on spot.

The above is not an effort to cover the ground; in other words to report every product that shows an advance, for every foreign product has advanced, if it is available at all. This article touches only a few of the high spots.

Congress May Investigate Advancing Food Prices

Several Resolutions Asking for Investigations Introduced During the War President Acts.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

August 13, 1914

Congress has begun to notice the rapidly increasing prices of food products, and several resolutions have been offered during the week looking to investigations. For now on for several weeks the two Houses will probably be talking and discussing, meanwhile doing nothing, until the need of action appears.

There were three principal resolutions, offered by Pennsylvania members. A resolution introduced by Congressman Donohoe providing that a select committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker to investigate and ascertain whether any combination, understanding or agreement exists between sellers, dealers or packers of foodstuffs to advance prices of such necessities to consumers in the United States.

Another one, by Congressman Moore, "provides that the Secretary of Agriculture and Secretary of Commerce be and they hereby are requested to transmit forthwith to the House of Representatives the information they, or either of them, may have as to the reason for

Milk—A profitable staple of larger sales volume than sugar

Do you realize that the average family spends more for milk than for sugar. Everyone of your customers spends $3.00 per month for milk—some spend much more—this trade goes to the milk peddler and he makes money on it, too. You have to tie up money in a sugar stock to supply your customers and you often lose money doing it.

This milk business, and the profit that goes with it, should belong to you.

CARNATION MILK

will help you switch your customers from raw milk to evaporated—for cooking and baking. Our advertising is interesting and educating housewives in the use of evaporated milk. It is sending to the grocer's cash drawer some of the money usually paid to the milk peddler.

When a woman comes to you for evaporated milk make sure that she will be pleased and she will return and continue to buy evaporated milk from you—Give her CARNATION MILK—she will like it—is clean, sweet and pure—always ready for use. Carnation Milk will prove that evaporated milk is superior to raw milk for cooking. And that will be an important step in starting the usual $3.00 per month milk money into your cash drawer. So push Carnation Milk. Your jobber carries it.

increase in the prices of food supplies to the American consumer, or any information they or either of them may possess as to steps taken to correct abuses arising from such increases in the cost of food supplies."

The principal resolution was by Representative Kelly, also of Pennsylvania, as follows:—

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby requested to furnish to the House of Representatives, information as to whether the prices of articles of food necessary to the health and well being of the American people have been arbitrarily advanced in the home markets on pretext that the high prices of such articles are the result of the European war.

Second, Whether the manipulation of values by speculators on the Chicago Board of Trade and elsewhere is resulting in unjust, unwarranted advances in the prices of foodstuffs, in spite of record breaking crops in this country, and the fact that there has been little or no exportation of food supplies to the countries at war in Europe.

All these were referred to committees, whose action upon them is a course problematical.

As the week closes, the President has ordered an investigation into advances all over the country, and United States attorneys and special agents are already at work.

Flour Man Defends Advance in Wheat and Flour

Says Price Increases are Partly Caused by Increased Demand From Consumers, Due to Fear of Higher Prices.

So much criticism has arisen over the heavy advances in wheat and flour, despite the fact that the wheat crop is the largest on record in this country, which would seem to mean, when the interruption of our export trade is considered, lower prices rather than higher, that the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has asked a representative and well-known flour handler to state the reasons from his standpoint. The following statement has been furnished, the writer requesting the suppression of his name:—

All previous experience argues that in the event of European wars the price of foodstuffs would advance. America has on hand and can supply to the belligerent nations nearly all the necessary food staples.

In these days when the war news is instantaneously transmitted by telephone, cable and wireless every person is well informed of general conditions and well able to draw his own conclusions.

It is a fact that great events are reflected in the wheat market almost immediately. The United States has in sight a bumper crop of 1,000,000,000 bushels of wheat. This was the largest crop ever raised in this country, and it seemed almost sure that with promised normal crops elsewhere we would have a large amount of wheat for export and abnormal low prices would rule at home. Almost without a single warning the European countries declared war, and as in the past, the event was reflected in the wheat market. The consumers in this country, believing that all the foreign powers will need our wheat, immediately began buying flour. Many housewives, who had not purchased anything larger than a 12-pound sack for the past five years, have in many instances bought a barrel of flour. This unusual domestic demand, coupled with the critical foreign situation, has had the effect of causing the farmer to hold his wheat for still further advances in price and the whole thing has resolved itself down to a matter of supply and demand. The armies and the peoples of the European countries must be fed and America has the wheat. Each country will be bidding against the other for our wheat, and while just at the moment it appears to be a difficult matter to secure ships to carry the wheat out, yet this is but a temporary condition and transportation companies will doubtless, with the aid of the financiers, arrange the necessary details permitting the shipment of all wheat and flour that is bought here. The longer the war lasts the higher flour will go. The present high prices in this country are due to the farmer holding back his wheat and the abnormal demand of home buyers, caused by the fear that most of the wheat we have will be shipped out of the country. There is nothing to indicate that prices will decline, except in the event of cessation of hostilities in Europe.

South American Markets for Canned Goods.

Although South America imports about $15,000,000 worth of canned goods annually, the United States furnishes only about 18 per cent. of the total, of which the principal item is canned salmon. That the sales of canned goods in this field can be greatly increased is the opinion of Commercial Agent E. A. Thayer, of the Department of Commerce, who recently completed an investigation of the Latin-American markets for this line of goods. The results of this investigation are incorporated in a monograph issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. This publication treats of the consumers' preferences, sales methods, pure food laws, credit terms, shipping costs and other subjects in the various countries of interest to American canners. Copies of the monograph (Special Agents' Series, No. 87) may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, for 5 cents each.

How the Fulton (Mo.) Grocers Change From Credit to Cash Has Worked After Two Months

Eight Grocers of Fulton (Mo.) Changed Together From Credit to Cash on June 1st Last. Now After Two Months They Tell Readers of This Paper How It Worked Out. All Say They Would Never Go Back.

On June 1st, last, about two months ago, eight retail grocers of Fulton, Mo., comprising the Fulton Retail Grocers' Association, decided to adopt the cash system of doing business—they had all been doing a credit business before—and so announced to the public in the following advertisement:—

Fulton Grocers Reasons

FOR ADOPTING
Cash-In-Advance System

Owing to the heavy demands on us for credit, and the excessive work and trouble of keeping correctly the accounts of our five or six thousand credit customers so that each one is perfectly satisfied, thereby eliminating disputes which arise by the neglect of some one forgetting to charge or charging accounts to the wrong persons, or some one forgetting just what they purchased, and also owing to the heavy losses caused by doing a credit business, we are forced to put our business on

A Strictly Cash Basis on June 1, 1914

To Protect Both You and Us

By making this change we not only protect ourselves from losses, but we protect you who pay your bills, and who pay cash, from paying the bills of the fellows who beat their accounts, and from paying the interest on the money owed us by our credit customers, and we also protect you from paying the cost of doing business on the credit system, which is no small matter.

Who Pays Interest and Mistakes

Now we have a number of good customers who pay their bills promptly, and to these we wish to say that we want you to fully understand that this is no reflection upon your credit in the least. Your credit is considered good with us, and your past patronage has been appreciated. We ask you to continue with us on the cash basis and we will say to you also, that if you run short of cash you can borrow money for your needs and pay interest on it and then save money over the old way, for as you well know, if you stop to think about it, you have the interest to pay anyhow, as it is added to the price of the goods and is a part of the expense of doing business. The cost of doing business is borne by you. Mistakes of trading are charged up to the cost of doing business. Who pays for it? You.

Unnecessary Expense on Your Bill

The merchant who uses old-fashioned methods, who keeps an unnecessary number of clerks, and expensive delivery wagons, who is continually standing petty losses from his credit accounts, whose slip-shod system allows some goods to go without being charged, while other goods spoil or get shelf-worn—that merchant means to give you service. But is it service? Isn't it just unnecessary expense he puts on your bill? Our common sense methods eliminate this useless expense. It puts new, fresh merchandise in your house at the lowest possible cost, and you save the difference.

You Carry the Burden

The public has asked us to carry them for $45,000.00 to $50,000.00 without a promise as to when it will be paid, and to do this we have to quickly mark up our goods to cover the interest on this amount, the loss of slow and bad accounts, the forgotten charges, the expense of extra help, the settling of all disputed accounts, which amount to no little sum, together with postage and stationery, and all this is charged up to and paid by you.

Trade Where Dollar Goes Farthest

And now when you stop to think of the worry which is the worst part of it all and the trouble of keeping straight five or six thousand accounts, is it any wonder that we have decided to change to the cash system? We do not wish to offend any of our customers, we have tried to treat you all alike, and it is our intention to continue to do so. And now on these grounds we ask a share of your patronage and we think we deserve it. So if you want to trade where your dollar goes the farthest, if you want to trade where you are treated exactly like your neighbor, if you want to trade where you don't have to pay the expenses of the credit system, if you want to trade where honest goods are marked at honest prices, and where dickering and bartering as in olden times is a thing of the past, come and trade with us.

Stop Supporting the Deadbeats

If you are tired of paying the bills of the deadbeat, come and trade at the cash stores and lay off the burden of supporting the scalawags that are too do-less to support themselves, but wait for a chance at your hard-earned dollars.

Cash Buys Goods for Less Money

Now it is not necessary to tell that in laying off all of these expenses and losses we can sell you goods for less money, for you already know it. And we appeal to your good sense and judgment for a fair trial and comparison and we know that you will not wish to return to the old ways.

At the time the scheme was adopted this journal published an account of it, and stated that when enough time had elapsed to enable judgment to be formed, some additional information would be published as to how it had worked. Two months have passed, which is certainly long enough to enable such a scheme to be appraised, and the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" presents below the opinions of five of the participating Fulton grocers:—

In regard to cash system, we are more than pleased with results. Our customers are well satisfied and we seldom have a call for credit, and when we refuse they do not get mad. We would not think of going back in the old ruts. The cash system has a tendency to make better people, cut out lying and bad promises. We do not sell quite as many goods, but we get more money, and the beauty is we have no disputes over our accounts. Every successful business is carried on with the cash system, and I hope the time is at hand when the grocery business, as a National concern, will be conducted on the cash system. No reason why people should not pay cash for groceries as well as pay cash for railroad tickets, picture show tickets, whisky, etc. These concerns are conducted on the cash system, why not the grocery business. There is no argument on the other side, but volumes could be written to show that the cash system is the only way. It is better for the merchant and better for the customer. Any information that we can give you we will be glad to do so.

WOOLERY & DUNAVANT.

After two months of cash business our business is in much better shape than prior to June 1st, when we were doing business under the old system. There is not a member of our association that wants to go back to the old way of doing business, and if they should all go back to the old way of doing business, we would stay with the cash in advance. Try and get other merchants to get on the soft side of business.

EVERHEART & HUDNALL MERC. CO.

We are glad you are interested in the cash system. You ask if we have lost any customers? We have lost some customers, but they did not all go to our non-members, some sent into mail order houses, to their sorrow.

The say they can do just as well with us as they can away from home and have come back to us.

Yes, some of our old customers got mad at first, but very little is said about our system now.

People like it better every day, because they do not buy as much when they pay the cash as when the credit system was in effect. One customer told us that when the end of the month came he had $13 left out of his salary, when before he never had anything left to mention. This speaks well for the cash system, we think.

As to it being a good move, it was the best move any set of grocers ever made, because we had had three dry years in succession now, and if we had not went into the cash system some of us would have surely failed.

Every year we were getting more and more on our books, and people were using their cash to pay for feed, some for drink and pleasures. One saloonkeeper said our move hurt his business.

If we had our time to go over and knew when we started into business, three years ago, what we do now, we would never have opened up a set of books. Our experience has cost a good deal, but it was worth it. If any grocer ask you about our cash system, we will be glad to help you in any way we can.

FRANK & BRIGLEB.
Per L. J. Frank.

We would not change back to our old system under any consideration. We are more than pleased with the cash system. Below I will give you list of our sales for 1913 and 1914:—
June, 1913, cash sales, $1,314.45; credit sales, $2,575.49; total sales $3,889.94.

June, 1914, cash sales, $2,414.32. Two hundred and nine dollars and eighty-six cents more sold on credit in June, 1913, than we collected in June, 1914.

July, 1913, cash sales, $1,766.22; credit sales, $2,525.55; total, $4,291.77.

July, 1914, cash sales, $2,326.63. Five hundred and nineteen dollars and fifty-five cents more sold on credit in July, 1913, than we collected in July, 1914.

Now we have only been on the cash basis for two months, so that is all the records we can compare with, but that is enough to satisfy me. To look at the difference in sales at first glance it looks bad, but when you figure on it it looks good. When you lose an account you lose principal and all; when you collect it you only make the profit.

We have been in business in the stand for three years and the collections have never been as much as the credit sales. One month we got within $68; that is as close as we ever come to collect as much as we sold on credit and our largest balance was $725.12 in one month. So you can see we had our profit tied up in accounts all the time. Trusting this will cover your inquiry we beg to remain,

Yours for cash,
WALTER BACKER.

We are so confident that the cash system is a good move that in reply to letters which we are receiving daily from almost every State in the Union, we are advising our grocery dealers to adopt it. Our business dropped off a little in the beginning, but at the present time we are equalling or surpassing what we sold a year ago. We are sure if the grocers of this county only knew how easily they could change to the cash system and how much easier a cash grocery was run, the United States would know of no credit grocery stores in 1915.

We do not think we lost any business to grocers that were selling for credit. Our customers had to pay for two months' groceries in one month, and naturally bought as sparingly as possible, therefore the first month showed us a decline in sales, but not in cash receipts. We are now able to buy our staples in car lots and divide among the members of the association, and by so buying we are able to make prices that cannot be made by our competitors, who buy in small lots and sell for credit.

Excitement Over War Advances in Food Products. Italy Embargoes Export of Its Food Products. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, August 13, 1914.

Prices of various kinds of food have advanced, both wholesale and retail, and there is a lot of public excitement as a consequence. The daily papers are taking up the matter and devoting columns of space, chiefly in efforts to show that dealers are trying to take advantage of the war in Europe to push up food prices here.

The general cry in the newspapers is that at most kinds of food must be more plentiful than usual because the war is blocking all kinds of exports and that, therefore, any advances in prices of domestic food products must be the result of mean conspiracies on the part of producers or dealers, or both.

Besides the threats of proceedings at Washington, the local officials of New York, including the Mayor and the District Attorney, have started investigations and have promised prosecutions in case it is found that there are any conspiracies to put up prices. Mrs. Heath and the Housewives' League are assisting in the investigations.

The agitation is somewhat like that of two or three years ago over the high cost of living, but is now intensified.

In the wholesale grocery trade, it is pointed out that there are sufficient reasons why some kinds of food must now be higher than before the war. The imported products have advanced, of course, since further supplies have been generally cut off. South America and England and some other countries are trying various kinds of domestic food in large quantities, in the expectation that conditions will soon permit their shipment, and this tends to limit the domestic supplies and so to advance prices. Another important factor is that the general public has the war scare and many householders are stocking up with much larger supplies of food than they usually buy. In addition, there comes the element of speculation on the part of distributors generally, and even of outsiders, who wish to take a hand in the game. The distributors, wholesale and retail, viewing the situation with apprehension, are buying in heavier quantities than usual so as to guard themselves against advances or further advances. All such additional demand must tend to send up prices.

Some of the importers and manufacturers have adopted the policy of selling only in normal quantities and to the regular trade. Their agents have been instructed to look with suspicion upon bids from new customers who may be merely speculating, and to sell them only in small quantities. In this way it is hoped to conserve the supply and to keep trade fairly within normal limits.

Even this policy is criticised, however, by some of the distributors, who say that the real object of those who are pursuing it is to hold on to their own supplies in the expectation that they will get still higher prices later.

One large importer, in talking to your correspondent, said his house has a considerable quantity of a product that is getting scarce and is likely to get more scarce, as new supplies are not likely to be received this year, so that quite naturally he had advanced his prices and would probably advance them again. He said that he would consider a man a fool who would not make whatever profits may be coming to him under the unusual circumstances, especially as others in the trade will do the same thing.

Your correspondent also saw a city official, who spoke in relation to the investigations. He opened up a new line of action which he said is under consideration. This official said that the inquiries already made have convinced him that advances in prices are in no way to be laid at the door of the retailers' associations. Yet, he said, there has been a sort of uniformity in the advances made by the retailers.

A possible solution, he said, is that the salesmen of the wholesale houses pass along the word when they call on the retailers. It is easy, he said, for the salesmen, or even the man taking deliveries, to suggest to the retailer that he can now get, say, 2 cents a pound more for his sugar, as everybody else is getting it. Such a tip, said the official, would very naturally be accepted by the retailers. These tips passed along the line to the retail trade as to various products might account for the uniformity of the retail advances.

The official said that this suspicion is now the subject of inquiries. He admitted that there may not be anything unlawful in salesmen passing along such tips. He thought, however, that if all of the salesmen of a jobbing house are found to be passing along the same tip at the same time, a question may be raised as to their right to do so, especially if it could be proved that the salesmen had been instructed to do so by their employers. Of course, if it were found that several wholesale houses had salesmen passing along the same tip, it would indicate that such wholesalers are acting in concert and this would make a stronger case.

The Italian Chamber of Commerce in this city has received an official notification from Rome that the government has placed an embargo on the exportation from Italy of various food products that are mentioned, including grains, flour, sugar, cheese, dried peas and beans and other articles. Olive oil, wines, liquors, preserves and various kinds of vegetables and fruits are not mentioned and so are not covered by the embargo.

Such articles are not being imported at present, however, because of the disturbed condition of shipping and exchange.

In the United States District Court this week several members of a wholesale grocery firm were convicted of the fraudulent concealment of assets in bankruptcy. The men convicted are S. Landau, his son, Herman Landau, and Abraham Lippman.

The men had a wholesale store at 336 E. 103d street. They were accused of ordering and getting large bills of goods just before the bankruptcy proceedings were started. It was further charged that the men distributed these goods in a number of delicatessen stores used as "blinds," in the belief that such assets could not be traced.

A number of the large jobbing houses of the city joined in the investigation, which led to the prosecution. The court is to sentence the defendants during the week.

A number of members of the New York fruit trade tendered a complimentary dinner Thursday evening to William Brucato, who recently arrived here from Italy and will remain for a time, making his headquarters with his brother, P. Brucato, who has been his representative here in the Sicily lemon trade. The guest of the evening was complimented by the diners for improved methods he has instituted in the packing of lemons and in their shipment to this country.

The dinner was served at the Hotel Villa Penza at Coney Island. About 20 of the leading members of the trade were present. They presented engrossed resolutions to the guest of honor and enthusiastically proclaimed him as the king of the Sicily lemon trade.

Marmor & Boral Bros. have filed schedules in assignment. They have been in the wholesale butter and egg business at 199½ Duane street. The schedules show liabilities of $5,841; nominal assets of $3,278; actual assets, $1,325.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

All of the markets are unsettled to some extent by the results of the war. On one side is the feeling that buyers should be cautious because prices may drop if exports are prevented for a considerable time. On the other hand there is the prospect that the war may actually make some kinds of food scarce. Then there are the speculative activities of various kinds. Prices are changing from day to day in many lines.

The coffee market has been quieting down in the last few days. There is an easier tendency in prices. Rios 7s are now held at 9 cents and Santos 4s at 14 cents. These prices are, of course, higher than before the war. There is no pressure to sell, as holders generally believe that coffee will continue in a strong position.

Teas have continued to rise. The country is buying parcels wherever offered at full prices. Ceylons are particularly strong because of the check to shipments and are sold readily at further advances. It is said that there is nothing available under 24 cents. Indias are nearly cleaned up on the spot, although there are Orange Pekoes offered at 27 cents. In general, it is said that first-hand supplies are light. There is some reselling at second hand to out-of-town buyers. The chief factors in the situation are that the warehouse stocks seem light and shipments from the Far East are temporarily shut off.

Sugar continues highly active, with prices advancing. One factor in the situation is that consumers are said to be stocking up in order to protect themselves from sensational advances that have been predicted. Reports are circulating that prices to the public are likely to go up to 10 or 15 cents a pound. As a result, many householders are buying in 25 and 100 pound bags. The refiners are restricting the jobbers. The American and Howells are quoting 6½ cents on standard granulated, but accepting only limited orders for regular requirements. The other refiners have gone up to 7 cents and are firm at that figure. The prices are now 2½ cents higher than before the war began and further rises are predicted. Great Britain has been a heavy buyer of both raw and refined sugar. Many of the distributors had contracts ahead for several weeks

WITH THE EDITOR

That was a most remarkable fight in the West over albumen in baking powder. It does not affect the trade in the East as much as that in the West, for albumen baking powder is sold almost exclusively in the West. The point of the incident is the indiscreet way in which some food commissioners lend themselves to squabbles between rival manufacturers.

It is the practice of some baking powder manufacturers to add a quantity of egg albumen to their baking powder. It seems to be clear that the albumen is not a necessary ingredient. It does not leaven, and it is not a needed part of the filler which all baking powders must have to prevent moisture from accumulating and the other ingredients from deteriorating. When water is added to baking powder containing albumen, a beautiful foam results, which is spectacular and convincing to consumers. This appears to be the only reason for its use, and a number of food commissioners have taken the position that this is a deception—an innocent deception, perhaps, but still a deception, and one of them—Wallis, of Idaho—prohibited its sale on that ground.

The Crescent Manufacturing Co. of Seattle, Wash., manufacturers of a baking powder containing albumen, asked the court for an injunction to prevent the Idaho Commissioner from enforcing this order. The court, after trying the case, granted the injunction on the ground that albumen baking powder was not illegitimate, and that its sale could not be forbidden by the Food Commissioner merely because it contained albumen.

The only sensational point of the case was a thick sheaf of telegrams, which the Crescent Co. requisitioned and brought into court. They had passed between Commissioner Wallis and George P. McCabe, formerly solicitor to the Federal Food and Drug Board and now an attorney practicing for himself. Mr. McCabe is counsel for the Jacques Manufacturing Co., of Chicago, Ill., manufacturers of baking powder containing no albumen and deeply interested in the albumen fight. The telegrams show that Mr. McCabe, acting in the interest of a rival manufacturer, practically directed the Idaho Commissioner's fight against the Crescent Co. and other baking powder manufacturers; that the Idaho Commissioner and this lawyer for a concern certain to benefit largely by the enforcement of the albumen order, were in the closest possible relations, and that there was much color to the suspicion that the Idaho Commissioner allowed himself to be used to serve the Jacques Manufacturing Co. It was a very foolish and damaging position for a food commissioner to put himself into. In a food commissioner's position there are a thousand chances every day to favor somebody, to be partial to somebody, to so enforce the law that some will be injured and others benefited. Every one of these opportunities leads to a possible trap, and the public official that yields to any of them will live over a volcano forever after.

In Philadelphia and New York this summer we have accepted without much comment the closing all day, every Saturday, of the large department stores—a spectacle which only a few years ago would have been considered revolutionary. The big stores have been closed all day on the Saturdays of July and August, the employees have had so much easier time during the hot weather, and—this is really the point—the stores have done just as much business.

The consumer's convenience has been handled a great deal too tenderly by merchants. As soon as some merchant reveals the courage to consult his own convenience a little more, he finds that the buying public are a great deal more decent than he expected. Confronted by the absolute necessity of doing a thing, they will do it without much grumbling if any. They have not been able to buy goods of any of the large department stores during any Saturday of July or August. We have information that the stores did just as much business, so that it is obvious that buyers bought on some other day, as of course they could do in most cases just as well as not. Very probably if the merchants of a town were to decide to close at 5 o'clock every afternoon, their customers would be able to accommodate themselves to that also. So with most business innovations in which the business men act together.

Mr. Richard H. Waldo, manager of "Good Housekeeping Magazine," in an article sent to this paper, condemns the universal use among advertisers of the word "best" in connection with their particular product. His point is, and he is right, that the word loses all of its effect because everybody uses it. "Best" is not the only word whose use weakens rather than strengthens an advertisement—"greatest," "purest," "cheapest," "first" and "finest" all belong in the same category. To-day they all have about the same weight as so much blank space.

Here are two pregnant points from Mr. Waldo's article:—

If one advertises that an article is healing, delicious, economical, light, durable, nickel-plated, antiseptic, or anything else definite, the mind can grasp the claim, weigh it and act on it. But what does "best" really mean? Best for who? For what? Isn't it about as inept as the "best best" occasionally used by frenzied advertisers?

This magazine has associated with it trained experts, among them Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, who test scientifically the things we advertise. With all their help we have never found a product we felt sure was the "best," "greatest," "purest," "finest" nor any other "est." We know hundreds that are a splendid buy at the price; these we advertise.

We have always contended that the advertiser who would establish a reputation as a teller of absolute truth about his goods—the good qualities with the bad—would open up for himself a royal road to fortune. The public is so anxious to be able to believe somebody and so afraid to do it. Establishing such a reputation would be a comparatively easy matter. Let a merchant tell one thing against himself, and at once people who read it would say "this man must be honest."

But he must go the whole length. Many merchants are assuming frankness and candor in describing their goods, but almost anybody can tell the false from the real.

One of the illegal combinations which the United States Government sued recently was the Three Trust. The sale of goods was compromised and the United States Court made a decree that the Trust must dissolve. A part of this decree was a list of the things that the Three Trust must not do, because they constituted a part of a scheme to illegally monopolize trade and restrain competition. This list is here presented; it supplies an official definition of what is considered a trust by the United States Court.

1. The preparation of lists of wholesale and retail dealers with whom trade in thread shall not be carried on. In short, the maintenance of a blacklist.
2. The preparation and exchange between the defendants of trade agreements as to trade discounts, trade rebates, or terms or conditions of sale.
3. The purchasing or acquiring of factories, plants or brands of any competitor.
4. The fixing of resale prices or the blacklisting or discriminations against dealers who sell thread below the fixed prices, unless such dealer sells below cost.
5. The giving or offering of bonuses, rebates, etc.
6. The pooling of orders for the purpose of obtaining special discounts or concessions.
7. The use of "fighting brands."
8. The employment of special forces of salesmen, commonly known as "flying squadrons."
9. The soliciting or exacting from dealers or from customers or competitors agreements not to handle or to cease handling competitors' brands or from any discrimination against those who do so deal in competitors' brands.
10. Canvassing the retail trade of obnoxious dealers or jobbers for the purpose of interfering with or preventing their trade in thread.
11. Attacks on the credit or business reputation or quality of thread dealt in by competitors or the circulation of false reports concerning such competitors.
12. Intimidations or threats to prosecute alleged infringers of trade-marks, unless such alleged infringers are in fact actual and illegal infringers.
13. The giving of secret rebates to induce customers of competitors to transfer their trade.
14. The selling or offering to sell thread below the cost of production, or concentrated price cutting in different sections of the United States, making due allowance for the cost of transportation and difference in grade, quality or quantity sold.

15. The offering of bonuses or rebates in the form of free goods, except that purchasers and prospective purchasers are allowed to receive not less than 5 per cent. of their total purchases as samples to be distributed to the trade.

We believe rules 3, 5, 6 and 8 to be absolutely unenforceable and not required under the anti-trust laws of the United States. Certainly the bona fide purchase of a competitor's business is not at this late day to be considered illegal? That it is not is shown by the United States Appeal Court's decision in the International Harvester case, handed down last week:—

There is no limit under the American law to which a business may not independently grow, and even a combination of two or more businesses if it does not unreasonably restrain trade, is not illegal; but it is the combination which unreasonably restrains trade that is illegal, and if the parties in controversy have 80 or 85 per cent. of the American business, and by the combination of the companies all competition is eliminated between the constituent parts of the combination, then it is in restraint of trade within the meaning of the statutes under all of the decisions.

And if bonuses or rebates are not to be allowed, no manufacturer can sell one customer on different terms than another, which manufacturers have done from the beginning of time, and ought to do, depending on customer's varying right to consideration.

As to Rule 6, why should a number of manufacturers not pool their orders so as to get a lower price? The United States Department of Agriculture advises consumers to do that right along, and everybody else is doing it. The thing is preposterous!

So is the rule that manufacturers must not employ "special forces of salesmen, commonly known as flying squadrons." In Heaven's name, why not?

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade topics, being understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. All communications must be accompanied by the writer's name and address as an evidence of good faith, but not necessarily for publication. All inquiries within our power to answer will also be noticed in this department.

Prohibition and Business.

Berlin, Conn., August 9, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have read the contributions of the various writers on the effect of prohibition with great delight, the climax of my elation was reached when I read your editorial and you were willing to come out flat-footed for prohibition and wind up with, "God speed the day when it comes."

Too many editors are so afraid of their readers that they are content to stay on the fence all of their lives, and hope that the time will soon come when the American business man who has any sense, and any opinion, will not be afraid to express it.

The legalized saloon means everything to lose and nothing to gain.

Yours truly,

Philadelphia, August 10, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have been a reader and subscriber to your paper for some years, even have paid for another year and a half in advance, but this ends it.

What nationality you are or I am does not cut a figure, because we are, before all, Americans, and expect to get and give fair play. Some of your subscribers, probably many of them, are Germans or of German birth.

If you would study history for the last 50 years you would know conditions better. If you want to draw a picture of what will be, wait until you have reliable reports of what has happened, and before all, wait what's going to happen.

I thought you were a sensible lot of people, but I have changed my mind.

Yours truly
GUSTAV GOETZ.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" regrets that this subscriber takes offense at its opinion, expressed editorially last week, that the European war would come to an end when the Emperor of Germany learned that the most colossal bluff of his life could not be put over. Mr. Goetz should in all fairness remember that we are bound to see the situation from a different standpoint than his own Wants Business Men to Boom Federal Unfair Competition Act.

New York, August 8, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—The excellently drawn and much needed Unfair Competition Act can be promptly passed now if Congress hears just a little more strongly from the business men of the country.

An attempt is being made to embarrass its passage by resurrecting certain features of the Clayton-Anti-Trust Bill which assume to define and forbid certain business practices.

What the business community needs is an act prohibiting, in broad general terms, all unfair competition. Then we want the act to establish a "businessmen's court" (the Federal Trade Commission), to pass in a common sense way upon the fairness or unfairness of any particular practices which may be brought before it and with an appeal to the District Court in case of dissatisfaction with the findings of the Commission.

That is exactly what we get in the Federal Trade Commission Act (H. R. 15,613).

We can get that bill made into law if we simply let our Senators and Congressmen know where we stand.

The opponents of this bill have succeeded in having reincorporated in the Clayton Bill provisions which specifically describe and forbid a couple of business practices, one of which it is of doubtful wisdom to try to forbid, as is shown by the language of the bill, which is so hedged about with limitations as to be practically futile. And the second is already forbidden under the Sherman law. The bill leaves all other and many very grave abuses entirely unprovided for.

Now, do you want clean business in this country or not? Let the business men answer by writing to their Senators and Congressmen.

The objectionable features of this revised Clayton Bill, from the standpoint of the vast majority of American business men are found in Sections 4 and 2. In effect Section 4 provides that manufacturers shall not sell their products on the condition that the buyer shall not deal in or use competitors' products. Doubtless there have been abuses which this aims to correct, yet it is but a small part of our problem of unfair competition, and frequently a manufacturer in giving an exclusive agency to one party in a given territory (which the bill sanctions), might with entire propriety require in return that this party handles his goods exclusively. It is simply a question as to the fairness of the act in particular circumstances, and would be adequately dealt with under the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Section 2 says in effect that it shall be unlawful to discriminate in price between different purchasers for the purpose of injuring a competitor. But then it goes on to say that the provision is not to apply to discriminations made on account of differences in grade, quality, quantity or for other reasons which together include almost every reason for which such discount and discriminations can be made.

The Sherman law, however, has always forbidden such discounts when they tended to create monopoly, so what does this add?

No other trade practices are covered by the bill, so that any business man can see how many abuses in his field are unreached by this proposed substitute for a real unfair competition bill, and how far it comes from going to the root of our business difficulties.

Do you not agree that you want your Senators and Congressmen to vote against these confusing provisions of the Clayton Bill (H. R. 15,657) and in favor of the Federal Trade Commission Bill (15,613)?

The latter is not recommended as taking the place of the Stevens Bill (H. R. 13,395), which deserves our continued support to cover another situation.

Pennsylvania State Water Analytic Bureau.

Creighton, Pa., August 7, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Kindly inform me whether whether or not there is a State chemical station in Pennsylvania for testing and analyzing water. If so, let me know where it is located and what they charge. Kindly give me what information you can along that line.

Yours truly,

JOHN ALTMAN & Co.

Any chemist can test and analyze water. The average charge is $5 to $10, or you can get it done by sending a sample to the State Board of Health, Harrisburg, Pa., without charge.

It is necessary to write to the Commissioner of Health at Harrisburg, giving reasons why analysis is desired, and if he sees fit to grant the request he will send instructions to the State Laboratory at 2000 Arch street, Philadelphia, to send boxes to applicant in order that he may collect samples of water. The State Laboratory makes no chemical analysis, but a bacteriological test, which they consider a more delicate test for purity. A chemical analysis has to be made by a private chemist.

The Effect of Prohibition on Retail Business

Retailers From Various Sections, which are Now Dry but Were Formerly Wet, Tell How the Cutting Out of Liquor Affected Their Stores.

[Several weeks ago the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" announced that it had launched a campaign to obtain from retail merchants in all the sections of the Union, which had recently gone dry, statements showing what effect this had had, if any, upon the regular retail business in staples. A number of these statements have been obtained and they will appear below from time to time. The letters may not appear each week, for collecting them from all parts of the country is a colossal task and will take some time.—Ed.]

By R. A. Lange, Leavenworth, Kans.

Q.—What effect has abandoning the sale of liquor had upon your business?

A.—Depreciation of at least 25 per cent.

Q.—What effect upon the general business of your town?

A.—Empty store rooms; rents lower.

Q.—What effect upon collections?

A.—Collections poor and many losses.

Q.—What effect upon your average sales to each customer?

A.—Same as No. 1.

Q.—Are your customers spending more with you than they spent before prohibition came?

A.—No.

Q.—Is there any difference in the general peace and order of your town?

A.—Shipping liquor to Kansas is worse than open saloons.

Q.—Are you more prosperous under prohibition than you were before prohibition?

A.—No, sir.

As for myself I don't care and never use intoxicating liquors. These answers are from a business standpoint.

By Thos. Gale, Jackson, Miss.

I don't think any one who will give an honest expression to his views will say that prohibition has effect on the general business of the community. Those who profit by the trade of those in the liquor business will be affected, just as those who profit from the red light and gambling interests. Your question is a moral one and any answer depends from what angle you view the subject. Anyone who profits from these interests or are in sympathy with them will very likely return an answer in accordance.

So far as my business is concerned it is not affected in the least. The thing that affects the people of Mississippi now is a little insect called the cotton boll weevil, which has reduced the yield two-thirds of a crop. That makes the interest great; the reason is we feel it so.

By W. M. Dain & Co., Bath, Maine.

The laboring man is better off under prohibition and the man and family gets the benefit of his labor where in wet States the saloon gets the benefit.

I think it benefits all business. Collections are better from the drinking class in dry States.

In the State of Maine for the past two years we have had pretty rigid enforcement, and in consequence there has been a falling off in commitments to jails, lock-ups and work-shops of about 50 per cent.

There is not the disorder in dry States as in wet ones and I think the people get along better. At a rate I think personally that prohibition is the best.

By S. B. Grimes, Columbus, Ga.

No business since Columbus went dry; goes to Girard, Ala. Rents have gone down, etc. I am a teetotalist, never drank anything in my life. No! Whisky in town kills business.

By Z. Andrews & Son, Cambridge, Md.

So far we do not see any difference in our business. If there is any change at all it is better.

By J. T. Fisher, Winchester, Va.

I live in a dry city and county and as a general dealer must see the local option has been a very great benefit to the community, and would be more so if intoxicating vere not allowed to be shipped in ry territory. The wet people ake this a talking point, that min-rs, boys and girls, order whiskies

Sell KARO for Preserving

(Crystal White)

It makes better preserves than all sugar

In our extensive advertising, and in the "Preserving with Karo" booklet, we tell the housewife about the superiority and convenience of KARO for preserving fruits, making jellies, marmalades, jams, etc. It will pay you to follow up our suggestion and recommend this use of KARO (Crystal White), because your profit on KARO is much larger than your profit on sugar. You can be sure your customers will be not only satisfied, but delighted. KARO (Crystal White) is already extensively used for preserving purposes, and this use is increasing every day on account of the superior qualities imparted to the preserves, jams and jellies. KARO (Crystal White) is too profitable for you to let your customers use it simply as a table syrup; tell them to use it for cooking, baking and candy making, and you'll secure increased sales that will pay you many a dollar of extra profits.

Preserving booklets will be furnished to the grocers for distribution on request.

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

Why Coffee Sometimes is Unsatisfactory.

By WILLIAM B. HARRIS.

The majority of coffee drinkers jump to the conclusion that when their coffee does not taste right it is always the fault of the coffee. They overlook the fact that before a pound of coffee is entirely used up they have produced a beverage a good many times from the same package, and that there is a chance that the conditions under which the coffee is made may not always be uniform.

One of the points most often overlooked is the condition of the water used in making the coffee. The essential features for a good cup of coffee in this particular are that the water should be fresh, clear and boiling hard when applied to the grounds. Water that has been boiled and then allowed to cool off, or has been permitted to stand in the tea kettle over night, is dead and should never be used. Very frequently scale will form on the inside of a tea kettle. This accumulation is allowed to remain and particles break off and get into the coffee with the water. The result can only be unsatisfactory. Then the kettle may be rusted on the inside, particularly at the cover or near the spout. A very small percentage of iron rust will spoil coffee.

The above conditions may occur whether the water is in good condition as it reaches the house or not, but there are times when the water mains bring down water from the reservoirs that it is impossible to use and turn out a satisfactory product.

It has been often said that there are more complaints in the spring of the year than at any other time. The reason for this is quite apparent, when we consider that it is during the spring season that the heavy rains occur. The freshets and melting snows carry down into the reservoir a lot of sediment and dead vegetable matter that frequently makes the water decidedly objectionable. There are certain times after heavy rains or during a dry summer when it has been found necessary to buy filtered water in order to do any satisfactory testing of either coffee or tea. When such conditions exist there is certain to be unsatisfactory results in the home in connection with the preparation of the breakfast beverage.

Again, during the hot summer the reservoir will sometimes become low, exposing vegetable matter which decomposes, giving the water an unpleasant taste. Even boiling will not remove this objectionable character which is bound to spoil either coffee or tea.

In some sections of the country river water is used, carrying with it a large amount of silt which is bound to have an unsatisfactory result when the coffee is prepared.

If the question of the water supply is carefully watched, as well as the conditions under which the water is boiled, in the vast majority of cases the difficulty with the coffee as prepared for the table will be located without the necessity of any complaint whatever to the dealer supplying the particular brand in question.

at the old prices and so are in a position to make large profits.

The market for spot canned tomatoes has been getting more active and stronger. It is difficult to find sellers who will accept anything less than 75 cents for No. 3 Maryland tomatoes of last year's packing, f. o. b. Baltimore. No. 2s are held at 55 cents. Corn on the spot, both Southern and Western, is more active and higher. Distributors are now disposed to anticipate requirements. Southern packers are getting from 2½ to 5 cents more than they were glad to accept a few weeks ago. Western spot corn is bringing 75 cents for standards at the factory. Sales of Maine style Maryland corn of last year's packing have been made at 67½ cents in New York, f. o. b., in the last few days. Distributors are showing more interest in futures, but most of the packers appear to have taken all of the business that they desire to carry for the present. Peas are firm and are offered in a sparing way. This is true also of string beans.

There has been urgent buying of rice for export and this has cut into the spot

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

A Grocery Man Should Know—that in filling an ordinary size bag he should hold the bottom of the bag in the open left hand. That in taking an order he should never lean on the counter. That instead of saying, "Anything else?" it should be, "What next, please?" That in weighing a piece of meat he shouldn't say, "Five pounds and seven ounces," but, "Not quite five and a half pounds." That the bill should be figured up and the amount given instead of asking, "Shall I send it C. O. D.?" That in answering a phone call he should mention the name of the firm instead of saying, "Hello." That packages should be wrapped together when they're to be carried home, before the customer makes the request. That children should be waited upon in regular form. And that a scoop should never be left in a bin or drawer.

The Truth Habit.—After all it pays to tell things straight. Sometimes it grates on a fellow. Sometimes it seems as though it were going to land him in trouble. But when you're faced with a direct question give it direct, and give it truthfully. The man that's trusted is the man that isn't afraid. Out with it. There's no sense in lying. Anybody that has had anything to do with human nature and human affairs knows that it isn't even good business. A lie always rebounds. That's the nature of the thing. When it comes back it hits hard. The thing to do is to stick to God's truth, and then you're not afraid of any man. Get the "truth habit."

Can Do Anything.—That isn't a good recommendation. The fellow that can "do anything" isn't the man that a modern business needs. It needs men that know one thing and know it well. Learn all there is to be learned in your capacity. Know the ins and outs of things. Never mind about the boiler or the plumbing or the electric arrangement. What you want to do is to fit yourself for a first-class groceryman and be able to take a position worthy the name.

Study how the manager handles help and figure out why he is able to keep them so enthusiastic. Ask yourself why it is that your store is busy and some others are begging for business. These are the things to keep in touch with. Let the mechanics take care of their end. Some day you may call these men up to your desk and ask them about certain things that play a small part in the successful running of a business. But—don't aspire to be able to "do anything."

"Don't Feel Like It."—Why don't you? If you don't feel like it you have no business there. Quit the job as soon as you can, sir, or you'll be sorry. If you're not heart and soul with the boss you can't earn your pay. Many a boss would like a man to tell him this. Because it might set both right. Gentlemen, as an employer of men, I am positively in favor of candor on both sides, and I believe that lots of misunderstandings would be mutually and profitably adjusted were employees more perfectly candid in their grievances. What I mean is this: A man gets an offer of $1, $2 or $3 a week more to go with another concern. He accepts for two reasons, because of more money and because of a "grievance." Now, in many cases the "grievances" can be adjusted by a simple heart-to-heart talk.

Cut Out Personal Talk.—Never be guilty of letting a customer hear you discuss a fight or game, a show, or anything personal or foreign to the business when you're back of the counter. It's the worst of taste. Some of you may be guilty. Occasionally we give offense without knowing it. This "Straight Talks" is for you. Whenever it pinches size yourself up. The object in writing these articles is to make better grocery clerks. Just as surely as you're reading this you'll become better clerks, better business men, better men altogether by following up and carrying out the suggestions printed on this page week after week.

seem to think that the check to European shipments will tend toward an easy market. Cherries are firm. Pears are steady. Peaches and apricots are easy in tone. Holders of small Southern fruits are firm in their views.

The market for spot supplies of seedless raisins has been advancing. The Associated Co. is expected to announce the opening prices on the new crop within a day or two. Outside interests have been accepting orders for October shipment on the basis of 6¾ cents for fancy and 6⅜ for choice in one-pound cartons. Dried prunes, peaches and apricots, spot and future, are easy in tone, with little demand at present. Spot currants are strong and tending higher.

Flour went up early in the week and is now a little easier. Buyers who were eager to place orders at high prices several days ago have since reduced their bids. Some of the mills are willing to accept bids as low as $5.65 for spring wheat patents in jute, while other mills will not accept less than $6. Not much business is now being put through, as most of the buyers are not willing to pay more than $5.50. Kansas flour is still held firmly and $4.50 is the low price of the mills on straights in sacks, although there may be some resales at lower prices.

Eggs are arriving in liberal quantities, but the proportion of high-grades is small, and on these prices tend upward. The lower grades are freely offered at the old prices. Storage eggs are firmly held. Nearby white eggs sell promptly, with fancy grades firmer. Defective eggs are irregular in prices. The quotations on fresh-gathered Western extras are from 27 to 29 cents; extra firsts, 25 to 26½ cents; firsts, 23½ to 24½ cents; seconds, 21 to 23 cents. The best grades of refrigerator eggs range from 25½ to 27 cents, with charges paid. Nearby eggs have a range up to 34 cents for large white fancy grades.

High-grade creamery butter is tending upward. The best creamery extras are selling from 30 to 30½ cents, but those who pay over 30 cents insist on high scoring goods. Some good butter scoring as extras is to be had at 29½ cents. There is more active trading in medium and lower grades. Offerings from 26½ to 28 cents sell readily. The best grades of process butter are firm, ranging from 2½ to 25 cents.

FRED. A. MCGILL.

Peaches are badly glutted. Californias have gotten down to 40 cents, though the freight is 32 cents. Nearby are 15 cents per basket up, mainly because the fruit is poor. Fine North Carolina peaches are worth $2.50 per crate, which is nearly twice the price the ordinary fruit is bringing.

The Eureka Barrel Swing.

A very useful article that enables you to keep your goods in barrels and yet not have the barrels in your way. You attach the swing to the barrel and swing it under the counter when not in use. J. H. Gehr, of Waynesboro, Pa., the manufacturer, claims it to be better than bins under the counter or broad shelving. It is simple, efficient and sanitary.—Advt.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is about where it was a week ago. All new teas are steadily maintained at an advance, which in the aggregate probably amounts to an average on the whole line of 3 cents per pound. There are several months' supply of tea in the country, and no occasion whatever for any further advance. The consumptive demand for tea is fair.

Coffee.

Coffee shows no change from a week ago, with the exception of Mocha. All grades of Rio and Santos are steady to firm at the advance noted last week. Mild coffees are also unchanged, as is Java. Mocha, however, has advanced to 28 cents in a large way, green. This is largely due to scarcity, but the war is probably responsible for about 2 cents of it.

Sugar.

Raw sugar is steadily advancing, and refined with it. All told, both raws and refined are probably 3 cents higher since the war opened. Large demand from abroad for sugar that would otherwise have gone to this country is given as the reason for the advance in raws, and the advance in refined is of course due to the advance in raws. As the week closes granulated sugar is quoted at 7½ cents, with further advances certain. The consumptive demand is active.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose has advanced 10 points, and both tinned and bulk compound syrup have moved up accordingly. The demand is light. Molasses is unchanged and dull.

Fish.

Mackerel has shared the excitement and both shore and Irish fish are several dollars per barrel higher, due to prospective rather than present scarcity. Norways are scarce on spot, and are worth several dollars more than a short time ago. Cod, hake and haddock are steady to firm and unchanged in price. Salmon of all grades are practically unchanged; pinks are a trifle higher, perhaps. Imported sardines are very scarce and will probably become scarcer. Prices on the French are $5 per case higher. Domestic sardines firm, by reason of scarcity. Fishing is still poor.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are about unchanged for the week, both spot and future, but the tendency is weaker. Peaches are easy, but about unchanged; demand light. Apricots are probably 3 cents cheaper on account of the bad situation abroad. Currants have advanced 2 cents more during the week, which means about 4 cents from the beginning. Raisins are unchanged from a week ago.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged, but it begins to look like a short season and a short pack, and some holders are beginning to feel that futures at present quotations are a good buy. There is no demand to speak of, however. Corn is firm, and some packers have withdrawn prices. There is no reason that anybody knows. Peas are unchanged and quiet. Apples on spot, meaning New York State gallons, are nearly cleaned up. The market is no weaker as yet, in spite of the depressed prospects. California canned goods are unchanged and quiet. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The butter market is firm at 1 cent per pound advance over the early part of the week. The advance is due to a good consumptive demand. The stocks are reported to be lighter than usual for the season, and the make is also light. Not much change in price is expected during the week.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm at an advance of about 1 cent per dozen from a week ago. There is an active consumptive demand for eggs, and the market is in a good healthy condition at the advance. No change in price is looked for in the immediate future.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm at an advance of about ½ cent per pound on all grades, due to the good consumption, as well as to the reported short supply. No further change is expected in the immediate future.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line is firm at an advance of about ¼ cent per pound. Both pure and compound lard are firm at unchanged prices, with good consumption. Canned meats and barreled pork have advanced about 10 per cent., due, in the case of corn, roast and boiled beef, to the war. Supplies are very low, all Australian beef being now cut off. Dried beef is firm at unchanged prices. Lunch tongues are also up 10 per cent.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans, without any sufficient reason whatever, have advanced all told about $1.25 per bushel, which is very nearly 50 per cent. The last quotation in a large way was $3.40. Marrows are up around $4.25, against $3 when the thing started. The ostensible reason for pushing prices up is lack of foreign beans, but the main reason is lack of foreign competition; in other words, pure greed on holders' part. California limas are now quoted at 9 cents in a large way; futures are unavailable. Green peas are up to $2.10 in a large way; they started at $1.25. Scotch have advanced about the same amount.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Sugar.

The market for refined sugar has ruled very strong and active again the whole of the week. At the opening of the market Thursday morning Franklin and American advanced all grades to basis fine granulated 6.75 cents, regular terms. At noon McCahan, Pennsylvania, Arbuckle, Warner and Federal advanced to basis fine granulated 7.50 cents. Howell, 7 cents. Numerous orders were declined by all refiners.

Franklin and American still quote 6.75 cents, but are restricting business to regular buyers who have no sugars due on contract.

The market closes very strong in sympathy with the strong and higher raw market.

Still higher prices can be looked for.

The withdrawal demand is very large and all refiners are considerably behind on shipments.

All shipments will be congested and delayed for some time to come. At the present time it is absolutely impossible to obtain any information relative to shipments. Refiners really do not know just where they stand, owing to the unusual heavy withdrawal demand. All shipments will be made in turn, as ordered.

Raw Sugars.—The market has ruled strong and active, with refiners and speculators both buying at full and advancing prices.

Thursday buyers again entered the market. Sales were reported about 200,000 bags at 6.52 cents, duty paid, principally to the American. This practically cleared the market of all offerings. Later, however, sale was reported to speculator 10,000 bags for September shipment from Cuba equal 6.77 cents. The market closes strong, with holders again asking higher prices.

London Cable (Beet Sugars).—No quotations, Exchange closed.

Note.—Owing to the scarcity of burlap, refiners state that they will hereafter figure only three and one-half bags to the barrel instead of four bags as formerly. They also announce that assortment must not contain over 25 per cent. in bags. This applies on both old and new purchases.

Salmon.

Futures.—Since our last letter the situation has changed completely and all previous quotations on all grades are practically withdrawn. About the only way business is possible until the situation simmers down is to take orders for futures "subject to buyer's approval or seller's own price when named."

Standard Canned Goods.

And still the long drought is unbroken. The temperature, however, has been moderate all week, and there is nothing in the situation to date to cause alarm about a short crop of tomatoes in this section. The crop is not yet made, and a number of things can happen before it is harvested to reduce the output of the canned article, but none of them are in sight at this time, and to worry about them in advance is like borrowing trouble. The talk about the war abroad causing a boom in the market for canned goods packed in this country is rather far-fetched. No government on the face of the earth, excepting our own United States, includes canned foods in the daily rations served to the army in the field, and any extra demand for such supplies from that source need not be expected. The demand for to-matatoes and other goods is increasing rapidly enough, chiefly because of the splendid advertising campaign of the National Canners' Association, to consume even the largest output that has been made, and the outlook for business in the season now at hand is considered to be excellent.

During the week the market was again strong and active for tomatoes for prompt shipment, and the chief feature of interest was the large buying by tomato canners and jobbers in the West. The orders for them were well-scattered and came from all sections in lots of one to three carloads, and included all sizes. August is usually, if not always, one of the heaviest buying months of the year, and this month is expected to maintain the record.

String beans and wax beans are strong and fairly active, with an upward tendency as to prices. The stocks of them in this market are smaller than usual for this time in the season, and they are worth buying. Sweet potatoes are also in a strong position, both spot and futures. Corn was fairly active this week. The buying of the other lines of canned vegetables was light this week, and there are no special changes to mention.

The Baltimore canners are now obtaining excellent quality of fresh peaches which they are putting into unpeeled peaches and seconds table peaches, for which the demand is increasing. The quality of the Maryland peaches this year is better than for many seasons and will give satisfaction. Apples are being canned in a small way, the big crop does not arrive until fall. Pine apples are a shade firmer, though not higher as to prices. Berries and cherries were dull this week, and so were pears. Unfavorable reports about the coming pear crop continue.

The prices of cove oysters are firmly held, with a small demand for them.

Imported Fish Specialties.

As a matter of fact, we have little to report in regard to our market except steadily advancing prices. When war was declared and we foresaw that we would have difficulty in obtaining goods from foreign countries now engaged in war, we immediately telegraphed to all our representatives, putting at their disposal our present stocks at the old prices. As soon as we found out that the situation became more serious, and as soon as we found that it would not be safe to let the shipments now afloat for us go forward without being covered against war risk, and as soon as we found that we were obliged to cover this war risk at very heavy expense, in some cases as high as 10 to 25 per cent., we, of course, began advancing our prices in proportion to the war risk rate that we had to pay. We then found out that the rate of exchange had gone sky high, and we found out that we were obliged to pay a rate of exchange from 10 to 20 and 30 per cent. higher than just about a week ago. Then again we were obliged to advance our prices; naturally so, otherwise we would have been selling the goods at a loss.

It is almost useless to mention any point out single articles in our line, because every one of them shows a heavy advance. Less attention has been paid to herrings and mackerel than to other goods, of course, because this is not the time when they are having sales made of these goods, the weather being too m; but for sardines, for instance, e all taken a very strong upward a. Of French sardines there was y little, and the little that was here held at enormously high prices. But tuguese sardines and we may men- that the export of food products been stopped from Portugal, have n in excellent demand, at steadily ad- ing prices, and still the prices for tuguese sardines to-day are still very sonable.

prats.—Of course we will have to re on just what we have here, be- se nothing more can be forwarded the way of sprats from France, be- se France is at war, and besides the h of sprats here has been a total urc. Belgium, where we get the est supply of sprats, is at war, and not allow any foodstuffs to be ex- ted, so there you are.

"This Is the Cocoa to Sell"

Tell your clerks the importance of pushing the sale of STOLLWERCK'S GOLD BRAND COCOA and see that they recommend it to your customers whenever possible. You have sufficient influence with your customers to sell nine out of ten of them any brand you choose, and when you make use of their confidence in your judgment to sell them STOLLWERCK'S GOLD BRAND COCOA you are going to please them better and increase your cocoa business faster than you can by pushing any other brand.

STOLLWERCK'S GOLD BRAND COCOA is the highest grade Dutch process cocoa on the market, and because of its international reputation for superiority will add to your standing as a high-class grocer. It has been awarded 26 Court Diplomas and 65 Medals of Supremacy in the Courts of Europe. Because it has won wherever introduced, it's the cocoa for you to win new and increased trade.

put, to recover and retain the enormous volume of coffee business that has gradually drifted away from him, the logical distributor, to other channels.

Enthuse your men with the determination to make this affair, unlike some previous demonstrations in favor of other commodities, a huge success and productive of results even far surpassing any that may be now anticipated. Insist upon it that they impress their customers with the importance, and the necessity, of "talking" coffee and of permitting none of their customers who may call at their stores during Coffee Week to go away without making a purchase of coffee, if possible. Have salesmen remind their customers also that this campaign includes a plan of education for the consumer, respecting the healthful and beneficial qualities of coffee, as against the condemnatory statements which have so frequently been made regarding it and which have, undoubtedly, instilled into the minds of some the belief that coffee is injurious and "does not agree with them;" and to inform them that attractive booklets containing facts regarding the properties of coffee and the results of its use, also suggestions as to the most satisfactory methods of grinding, brewing, etc., will be supplied them for distribution among consumers, which should go a long way toward correcting these erroneous impressions.

Additional copies of the circular descriptive of the advertising material and containing facsimiles (in colors) of the latter, which your salesmen may exhibit to their customers in their efforts toward arranging for displays, may be procured on application to this office. The idea is that salesmen should obtain the promises of customers to use their windows for such displays during Coffee Week and to supplement the advertising with displays of the actual coffee on sale at the time.

Instruct your salesmen to begin on this at once and to continue hammering at it until Coffee Week is at hand. We firmly believe that if the salesmen of each and every concern interested in this movement will exert a conscientious, energetic and continuous effort, the desired result will certainly be assured.

The Grocer Should Fight Rats as Well as Flies.

In a paper read before the National Association of Dairy, Food and Drug Officials at Portland, Me., a few days ago, W. G. Sherer, of Chicago, advanced the following suggestion:

There is another campaign which might well be started this fall:—

No grocer knows how much loss he suffers through rats and mice. In spite of all efforts they get into his goods and live off of them.

I say to you men who know the disease-bearing traits of the rat and its power to damage and destroy food, that the most popular campaign you could inaugurate for October, 1914, would be a "Bat the Rat" campaign that would rid the stores, warehouses and granaries of millions of rodents that otherwise must be fed all winter. Such a campaign would command strong newspaper support; the property saving would be enormous, and your story of the habits of the rat, accompanied by your several prescriptions for ridding the premises of his tribe, would have appreciative attention from your large clientele of grocers.

I have from "Oscar's Market," Cambridge, Mass., a red circular, 6 x 10 inches, which I reproduce below. It is printed on dark red paper of a peculiar soft sponge-like texture—sort of like blotting paper. Not the sort of paper, I should say, to make the best printed matter, because it absorbs the ink and makes it hard to give good, clean, black press work. Here is the circular reproduced, somewhat reduced:—

"Genuine Bargains," for a bargain means money-saving. It wasn't necessary, either, to put the address at the top. "Genuine Bargains," or "Guaranteed Bargains at Oscar's Market," was all the headline needed. The introduction beginning, "We shall take pleasure," should have been gone over and polished up. It is confused and involved. The sentence beginning, "Our long experience," etc., is not clear; it is that which omits what is really the most important part of the story—the regular price. Depending on people to remember the regular price is risky business. Some will, but a great many won't. Always tell them and rub it in for only by comparison with the regular price does the present selling price become a bargain.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

Evidently this circular was used some time ago, as it speaks of "Easter" necessities. Probably the prices will therefore not be to-day's prices.

I suppose nobody will have any trouble knowing what this headline means—"Absolutely Genuine Offers and Money Savers," but it could have been a little more tersely expressed. "Genuine Money-Saving Bargains," or even could have been expressed something like this: "Our long experience in this line of business helps us to judge goods better and buy them closer. This puts us in a position to compete with any of the big stores." But the large stores, when advertising bargains, never fail to give the regular prices as well as the bargain prices. You can't compete with them unless you do the same. The most ineffective kind of bargain advertising

After September 1 Next New York Coffee Exchange Will Gamble in Sugar as Well as in Coffee.

The New York Coffee Exchange is about to introduce a plan by which raw sugar will be speculated in as well as coffee. There is no legitimate reason for the idea, as it is merely adding another gambling to which the Exchange is already almost solely devoted. Sugar speculation begins September 1. The present by-laws and rules governing transactions in coffee which do not conflict with the rules for trading in sugar shall apply to sugar in the same manner as to coffee. Under the new rules there will be one call for the purchase and sale of raw sugar daily at 11 o'clock, except on Saturdays, when the call will be at 10.30 A. M. Exchange hours for trading in sugar will be from 11 A. M. until 2.45 P. M., except on Saturdays, when the hours shall be from 10.30 to 11.45 A. M. All offers to buy or sell sugar for future delivery, unless otherwise specified, shall be understood to be for 50 tons, and offers to buy or sell in larger quantities shall be in multiples thereof. It is likewise provided that all trading in sugar for future delivery shall be in cents and decimal fractions of a cent, and no transaction shall be permitted wherein the difference in price shall consist of a smaller fraction than 1-100th of a cent per pound represented by such contract nor shall any additional money consideration whatever be allowed. After providing that all contracts made in sugar shall be promptly reported to the superintendent of the Exchange, the rules stipulate that either party to a contract shall have the right to call an original margin of from $125 to $250 for each contract.

The Subscribers Bargain List

Have You Got Any Goods You Don't Want?

Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Boots—Shoes—Findings

Southern Shoe Manufacturers Optimistic.

When John W. Craddock, president of the Craddock-Terry Co., the largest manufacturers of shoes in the South, with plants at Lynchburg, Va., and St. Louis, was in the latter city recently he said of general business conditions:—

I am optimistic over the future of business conditions in the United States. The big European war may have the effect of making this country the recognized world leader in finance, enjoying such prestige London has held heretofore.

With the precautionary measures that are being taken by the administration at Washington and leading bankers, there is no reason to anticipate a serious or prolonged monetary disturbance in this country.

If ample provision can be made against too much delay in the movement of our great grain and cotton crops to meet the European demand, I believe this country will enjoy constantly increasing trade both at home and abroad. The crop and business conditions east of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio River probably are better than in any section of the country. As soon as shipping can be furnished for our exports prices will rise again.

Neat Spring and Summer Footwear. Sample Lines Now Ready.

Manufacturers are now preparing their sample lines for next spring and summer, and they are now about ready to show the trade, although the road salesmen will not go out before September 1st, or perhaps later, on account of current business conditions. The models of Eastern origin will be mainly a development of this season's prominent sellers. The lasts will be neat and modest, according to the statement of recognized designers, as has been developed this year, when no handsomer women's footwear was ever brought out. Extreme and so-called freak patterns will be avoided, excepting for localities where such creations are in demand.

What are known as staple shoes—outside of the standards—are about relegated to the past. The public is divided into two classes respecting footwear—shoes for dress purposes and for special uses. Style value has been a growing factor in shoe merchandising for several years. This is true of both men's and women's lines. More novelties will be seen in women's shoes during the coming year than ever before. Style influence is more usually met with in the large cities, but it is spreading rapidly even to the smallest towns. This department has always upheld this contention, and the merchant who simply stocks up on "any old thing" makes the mistake of his life. A live wire knows better.

A Western manufacturer frankly says: "New York sets the pace—it is always a little ahead, and the New York styles of to-day have a decided influence on the accepted styles of the country at large to-morrow, with one exception in recent years, and that is the craze in my part of the country for high toes and short vamps." The East preferred long vamps and recede toes, and this style for careful dressers now prevails everywhere, with the high toes popular, to be sure, but they are too conspicuous for all occasions.

As previously stated, color combinations and fancy patterns will prevail in women's boots, with brocaded cloth, suede and colored kid for quarterings, for the fall, winter and early spring. The button type of boots will be the recognized style. Patent or shiny leather will continue to be the leader in vamps, but dull calf and kid will also be employed to a great extent. The long vamp and recede toe will continue in favor, but two new lasts will be featured, namely, a short vamp with a slightly receding toe, and a new round-toe effect, which is a modification of the stage last. The square-toe French last was given a cold reception by dealers everywhere. The verdict being "they are good enough for old ladies, but not the stunningly dressed, smart young women with feet of a goddess," or words to that effect.

Colonial lines will be favored by New York (where is Chicago when trim shoes are under discussion?) for another season. Small dainty effects in ornamentation will be utilized, but buckles and other large decorations are passé in the metropolis. Sandal and other strap patterns, mostly button fastened, will have a prominent place in the spring lines. Heels will be high on all stylish models, the most attractive type being the Cuban-Louis or slight modifications.

In men's shoes the new styles have a tendency to novelties in patterns and color effects, but this kind the general merchant had best "pass up," as the sale will be negligible. A sample stock is sufficient for all purposes. Patent, dull calf and dark or mahogany tans will be the leaders which will be generously shown in low shoes. Bal lace patterns will be the model, but button shoes will also be shown. Panel effects and perforations will be popular for the extreme young men, especially in the new low cuts. Here again the general merchant may use his blue pencil to advantage. The new rubber, fiber, felt and white sole shoes will be shown. They were originally introduced for athletic wear or for dancing, but they have come to be used for general wear on account of their supreme comfort. They come for both men and women.

Material Lessening, Prices Advancing.

Shoe manufacturers specializing on women's fine shoes are on the anxious seat regarding their leathers, findings and incidental materials, the greater part of which has been purchased abroad. The American market can undoubtedly fill the bill, but these goods have been ordered from Europe so long that custom has become a habit. At any rate, prices on these goods have had a sharp increase. It is said that unless foreign hostilities cease before long some of these manufacturers may be obliged to close down their plants.

Other shoe men entertain an entirely different view, one saying: "We should take an optimistic view of the effect of the war on the shoe industry of the United States. There will be a tremendous demand for American shoes from foreign countries as soon as we can safely ship them." A conditional order for several hundred thousand pairs of shoes for the French army was cabled a Brockton, Mass., manufacturer providing they could be ready for shipment in twenty days' notice. The order is still "in the air" for lack of capacity. These reports being considered from a domestic point of view, an advance in price may eventuate. Probably on the spring lines, though it will be resisted by the retail trade.

Dry Goods Notions Knit Wear

Wide Ribbons and Dark Shades in Vogue.

Ribbon buying is on a more generous scale than for some time, although the full fall orders for both jobbers and merchants will not be booked just yet. Estimates of widths are an important feature of the ribbon business now going on for the next season. Narrow widths, such as five and seven lignes, are being called for, and from that width the demand jumps up to 70, 80, 96 and 108 lignes. Ribbons of 108 lignes—about nine inches—indicate a sash vogue. In these widths there is a call for black satins, some moired and taffeta effects, as well as plain failles. Black moires will be strong next season. New effects in fancy moires, such as arabesque patterns, some of them in glace, are being shown for the new season. A new weave from abroad is appearing here, resembling rep; that is, with the cord running lengthwise. In regard to colors, the impression is established that the dark shades, such as crow blue, beetroot, dark greens and browns will be the fall leaders.

Cotton and Mohair Cloth in Great Demand.

It has already been noted in this department that the sale of men's lightweight fabrics for next spring's delivery has opened up an entirely new line of business. General merchants may not be so directly concerned, excepting those who handle ready-to-wear clothing. Possibly also the demand for these new fabrics will be reproduced in dress goods, as they usually are. All indications point to a change in men's attire that will make for greater comfort during the heated period. In other words the men's wear trade is witnessing the most radical change in fabric styles that has taken place in years. These lines are made of cotton and mohair and cotton and worsted, the original cloth being sold under the name of "Palm Beach," and they are carrying everything before them for next spring in the primary markets.

Retailers who had hitherto boasted they handled only all-wool goods either have or will put in lines of cloth made of these cloths to meet the popular demand. They are so low in price that it is possible to make a suit retail at from $8 to $12, according to quality. The public demand this season for this merchandise has already grown astonishingly. Millions of yards of "Palm Beach" cloth have already been sold and made up, and instead of lessening, the sale is increasing. It is estimated that orders have been booked for cotton and mohair suitings for the spring of 1915 that would total 10,000,000 yards. As it takes three yards of 36-inch goods to make a coat and a pair of trousers, over 3,000,000 suits will be offered of this material next spring summer.

No Especial Uneasiness in Dry Goods Circles.

Reports from the primary markets are more or less reassuring. There seems to be no special uneasiness in evidence as might be caused by the European scrimmage; and alarmists, when they have a chance to "blow off steam" are "laughed out of court" for what are termed baseless and ridiculous fears and absurd speculative views. One authority says:—

Until there is some change from a deficit in the central banks, a reduction of the high rates asked for commercial accommodations and exchange, and a reasonable surety that money can be had for commercial purposes by those who are in fact in credit, most merchants regard the talk of the great uplift in trade as mere nonsense. The opportunities for business may be as bountiful as the dreams of enthusiasts make them, but if the machinery for doing business both at home and abroad continues out of working order it is useless to hope for much trade above the level of barter. Those who have cash can buy and those who need cash will sell. Those who hope to prosper in normal ways by using the machinery of credit and business are going to be kept waiting.

In consulting with merchants generally the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" found this was accepted as the proper view by people in possession of sane minds and solid judgment. So far as the retail buyers of dress materials, cloths, silks, fabrics of all kinds were concerned, they did not believe there was any possibility of scarcity of either foreign or domestic merchandise. At the Clafin sale in New York last Monday retailers who were aware that many dry goods not come from abroad bought quite freely in these lines. In dress goods, domestics, prints and gingham, linens, knit goods, there was no special remark. Generally speaking, the dress goods markets are firmer and higher prices are confidently expected. The minor merchants are expressing no anxiety.

Fall Silks and Dress Lengths.

With the stocks on hand of foreign silks—some little coming in yet—and the makes of domestic manufacturers increasing, fashion's latest word about fall silks are about as follows: Satins will be a very strong feature for the new season, capes and tunic dresses. Velvets will be much used for millinery and trimmings. Taffetas will be fashionable for dancing frocks and afternoon gowns. Crepes meteor and crepes de chene are as great favorites as ever. Also there are many weaves of black silks and satins and white silks to be used separately or in combination. Besides the foregoing, other popular silks in dress lengths for the coming season will include crinkled, canton and novelty crepes, brocades, moires, louisines, fourrures, fleur de soie, messalines, novelty and printed silks.

Mention of dress lengths is a reminder of the opposition which jobbers are expressing against their continuance in the trade. Ordering of dress materials in this form by merchants has led to abuses, of which jobbers have borne the brunt, and the question is now being considered how best to curtail their orders and still meet the wants of the retailer.

Western Traders Alive to the Situation.

It is conceded the daily newspapers are having the time of their existence over the European war with their fake tales and antique pictures of hostile armies. What is published one day is denied the next, with the result no absolute reliance is placed by business men on whatever they may print. This seems to be the feeling in the Middle West, according to advices from merchants, who are apparently not disturbed by any great measure by the "war or rumors of war" among the potentates of the effete monarchies across the water. This condition is, to some extent, reflected by Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of the goods trade, who say: "General orders for merchandise are running ahead of the corresponding period a year ago. Retailers are making preparations for their fall openings and buyers have been in the market in good numbers from all sections of the country. The fact that the governments of Europe have taken control of all transportation lines which has put a stop to inland and ocean freights, will have the effect of soon exhausting the supply of all imported merchandise.

Were it possible to move ocean freights, the high cost of war insurance and exchange would prohibit further imports. Supplies of such items as table linens, kid and fabric gloves, hosiery and fine silks, fine embroidered handkerchiefs and Carmen hair nets will soon be depleted and it is feared that export orders for later delivery may be impossible as a result of the European conflict. Merchandise of domestic manufacture will be in ample supply at least until such time as the stocks on hand of certain grades of wool and dyestuffs are consumed."

John V. Farwell Co. advise as follows: "During the past week the business map of the world has changed. The United States has become the center of the world's commercial activities, and a quick inventory of this country's resources and shipping limitations has been demanded. Merchants, keen to the situation, are protecting their own and customers' interests by covering their needs on lines of which the European supply has been so suddenly and unexpectedly cut off. Nearly every line in the wholesale dry goods field is more or less affected. Russia furnishes a large part of the flax produce. Ninety per cent. of the dyestuffs are made in Germany. France, Germany, Belgium and Austria are the countries of the kid glove industry. Germany is strong on textiles. Stiff advances in price on all imported commodities are inevitable."

Fall Styles and Fabrics. Increased Dress Yardage Popular.

The fall demand for fabrics, which had been confined to a few lines, has broadened very perceptibly of late. In addition to broadcloths, gabardines, poplins, serges and velours stand out more prominently. The belief is that anything and everything will sell. It is also plainer every day that now is the time for the general merchant to place orders. The styles of skirts and cloaks has at last been decided upon. The latter are to be long, with sleeves to the finger tips. The former are to be fuller and will require from 20 to 25 per cent. more goods than last fall. The increased yardage, foreshadowed for several months, is welcome news to everybody in the selling line, including the retailer. Most of the dress goods houses are going to benefit materially, both on account of the lack of foreign competition and the increased use of dress fabrics.

Advances are being made by a number of domestic mills, and, of course, the wholesalers will promulgate a corresponding increase. General merchants are probably aware of this fact, or should be. The increased cost of production is set down as the moving cause; and that, with the promised scarcity of foreign goods, are sufficient causes. Popular priced French serges have been marked up 5 cents a yard, to be shortly followed by an additional 2½ cents. One large dress goods concern has advanced all of its products for fall on new business. Other houses, not satisfied with the prospects for next spring, will not announce their prices either to retailers, cutters or jobbers before September 1st.

Notions Market in a Ferment.

Elsewhere in this department the unfounded report concerning the problematical scarcity and alleged cornering of the New York market on hooks and eyes and other notions is commented upon by a couple of prominent domestic manufacturers. They pronounce such an event as impossible. However, as notions are in a ferment on account of the across-the-water hostilities, the remarks of the "Journal of Commerce" are not amiss, and probably furnish a broader view of prevailing or pending conditions, as follows:—

It is evident the retail trade has been awakened to the dangers that lie in short supplies of many staple dry goods notions that are largely made abroad. There are some things that cannot be had from primary sources of supply for many months because of the disorganization war has already caused in Europe. There are other things that can be supplied from domestic sources.

D. M. C. crochet cotton is made in Muelhausen and is none too plentiful on the markets at any time. Just now the scarcity is acute and prices buyers are willing to pay have little or no relation to a declining cotton market or to anything save the actual condition of supply and demand.

Hooks and eyes, dress fasteners, snaps and the cube jet head pins so common in the retail stores are made abroad very largely and some of them are already so scarce that advances of 100 per cent. have been paid for regular assortments. Fine leather goods of all kinds are imported largely from different countries and there is little likelihood of the choice shopping bags, cigar cases, traveling bags, etc., coming along in a normal way for a long time.

Parisian ivory, or a product of celluloid, used largely in toilet articles, such as brushes, mirrors and boxes of many kinds, is not likely to be plentiful, as a great part of it is made abroad. Fancy linens in many forms come from France, Belgium and Austria, while the Plauen factories making ladies' neckwear are famous the world over and are not now in operation. Buttons of all kinds, glass, metal, bone and fancy materials, are made very largely in European countries, and the supply of these goods will be cut off short. In fact, there are some styles of buttons not to be had now and the demand has lifted prices to a ridiculous level.

Dress trimmings of many varieties are made in France and Germany. Passanterie, fancy braids, etc., not to speak of the fancy laces used almost exclusively for dress trimmings, are shut out. The demand for many things has become acute and there is no telling to what lengths it will go in the next few weeks.

Shrewd buyers have been scouring the markets for notions of every kind. As a consequence, such things as dress fasteners, clasps, hooks and eyes, braids and tapes are being advanced to new customers. Old trade who are not buying after the cautionary notices were given are being left to their own devices in obtaining this essential merchandise.

Fabric Colorings to be Supplied at Home.

Much is heard of the threatened scarcity of dyestuffs. It is true American cloth manufacturers have been obtaining the major part of their supplies from abroad because of the cheapness of the products, and neglecting to support domestic industries in the same line. The result is always the same in such emergencies. Now they are realizing their folly. Merchants who buy the finished goods need feel no great uneasiness respecting the tales spread around to affect prices. At a meeting of the National Finishers' Association in New York Tuesday last, the dyestuff situation was considered. There is enough stock on hand to last several months, possibly longer, which means the completion of the fall and winter orders.

At the same time every possible encouragement is to be given to the re-establishment of dye manufacturing plants in this country. Several color companies here can readily change over their plants to supply satisfactory goods if there is inducement enough given them to make the investment required. This is pledged to the extent that when the foreign color companies are ready for American business again and are "hungry for orders" and are willing to quote any old price to capture the market once more, they will be handed the ice pitcher. Some of the trade-marked colors will soon be placed in a tight fix for lack of basic material.

Decided Change in Cloakings. Broadcloths Scarce and High.

A decided change has taken place in cloakings for fall. The styles announced in the spring as proper for the fall, running to fancy things, and which were so popular at the beginning, have suffered a blight. Staples are now en vogue, with zibelines and boucles prime favorites, and a continuance of the demand is counted upon. On this account many cancellations have been made on fancy coatings, and the wholesalers and manufacturers are therefore not in the best of humor. They come from the cutting up trade and not from the merchants, or there would be another story to tell.

When the styles referred to would not sell, a complete change of front was necessary, and this accounts for the rapid changes from which merchants are victims of the "sooner" crowd. Broadcloth suits and the long coats that will be worn are expected to militate against heavy outer coats and coatings generally. Zibelines and boucles are being advanced steadily. Broadcloths are scarce. One authority states that "never in the history of the trade has anything like to-day's broadcloth situation been known." The leading producers are reported sold up, and foreign goods are far from plentiful. Premiums are being offered for good domestic broadcloths for immediate delivery. Buyers have offered advances of 15 to 20 cents a yard to anticipate deliveries, but the propositions have been rejected, as all orders will be filled as originally booked. A German broadcloth has been advanced 20 per cent. on a comparatively small stock, not to be replenished until later.

Cornering Hooks and Eyes.—Domestic Makers Skeptical.

Some wild reports are being sent from various centers respecting the probabilities of obtaining stocks of minor notions—such as hooks and eyes, hair pins, etc. One of them coming from New York reads as follows, and appears in a well-known Wall street publication: "The 5 and 10-cent stores report a rise in the price of notions, manufactured in enormous quantities in Germany. Hair nets have gone up 100 per cent. in price for the available stock in this country, while the entire supply of hooks and eyes has been bought up." Other items, including hats, etc., were included. But the most remarkable statement was about hooks and eyes, "the bulk of which or of the raw materials for their manufacture, come from Europe, have advanced in price."

When these "advices" were brought to the attention of the De Long Hook and Eye Co., they said: "There need be no worry on the part of any merchant about the supply of either hooks or eyes, hair pins or dress fasteners. There is no possibility of a short supply. The raw material is of domestic origin, and the report that it comes from Europe or that the finished goods were from the same source, and that they had been cornered, is absurd. There will be no advance in price, and even when brass, from which these notions are made, was three times its present price, the price was not increased. On the hooks and eyes question the merchant need have no uneasiness whatever."

The Yeiser Hook and Eye Co. also said there was no possibility of a corner being created, either from lack of raw material or otherwise, on these goods. The market was in a normal condition and would so remain.

Outlook for Fall Hosiery Stock.

The merchant in the small towns will have no trouble stocking his hosiery for the fall. Probably he will be obliged to cut off whatever foreign goods the orders for which have already been placed, as the deliveries will not be made. Hence American made goods, which the great majority sell anyhow, must be depended upon. One of the best known men handling hosiery in the primary markets said last week:—

What has been the effect of the war on the hosiery trade? For a few days after Germany had declared war there was an anxious feeling and a few requests to suspend action on spring orders, but this is giving way to a feeling quite the opposite. We will shortly see a merchandise "bear panic," the fear of an unprecedented shortage, which will greatly offset other influences. Germany is the great hosiery market for all the world, and there is no other source of supply except England, France, Japan and the United States. The production of the first three is barely sufficient for their home consumption.

The fact that importations to the United States will be suspended is the smallest factor, for the United States has been fairly independent of the foreign hosiery manufacturer, but within a few days there has already sprung up an active demand from new sources for export.

Well, then the war will be a blessing for the American hosiery manufacturer? I fear not. We can knit our hosiery, but what if we cannot dye it? Our dyestuffs come from Germany, the visible supply is almost exhausted and there is no other source. I need not tell you that a large proportion of the output is in fibre silk and silk, and these are made up largely from imported material, and such a supply will be cut off in large part.

My firm does not sell the retail trade, but one of the largest importers of hosiery informs me that his customers are telegraphing for immediate delivery of foreign goods that are not due until the fall.

While the foregoing hosiery expert points out the weak points in the current market for this class of merchandise, the obstacles, in many instances, are being overcome. The merchant, however, if his order is not in already, should delay no longer. The well-known brands are all made here, and as the largest proportion of sales are in these goods, neither shortage in supply nor increase in price may be looked for by the dealer.

Guide for Selecting Paint. Humbug of Certain "Guarantees."

Quality in ready-to-use paints is not established by the so-called "guarantee" of the retail mail order houses, no matter how strongly they may emphasize this point in their often delusive catalogue deliverances. Investigations by paint manufacturers along analytical lines, and the sad experiences of the consumer have proven this time and again. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has also made it clear in this department that merchants handling a line of paints, in order to stock the reliable, dependable kind, should purchase such brands as have been made known beyond the peradventure of a doubt, not only to the public, but also to the trade, the regular channel of consumer distribution. On the selection of paints, the chicanery practiced by mail order houses and cognate matters of interest, the appended letter, from one of the leading manufacturers, is illuminating:—

New York, July 30, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We beg to submit that the absence of any simple and certain test for the true quality of paints makes it just that much easier for the purveyor of inferior goods to push his way into the market under false colors, and reap exorbitant profits, even at low prices; all, of course, at the expense of the consumer.

It is quite certain that "neutral oil" (a name which sounds more attractive than "mineral oil") would not be used in making paints or putty if it were not much cheaper than linseed. Concerning its effect as a constituent of paint, it is a question whether plain water is not less harmful, and while the deleterious effect depends much on the quantity present, both these substances are decidedly out of place in a standard paint; they are used merely to reduce the cost of production, and with an unscrupulous disregard of the efficiency of the product.

Realizing the impossibility of detecting, by mere inspection, the inferior grades of paint, the consumer should by all means take the trouble to get reliable information from reliable people. So far as we are concerned, we make this easy by attaching a formula label to the package and the information so afforded to the consumer is both accurate and reliable.

The modern paint manufacturer with a chemical laboratory at his disposal, can guarantee the quality of the material, and can guarantee the proportions, but he cannot consistently guarantee the time the paint will last; for that depends so much on local conditions that a paint lasting ten years in some places may not last longer than two years under very severe conditions. Nevertheless there are mail order houses which apparently do not hesitate to guarantee their paint for five years, although their product is so very inferior that it could not be expected to give even one year of effective service, even under favorable conditions. How do they do it? The answer seems to lie in the long list of formidable questions to be answered by the consumer when he attempts to "collect" on the guarantee.

With an extensive set of directions on the package for applying the paint, it is easy, six months after, to ask if the directions were complied with in detail; and there isn't a reasonable chance in the world that anybody connected with the job will be able to remember every little detail and answer correctly; and, of course, if all directions were not followed, why then the guarantee cannot be expected to hold. This sort of confidence game is quite universally successful.

The consumer is always safe in buying straight linseed oil paints, and unsafe in buying anything else, unless he knows by ample experience just what he is getting. Much might be said on this subject, but after all, the great need is to spread throughout our more remote and less critical district the information freely furnished by the reliable manufacturers, nearly all of whom are advertising the facts as extensively as the exceedingly small and insufficient profits on high-class paints will allow.

Thanking you for this opportunity to express our thoughts on this subject, we beg to remain,

Respectfully yours,

JOHN W. MASURY & SON.
W. P. Leeman

From the above it may be gathered that some paint manufacturers who are known to the trade in a small way get that!—are using neutral or mineral oil as a solvent and body in their product. It would be a benefit to the trade if their names were made known. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will do its part in the good work if it straight, reliable, dependable information is given for whom it may concern.

Government Brings More Coffee Fraud Cases.

Charged with violating the pure food law, Peter J. Shannon, of Peter J. Shannon & Co., 110 Front street, and William L. Mitchell, of Mitchell Bros., Front street, New York, were arraigned before the United States District Court last Tuesday and released in $2,000 each. It is charged that they shipped a consignment of Caracas coffee to Milwaukee under a brand which stated that coffee was grown in Bogota.

This Tells the Tale

A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. “Knight’s Cooking Extracts” is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight’s Extracts we need pay nothing more to you; if you don’t, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and good profit.

Babbitt's Best Soap

“BEST SINCE GRANDMA’S TIME”

This soap has been the standard of quality and value for over half a century. It has the benefit of BABBITT advertising and BABBITT reputation in addition to established consumer good will. No grocery stock is complete without it and no soap sells as easily or as steadily. Your customers know BABBITT’S BEST SOAP, and they know the Trade Marks are good for beautiful and useful presents, so it will sell on sight if you keep it displayed.

Salesmanship That Pays

Won’t lots of your customers buy whatever you recommend to them? Of course they will. Just get them to try Hooton’s Cocoa and they’ll not only keep on buying it, but they’ll be glad you called it to their attention. In a 10c. can of Hooton’s Cocoa they get more and better cocoa than they can buy under any other brand at the same price. In the half pound can they get two and a half times as much cocoa, but don’t have to pay two and a half times as much for it. Write for particulars of our special “introductory offer”: it means “more business” for you.

What This New Plan Means to You

The core of our plan for our Standardized Coffee Blends is that we keep our blends absolutely and positively uniform from one year’s end to another.

How? Simply by an unprecedented amount of labor and care. Grades must match even if we have to go through the market with a fine tooth comb. But think of the enormous advantage of this, both to us and to you. We can sell you, and you can sell your customers, the same coffee-to-morrow and forever. Not “almost” the same, or “about” the same, but the same. Nothing so binds a customer to you as uniformity. We are finding that out, through these Standardized Blends, and so will you if you will adopt them.

Have you seen samples yet?

WILLIAM B. HARRIS, President

CCLXXII.—Don't Bank on Prices Made by Salesmen or Agents Without Confirmation by the House.

Not long ago a certain wholesale buyer was visited by the salesman of a manufacturer. The buyer was interested in a certain line which the salesman showed, but objected to the price. After some discussion the salesman, without obtaining authority from his house, reduced the price, and the buyer made a contract with him, at the reduced price, for a considerable quantity of stuff. Almost immediately the market began to advance. The buyer, believing himself covered, bought no more, and furthermore went out and sold to his trade, for future delivery, practically all he had bought, at a price based on the figure named in the contract. Meanwhile the market continued to advance steadily until it was 40 per cent. above the starting point.

When the buyer forwarded his first order as against the contract made with the salesman, the latter's employer promptly repudiated it on the ground that the salesman had no right to reduce any price. The buyer found himself with no goods, with the market 40 per cent. higher, and with good valid contracts made with his trade at about 15 per cent. below the then first hands market.

The moral is not to bank on any special price made by a salesman or agent until the house confirms it. Keeping this in mind will save both money and convenience.

Not long ago the salesman for a Chicago packing house went to a wholesale dealer and offered some hog casings at a certain price, to be delivered within sixty days. The goods were described as "40 per cent. salt." The jobber was not satisfied and he finally induced the salesman to take an order and to note on it "40 per cent. off for salt." Since the former notation "40 per cent. salt" took nothing off for salt, the second one meant reducing the price 40 per cent., or practically half.

When the order reached the packer the clerk who handled it made the mistake of filling part of it at the cut price and billing the jobber at that figure. Almost immediately, however, the house discovered it and notified the jobber, who refused to pay the proper price and demanded delivery of the balance of the contract. This was refused, and the jobber went into the market and bought an equal amount, promptly suing the packer for the difference between the price which he paid and what he contended was the price the agent had made. The case was heard before a jury and a verdict rendered for the defendant, that is, for the packer. It was appealed, and the higher court decided that the packer was not responsible for the jobber's loss, for the reason that the agent was not shown to have had a right to cut the price without authority from his house. The case is exactly in point with the typical case cited in the first paragraph—here is this buyer, with no goods except what he bought at a higher price, and with the expenses of this lawsuit to pay. All he needed to have done to save himself all this was to ask the house for confirmation of the reduced price before he depended on it.

Where a salesman cuts a price, the employer will be bound by the cut only when it can be shown that the salesman either had express authority to make it, or that making it was within his implied authority. Many cases hold that a salesman who goes out to sell goods at prices which are of course given him by his employer, has no implied authority to change those prices and if he does so the employer can repudiate his act.

In the hog casings case the law on this point was thus stated, and it is easy to apply it to many other cases which are daily transpiring or which could transpire:—

There was no evidence to support the conclusion that the appellee (the packer) had ever agreed or intended to agree to any such contract. The purchaser knew the agent had no authority to fix the prices and terms for such a contract, and that such terms and conditions would have to be made by the principal in Chicago. They knew that the principal had made a proposition, had reduced it to writing, and it was before them, and they perfectly understood its import and meaning. They had no right therefore to rely on the act of the agent, which worked such a radical change in the proposition made by the principal as we have already noted. The evidence was entirely wanting to show any meeting of the minds of the parties on the terms and conditions of the alleged contract. On the contrary, it clearly showed there was no such concurrence of opinion, because while the principal was offering in writing to sell goods at a fixed rate per pound, including salt up to 40 per cent. of the entire weight, the purchaser and the agent, who avowedly had no authority to make prices, so manipulated that proposition as to practically cut the price in two. It is not necessary to cite authority to show that neither in law nor in equity could such an injurious contract be fastened upon a principal without his knowledge or assent.

A very large number of cases, which are regularly occurring without apparent diminution, show that there is amazing looseness in buying goods from salesmen or agents. As a matter of fact, a salesman may have no authority from his house to name even the first price he offers. That price may not be the price he was authorized to name at all. It is impossible to tell what a salesman's authority is, but before any harm is done it can always be tested by asking the house to confirm it.

Of course there are cases where a salesman names prices or changes prices, and where his work is repeatedly accepted and affirmed by his house. Where there is a course of dealing like this, the house will not be permitted to suddenly repudiate a price, made by the salesman which does not suit it. The court in all such cases has said: "By your conduct you led the people who bought from your salesman to believe that he had authority to make prices. Now that you have educated them to depend on that, and they have depended on it, you will not be allowed to say, as to this particular price, 'the salesman had no authority to make it.' Your previous conduct has cost you your right to take that position."

(Copyright, August, 1914, by Elton J. Buckley.)

Question: E. H. Van Camp, Port Byron, N. Y.—I have a few accounts on my books that I have been unable to collect. Will you kindly advise me how to proceed to collect same when the parties are working and getting a regular weekly salary. Does the account have to be over a certain amount and does it have to be put into judgment before I can attach his wages?

Answer.—In New York State you should enter suit against the debtor and get judgment. You can then attach his wages in excess of $12 per week. You cannot attach wages until you have obtained judgment.

Question: H. F. Snader, Adams town, Pa.—A young boy, minor, caught me for $1 worth of pigeon feed. He promised to pay in a few days, so afterwards sold his pigeons and balance of feed on hand. He has promised quite often to pay me, but has not done so yet. It is not a great amount, but do not want him to beat me. Will try and collect if I can though it costs me the dollar. How can I do it?

Answer.—You can't. A minor is not responsible for such contract as this, no matter how much he or his parents may happen to be worth. Get him alone some time and have a plain talk with him. Ask him if he wants to begin his career this early by beating you out of a dollar. You might also see his parent about it. That is all you can do.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letter should be received at this office no later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Alleged Cantaloupe Trust Indicted at Government's Suit.

The Federal Grand Jury, sitting in Chicago, has ended its investigation of the Western Cantaloupe Exchange, with the return of the indictments against eleven corporations and 28 individuals. The indictments charge violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law, illegal control of the product and the fixing of prices. Each indictment is in eight counts. The first three deal with the organization of the Exchange in Chicago in August, 1911. The fourth count outlines the alleged working agreement said to have been in effect between the producer and the distributor. Conspiracy in restraint of trade is charged in the fifth and sixth counts and a monopoly of the business is charged in the last two counts. Testimony tending to show that the Exchange controlled the production and sale of almost three-fourths of the cantaloupes grown in the United States was presented to the Grand Jury. It was asserted that melons were left to rot on the grounds to keep prices up. The corporations named in the indictment are: The Western Cantaloupe Exchange, Lyon Bros. Co., of New York; Miller-Cummings Co., of New York; Lyon-Coggins Co., Pittsburg; M. O. Coggins Co., Pittsburg; The Mutual Distributing Co. and the United Marketing Co., of Los Angeles. Individuals indicted are James Stapleton Crutchfield, Pittsburg, president of the Exchange; Clifford A. Coggins and C. Swift Bollens, Pittsburg, president and secretary of M. O. Coggins Co.; Adolph Wy, San Francisco, president of the Mutual Distributing Co.; Alexander Frachan, Los Angeles, secretary of the same company; Robert B. Woolfolk, Pittsburg, of Crutchfield & Woolfolk; Walter B. Hovley, Brawley; Samuel Y. Lee, Pittsburg, general manager Lyon-Coggins Co.; Charles E. Virden, Los Angeles, president; Edwin S. Armstrong, Philadelphia, vice-president; Arthur M. Klein, San Francisco, treasurer; and A. G. Kohnhorst, Brawley, general manager of the United Marketing Co.; Ed. Brennison, Buffalo, and Luis M. Siegel, San Francisco, directors of the United Marketing Co.; Stephen A. Gerrard and Virgil M. Gerrard, Cincinnati, members of S. A. Gerrard & Co.; Duncan Campbell and A. W. Phelps, Los Angeles, members Duncan Campbell & Co.; Arthur Miller, New York, president Lyons Bros. Co., and Miller-Cummings Co., Cecil H. Cummings, Boston, director Miller-Cummings Co., and the following Chicagoans: Frank E. Wagner and William L. Wagner, of G. M. Wagner & Son; Charles H. Weaver, Charles A. Weaver, L. What to do About Complaints.

I picked up a trade paper in a customer's store the other day, and the first thing I turned up was a beautiful piece about how a fellow with a store ought to handle complaints that came in over his counter. For instance, if a woman came in and kicked because the roast she got last Saturday turned out to be cut off the neck of an automobile tire, what he ought to do to smooth her down without giving her a deed to his store. Oh, it was a beautiful piece! I suppose the fellow that wrote it maybe looked in a store once or twice—maybe he'd even bought gum in one, but as to his really being in the business, no, I'll bet a whole dollar he ain't, because a fellow really in the business—I'll say that again, a fellow really in the business—knows that you can't sit down and write how to tend to complaints. You've got to tackle 'em when they come in, and there ain't any way of handling 'em that will apply to 'em all alike. What you can do with one you can't do with another. You know that, and I know it. Everybody knows it but these fellows who write pieces for the papers out of their own heads.

This fellow that wrote the piece I read sure had it fixed up nice. He put the plumb words a storekeeper ought to say to a complainer, right in your mouth. I can't remember very well exactly what the words were—neither could anybody else, take it from me—but he had some easy, natural speech like this, as near as I can remember: "My dear Mrs. Jones, I regret exceedingly that you should have been caused any annoyance. The fault was entirely ours, and I regret exceedingly that you should have been caused any annoyance. I cannot possibly see, my dear Mrs. Jones, how it could have happened, and I regret exceedingly that you should have been caused any annoyance. Certainly we will adjust the matter, Mrs. Jones, certainly we will, and I regret exceedingly that you should have—"

Just then Mrs. Jones is supposed to climb down from her perch and order five cases of 60-cent soup sent to her house every day for the next twelve years, paying for it in advance.

Piffle and pooh!

D'ye know, the worst kind of a coward a fellow can be, the way I look at it, is to own up to a customer that he's wrong when he ain't. Lying, that's what it is, and lying for money, too, because the only reason he does it is so's he'll hold trade. It's a mighty pinty thing to do, if I know anything about it.

I said all this to a fellow with a big store the other day. We were chewing this thing over and he owned up to me that time and time again he'd taken blame that didn't belong to him.

"Why?" I said.

"Because they were good customers and if we fought with them we'd lose their trade."

"Did you know sure you wasn't to blame?"

"Oh, yes, we had proof. Time and time again."

"But you didn't have to fight with 'em, did you?" I said; "couldn't you hold up your end without getting people sore?"

"With women?" he said, "no, you can't. I'd sooner argue with a cow. Oh, it wouldn't pay at all. We don't lie down right at the start, you know. If we have any come-back, we start to make it, but if we see the customer's getting sore, we lay right down and shoulder it. It pays in the long run."

"You're a plumb coward," I said. (I'm bigger'n him.)

"Sure I am," he said as cheerful as all get out. "I have to be if I want to stay in business."

Is he right about that? Does he? Ain't there anybody in the world that'll own up when they're wrong? Is everybody all the time trying to slime out of what they do and put it onto somebody else? Is everybody who buys our goods so pisen mean that they'll take their trade and go home unless the storekeeper shoulders blame that belongs to them?

By gum, if this is all true, it's a punk world, and I dunno but what I'll commit suicide, maybe day after to-morrow.

I own up it takes nerve to stand up before a huffy woman—a good customer—member of a bunch of societies, maybe—with a lot of friends—mad and unreasonable as a sore toe, and face her down when she's trying to put something up to you that's really up to her. We all have these things—I have 'em in my business, you have 'em in yours. When you see a good slice of trade dropping away, and a fight on your hands, and a tonguey woman starting out to do you up, and when maybe two or three words and a little money loss would fix it up all right, I say again it takes a nerve to stand there. I ain't sure I'd have the nerve but I'm sure I ought to have it. I'm sure of this much, too—that I'd have the nerve if I had the only store in town and there was a law putting anybody in jail that went out of town to buy goods. Gee whiz, but what a peach of a cinch that would be, wouldn't it? If I had a place like that I wouldn't even take the kicks that belonged to me. If anybody had the gall to blow because I sent 'em tough meat, or green tomatoes, I'd insult 'em, and if they so much as peeped I'd break every bone in their durned bodies. Gee, I wish I could get in a butter tub like that just for one month! If I wouldn't get back for all the mean smears that have been put over on storekeepers!

But that's a pipe dream and in minute it'll be gone. There ain't any butter tubs and there ain't a cinches. Here's just me blatherin' away about something that I can't help, and you fellows, who have to take life as it comes. I'm going to say again that we all as business fellows ought to stand up for what belongs to us, and we ought not to let customers put their own blame over on us? Wake up now—evenness fellows, stand up for what belongs to us and say no when customers try to put their own blame over on us? Wake up now—evenbody vote.

The noes have it—begob, unanimous.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The Verona and Oakmont merchants held a very successful picnic at Kennywood Park on August 4th. One of the inducements to a big attendance was that those arriving at the starting point between 9 to 10 A. M. were carried free.

California (Pa.) merchants held a successful and largely attended picnic at Kennywood Park on August 4th. A big crowd was present and the programme of sports was a good one.

Johnstown merchants held a picnic at Lenape Park on August 4th. Most of the stores in town were closed.

The Penn Traffic Co. gave a picnic to its employees on the same day.

Blairsville merchants held a meeting preliminary to organization on Friday, August 7th. George McGarry, secretary of Johnstown Merchants' Credit Bureau, was present and made an address.

Mr. Smedley addressed a well-attended meeting of the Business Men's Association of Armstrong County on August 4th. This organization has joined the State Association. President McCusker and Secretary D. A. Held are being financially supported by the merchants comprising the organization, which includes the merchants of Kutztown, Pottsville, Reading, Schuylkill, Berks, and Lehigh counties.

cGrann. The association has a good collection system and we present a most prosperous organization.

Mr. Smedley addressed the members of the newly-formed Merchants Credit Bureau of Johnstown, Pa., at an evening luncheon held at the "Cannery." Covers were laid for 50 and the places were nearly all taken. President Reiser and Secretary McGarry had charge of the meeting. This association numbers nearly 175 members and is still growing. It is a live wire association and, although started primarily to regulate credits, will branch out and assume all the functions of a regular merchants' association.

Merchants of St. Clair will organize on August 19th. Mr. Smedley will be assisted in the organization by Secretary Knapp, of the Pittsford Association, and members of both associations.

South Fork merchants held a big celebration on August 6th. This was in connection with the Firemen's convention.

All indications point to a real convention of retail merchants at Philadelphia on September 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th.

New Jersey Chain Store Concern in Financial Trouble.

The Peerless Grocery Co., which started out 16 months ago to plant a chain of grocery stores in Eastern New Jersey has struck the reefs of financial trouble. During the week the judge of the Federal Court of Newark appointed Harry Keeler, receiver of the concern, on petition of some of the best creditors and authorized him to take over the 23 stores already established and to make plans for reorganizing the business. The Peerless Co. was managed by George Murphy, best known for many years as a prominent salesman for Austin, Nichols & Co. Mr. Murphy and certain associates organized the Peerless Co., and it is understood secured the actual investment of about $50,000. In all 23 stores were opened in Newark and vicinity and were planned. Some of them proved to be badly located and though business was done on a cash basis, there were streaks of bad trade of late which left the concern short of ready money. When maturing obligations loomed large, three of the largest creditors—Austin, Nichols & Co., Francis H. Leggett & Co. and the Meyer Carmody Import Co.—were called in for a meeting. This resulted in a decision to ask the appointment of a receiver to protect all creditors alike.

A SPLENDID SELLER

Franklin Dessert and Table Sugar

This sugar is especially made for cereals, fruits, berries, desserts and other foods that are sweetened at the table. It grades between POWDERED and FINE GRANULATED and can be used either with a spoon or a shaker. It dissolves quickly and sweetens thoroughly.

So many articles are sweetened at the table that this sugar is a steady, all-year-round seller and its usefulness will be appreciated by your customers as soon as you tell them about it. Start them buying it and increase your sales of sugar. Of course it's packed in FRANKLIN CARTONS, so you can make a profit on it by saving the cost of labor, bags, twine and loss from overweight that would come out of your pocket, if you handled it in bulk. Two Seasonable Trims.

No. 1.

The illustrations suggest two good window displays suitable now. Green corn is coming in plenty and good, so have a trim of it and increase your sales. To arrange: First cover the bottom of the window with white crepe paper. To the left place a large chip basket, and place some green corn in it and over the bottom of the window, just as though the basket fell over and the corn rolled out. In front, on the right, place a neat sign card, also stating selling price per dozen. Back of this, on a large platter, place some cleaned ears, as though ready to serve. Now arrange the background. Get two strong narrow sticks and drive them full of wire nails, with the point or end of the nail about two inches at least out of the other side of the stick, place them about four inches apart. This done, cover with white crepe paper and nail in place, as illustrated. Give it support in the center by suspending a wire from the ceiling. Force a nice ear of corn on each nail, place the sticks in a manner so the ears stand upward. Fasten some narrow twisted strips of the white crepe paper between each ear and the ceiling. Cover a board with white crepe paper and place ears of corn in this to spell the word "corn;" fasten this under the arch at the bottom of the window.

No. 2.

Camping parties are popular now. Make a neat window display like and suggest to the prospective parties all the good things you can supply. To arrange this display: First have your tinsmith make you a large pan 3 feet long and about 18 inches wide, with sides about three inches high. Paint the inside green, and when dry place in the window at the front. Place boards on the bottom of the window, to be on a level with the top of the sides of the pan. Cover with fresh moss or sod. Take care and cover the rim of the pan well, as it will look better if the moss goes partly in the water. Place a little toy boat in the water at the bank. To the right place a sign board with wording like cut. Now arrange your tent; make this of white muslin or duck. It should be about 12 inches high and about 14 long; a few thin sticks will do for the frame of it, over which it will be easy to tack the goods. Place a tiny little pole in the center in front, with a flag on top. At the

on the left, place one or two cans of any one kind of vegetables and fruit, some bread, cakes, catsup, olives, sauce, pickles, crackers, etc. Place at the rear corners at the top with twisted strips of red, white and blue crepe paper. Of course, the tent and the pan representing the lake can be made much larger for very large window.

Federal Agents Hunting Illegal Food Combines all Over the United States.

Interview Producers, Wholesale and Retail Grocers as to Reason For Many Advances. Meat Men Say Scarcity is Their Excuse. Philadelphia Association Demands Stoppage of Food Exports.

The Federal probe into advances in food products is now under way in all parts of the country, although no conclusions have been announced as yet. The probe was started by a letter from the President to the Attorney-General, asking him to assign special agents to make investigations all over the country to learn whether there was anything illegal about the rapid advances in many foreign and domestic food products since the war. The Attorney-General at once started the machinery of his office and obtained the aid of the Department of Commerce, which promptly issued the following instructions to agents in all large cities:—

You are instructed to inquire immediately and carefully whether there has been a recent rise in retail prices in your city and vicinity, and if so on what articles and to what extent. Special attention should be given to foodstuffs and articles of clothing and other necessities. Learn whether the advance, if it exists, is general or confined to particular commodities, and if so what ones. Find if it has been sudden or gradual. If any articles have fallen in price, state the facts concerning them. Learn what reasons are given for any advances that may have occurred and inquire particularly as to whether such reasons are the actual ones.

Give special care to determining if there has been any advance due to speculation, either on the general war situation or on the temporary delay in ocean transit. Consider whether a fair stock exists or is available of any commodity that may have advanced and whether the facts show a purpose to use the war situation to secure undue extra profits by increased prices. Study to learn if any combination exists for the advance of prices under existing conditions.

When the facts shall have been determined sufficiently to give a clear idea of the general situation report them promptly to the chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and continue the inquiry subject to his instructions.

For the last week or so agents of both Governmental departments have been questioning producers, packers, manufacturers, wholesale and retail dealers all over the country as to the reason for the advances. A number of them have been circulating among Philadelphia wholesale grocers during the week, and got a lot of information out of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association.

There have also been boycotts started in several parts of the country, but like most boycotts, none of them have amounted to anything. Food prices are still high, though a few—coffee, flour, and in some sections meat, have declined somewhat during the week. These declines, however, are probably only temporary, for foreign shipping is certain to be reopened shortly, and with this will come a quick and large demand for our products. This will give the holders their only legitimate reason for advancing prices—a reason they have not had up to this time.

Touehing the advance in meat, the packers and their representatives have made a number of statements claiming that the sole cause of the advances is the scarcity. J. Ogden Armour issued the following statement:—

The fluctuations of the past few days have come from extraordinary conditions that speak for themselves. These conditions have been the scarcity of livestock, which has been growing steadily more acute from month to month, plus the utterly unexpected disturbances in Europe. But the sky is clearing. We are little by little, and day by day, getting back to normal. We will get there faster if we avoid hysterics.

During the last two weeks Armour & Co. have killed fewer hogs than during any similar period since we have been in business. Our Chicago plant has a killing capacity of more than 60,000 hogs a week; last week it killed only 5,024. Kansas City has about the same capacity, and killed only 2,012. Our East St. Louis, Fort Worth and St. Joseph plants killed respectively 504, 783 and 595 hogs.

The nine Armour plants killed only 14,738 hogs last week, against 70,338 the week before the war. They killed only 17,512 cattle last week, as against 21,836 the week before the war, and only 30,334 sheep last week, as against 46,395 the week before the war.

Morris & Co. issued the following:—

The receipts at Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis, St. Joseph and Sioux City so far this year have shown a decrease of 528,000 cattle and 1,339,000 hogs, as compared with the same period a year ago.

Figures gathered from Kansas City, Chicago, Omaha, St. Louis,

St. Joseph, Fort Worth, Oklahoma City, Wichita and Denver show that there has been a decrease of 144,081 cattle, or 19.10 per cent.; of hogs, 268,924, or 19.70 per cent.; of sheep, 112,248, or 12.33 per cent., for the month of July, as compared with the receipts for July, 1913.

The Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association last Monday evening adopted resolutions calling on the President to stop, through the passage of a suitable act, the exportation of food products from this country. This in order to conserve our own supplies and prevent holders from putting supplies away in order to hold for the high price which is expected to follow the war. This suggestion has come from several quarters, but there is a grave question whether it can be done under the provision of the Federal constitution, which forbids the passage of any law forbidding exports from any State. The Philadelphia resolution is as follows:—

Be it Resolved, That we urge President Woodrow Wilson and our National Congress to take immediate steps to at once prohibit the exportation of foodstuffs until such time as normal conditions shall again prevail; and be it further

Resolved, That we recommend that all boards of trade and exchanges, where options are bought and sold for speculative purposes, be closed, excepting for transactions of buying and selling for actual delivery.

On the following day Representative Vare, of Philadelphia, introduced in the National House of Representatives a bill forbidding food and other exports from this country under certain conditions. The text of the bill follows:—

Be it enacted, etc., That the Bureau of Corporations of the Department of Commerce is hereby directed to ascertain without delay the character, extent and volume of contracts now in effect or hereafter to be entered into by citizens of the United States for supplying foodstuffs, clothing, footwear, arms and munitions of war, and other contraband or conditional contraband of war to nations now engaged in war and to the citizens or subjects of such nations, and to report such information in detail to the President of the United States.

Sec. 2. That whenever in the opinion of the President of the United States the exportation of such supplies in executing said contracts the market price of said materials is unduly enhanced in the United States, or is liable to be unduly enhanced, he is hereby authorized to prohibit the exportation of such supplies in whole or in part, for such time as he may determine; and it shall be unlawful for any citizen of the United States to export said supplies from and after the date of the proclamation of the President prohibiting such exportation, and any person violating the provisions of this act and of the proclamation herein authorized shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Post Office Department Says It Can Ship Most Perishable Food Products Safely by Parcel Post.

Experiments With Butter, Strawberry Cherries, Lettuce and so on. All Carry Well, But Care is Required.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

August 20, 1914.

The Post Office Department has made some interesting experiment with shipping highly perishable food products by parcel post. Extensive experiments in the shipping of butter by parcel post have been under way for a number of months. No shipments of less than 2 pounds are made because of the relative greater expense incident to the shipment of single pounds. It has been sent in 2, 3, 5 and 10-pound parcels, not only from the creamery at which it was produced to the office in Washington, but from Washington to experiment stations throughout the country for examination there and subsequent return. The butter used has been all put in 1-pound prints, wrapped in regular waterproof butter paper, and placed in paraffined paper cartons such as are most commonly used in the distribution of fancy creamery butter. These cartons are then inserted into corrugated pasteboard containers suitable for accommodating the differing amounts to be shipped, and wrapped with good wrapping paper.

Under ordinary weather conditions practically no difficulty has been experienced in the shipment of butter. The chief problem to be solved, of course, is to prevent the butter from liquefying; mere softening has not proven injurious. The difficulty is somewhat less acute in cold weather than in warm. However, the fact that mail cartons must be heated in winter, and that this is accomplished by superheated steam pipes located along the outer walls of the car and behind the mail sacks, tends to make the problem of butter shipment in winter somewhat similar to that in warm weather.

The regulations of the Post Office Department on this subject are of such a nature that it is possible

Contest Time's Drawing to an End

We have not yet gotten your views as to the real strength of national advertising—may we have them by next Thursday, August 27th?

The subject is as follows:—

10—How determined, as a rule, are customers who ask for nationally advertised articles? Do they appear to have made up their mind to get them, or are they simply “thinking of trying?”

What we want to know is this—does national advertising really inspire your customer with an intent to buy, or only a desire to, which is quite a different thing? How do you find this? Write us something even if it is only a line or two.

Prizes of $7.50, $5.00 and $2.50 for the best.

Thursday, August 27, 1914, is the Last Day obviate the trouble to a considerable extent in cold weather by marking butter parcels as follows: "Perishable—Keep away from heating apparatus." Mail clerks are expected to be guided by such instructions and to give perishables special care.

With the growth of the parcel post as a method of shipping perishables it would seem not unlikely that in the future some method of refrigeration on a small scale might be developed. Over ordinary distances and under average conditions butter wrapped as outlined can be shipped without deterioration. It should always be chilled before shipment and chilled again immediately upon receipt by the purchaser.

During the strawberry shipping season, which is just closing, 28 crates of berries have been handled by the parcel post. Twenty-four of these in 16-quart crates were shipped from the Eastern Shore of Maryland. In order to comply with the post office requirements the crates were fitted with tight bottoms, which would make leakage difficult though not wholly impossible. Parcels of this character weighing over 20 pounds are very generally handled in a manner similar to express and are not put in bags. Those weighing less than 20 pounds are usually placed in mail sacks and the wrapping in either case must be done accordingly. In only two cases did the individual quart boxes containing the berries show sufficient leakage to stain the bottom of the crate itself, and in only one of these cases was there any evidence of leakage on the outside of the crate. The berries were received in as good condition as would have been the case by any other means of transportation, and were of better quality than berries selling at a higher price at the particular time in the Washington market.

As an experiment in the practicability of shipping in the present 32-quart commercial crate, 3 shipments were made with the crates only three-fourths full to keep them within the weight limit, and in a fourth case as an experiment outside of the present weight limits a full 32-quart crate weighing 56 pounds was shipped. These crates were received in fully as good condition as the 16-quart crates.

Small preliminary experiments with both sweet and sour cherries have been made, but not enough shipments have been conducted to warrant any statement of conclusions.

During the late winter and early spring 8 or 10 barrels of lettuce produced in the experiments of the departments on the Arlington farm, conducted by the Bureau of Plant Industry, were shipped to various parts of the country in 142 parcels. The varieties used in the experiments were the "Boston head" and "Grand Rapids." The parcels usually contained, depending upon the size of the heads or bunches, from 2 to several dozen heads. The average weight of parcels containing 8 to 10 heads was between 4 and 4½ pounds. The average weight of those containing 6 was about 3 pounds. The parcels were shipped not only in the local zone and to nearby points, but to places as far away as Boston, New York, Toledo, Chicago, Minneapolis and elsewhere. In spite of the fact that zero weather prevailed during a part of the time when experiments were in progress, the lettuce carried through to destination satisfactorily and with only a small percentage of waste. In the local zone lettuce from shipments that were kept under observation was perfectly fresh and usable at the end of 7 days. Ordinary corrugated cartons lined with paraffin paper and wrapped with ordinary strong wrapping paper were used for the shipments.

Experiments have also been conducted with parcels containing an assortment of vegetables available at the same time. Such shipments have usually been uniformly successful and present an extension of the hamper system which has been inaugurated to some extent by certain of the express companies.

Parcel Post Food Business Fails Because of Producers' Greed

Chief Market Bureau of Agricultural Department Admits This and a Personal Instance Confirms It. Farmers Selling Butter, Eggs, Fruit, Etc., Want Highest Prices, Which Consumers Will Not Pay.

The United States Government is working hard to find why parcel post has not been more of a success as to transporting food products and in putting the producer and consumer in direct touch. The shipment of foods through the mails has been exceedingly small compared to what it was expected to be. One reason has been advanced by Charles J. Brand, Chief of Markets of the Department of Agriculture. He says the farmer has been too greedy—he has in some cases tried to charge the consumer more than the latter could buy for in the regular way from the highest-priced stores. Naturally consumers have not gone back for more of that treatment.

Here is a part of Mr. Brand's statement on the subject:—

There is an unfortunate tendency on the part of some farmers who have butter, eggs and other produce to sell to ask prices far above those current in their own rural localities and higher even than those exacted by the fancy retail stores of the cities for products of the same grade. Fundamentally there are only two reasons to persuade the consumer to undertake the additional trouble and uncertainty of securing produce by mail. These are economy in cost and greater freshness of product. No unusual method will ever be popular unless it gives results along one or both of these lines. Producers must be very careful not to overreach in the matter of price. Unless they are willing to share the saving with the consumer who agrees to receive food products which he has not had an opportunity to examine and whose quality and time of delivery will always be subject to a degree of uncertainty, there is little prospect of the wide extension of the parcel post system which it deserves, so far as the farm is concerned.

Recently the post office at Washington, D. C., has been very active in trying to promote parcel post marketing, collecting lists of names of farmers and others who have produce to sell, and printing and distributing these lists to patrons of the Washington office who might become purchasers. A few cases with respect to eggs alone will suffice to illustrate this tendency referred to above. One New Jersey farmer offers eggs at 40 cents a dozen the year around; a Pennsylvania farmer in June offers "fresh white sanitary eggs" at $1 for two dozen; a Virginia farmer offers eggs at Washington quotations, plus 10 cents. It is difficult to see how a user of eggs could afford to pay such prices when fresh country eggs are being sold by farmers to country grocers at this moment for prices ranging above and below 20 cents a dozen in trade.

The difference between the country price and the city price must be shared fairly between the producer and the buyer. The latter will not take chances on things that cannot be examined and which in some cases may not fulfill the particular need; furthermore, he will not bear the uncertainty as to time of arrival unless there is a gain to him in so doing.

The writer, since parcel post went into effect, has noticed the same tendency on the part of producers who have solicited his business by mail. For example, last week the following postal card was received:—

No. 160 E. Market St., Chambersburg, Pa., August 7, 1914.

Dear Sir:—Inclose One Dollar and this card to the undersigned on or before Friday next, the 14th inst., and we will ship by Adams Express to the address on opposite side of this card (if the original address on the opposite side of this card is not that of the party to whom you desire the peaches forwarded, stroke it out and insert the proper address) a 20-pound basket of Captain Ede Peaches, a large, yellow, juicy free-stone peach of high flavor. If you desire greater quantity than 20 pounds, send $1.25 for each 25 pounds, one-half bushel, basket desired.

Very truly yours,

MOUNTAIN BREEZE ORCHARD CO.

N. B.—Order must be mailed by Friday next to make sure of securing Captain Ede.

A rubber stamp across the face of this postal revealed the fact that the expressage on a 20-pound basket of peaches to Philadelphia was 27 cents. This of course the consumer must pay, making the total cost $1.27 for a 20-pound basket. The expressage on a 25-pound basket (half a bushel) is 30 cents, making the peaches cost the consumer at the rate of $2.95 per bushel. Not much of a bargain as it appears to the writer.

California Has Greatest Fruit Crop in Years.

With 42,500 cars of oranges and lemons already shipped out of California, and with prospects of easily 5,000 more, it is now certain that the season's citrus crop of California will prove greater than all early estimates and far exceed the record-breaking output of 1910-11. Each succeeding estimate of the 1913-14 crop since the beginning of the season has been greater than the last. In October, just after the oranges had set on the trees, the guess was 38,000 cars. In December it went to 40,000. On January 1 it was estimated that the crop would amount to 43,000 cars, and in February the estimate was raised to 45,000. Since that time the figure went as high as 46,000, but not until the last few days was it definitely known that the crop would break all records. The largest crop heretofore in the history of California citrus industry was that of 1910-11, when 43,399 cars were shipped. The crop next in size was that of 1912, which amounted to 40,700 cars.

Some of the New York Grocery Advances. Experts Looking Into Unaccounted Advances. Plenty of Foreign Lemons Coming. The "Sugar at a Glance" Postage Graft. Market Summary.

New York, Aug. 21, 1914.

Some of the great advances in food products here since the European war became so fierce are shown in the following list. These figures are from first hands to jobbers and some cases show a revolutionary jump. It is understood that the advances from first hands to jobbers have been much more general and much more nearly uniform than the advances from retailers to consumers, retailers having held off much longer in making the advance than manufacturers or even jobbers:—

In spite of the general expectation that there would be no more lemons from Italy or Sicily, the news comes that there are several carloads on the way from Sicily, amounting all told to nearly 60,000 boxes. Whether or not the three vessels which are bringing these, all of which are now en route, will be able to make a safe passage of course remains to be seen, but fruit men say if they come in safely there would be no other reason why other cargoes should not follow.

* * *

Among the mass of matter which is issued from authorities on the sugar situation in the last ten days is a circular letter from the A. H. Lamborn & Co., who are more radical in their prediction than anybody else. They prophesy high-priced sugar for some time to come. An extract from their circular is as follows:—

The sugar world has passed the most exciting week in the past forty years, culminating in an advance of not less than 226 points, raw sugars selling on Friday, August 7th, at 3.25 cents cost and freight, equal to 4.26 cents duty paid, with sales yesterday at 5.50 cents cost and freight, equal to 6.52 duty paid, while granulated, which on the 6th inst. sold at 4.50 to 5.25 cents, less 2 per cent., closed yesterday at 6.75 cents to 7.50 cents, less 2 per cent., depending upon the refiner quoting.

* * *

News comes from Albany that the experts who for several weeks have been examining into the reasons for food price fluctuations are paying particular attention now to the advances which have occurred as a result of the war. They are directing their present investigations toward commercial exchanges and cold storage plants, and it is said the experts have obtained an enormous quantity of evidence which they have turned over to the Attorney-General. There is a hint of some prosecutions by the latter.

* * *

One of the people investigating the high food prices is Commissioner of Weights and Measures Hartigan, who has announced that in his judgment the cause of the advance "was the desire of certain middlemen to promote a radical and abnormal demand for provisions in order that they might make a personal profit." He said he had evidence that wholesale grocers' salesmen had in many cases loaded retailers up and that retailers did the same to their customers.

* * *

The trade are generally acquainted with most of the literature on the question of free sugar which has been issued from time to time by Truman G. Palmer, who is nominally the secretary of the "Wholesale Grocers' Committee." Not many months ago a pamphlet, called "Sugar at a Glance," written by Palmer, was sent broadcast over the United States under the frank of Senator Lodge. The Government later found this out and is about to begin suit against Palmer's company, the United States Beet Sugar Co., for $57,600, representing the postage which would have been paid on the 320,000 copies of "Sugar at a Glance," if it had not been mailed under the frank.

District Attorney Whitman began his investigation of price increases by dealers in food commodities in this city on Thursday; District Attorney Martin started a similar inquiry in Bronx County; United States District Attorney Youngs opened a grand jury consideration of the subject in Brooklyn, and District Attorney Cropsey, of Brooklyn, got a John Doe performance under way for his county Friday morning. All of these legal probings are based on complaints of extortionate charges. In the meantime the scouts who are out looking for prices above the normal are having a hard time finding any. And no less authority than Mrs. Julian Heath, of the Housewives' League, says she "can't see where the excessive prices are and can't make out what's the matter with people"—although she is a member of the Mayor's Committee on Food Supply and has special facilities for finding out the facts, besides being unusually well-informed on the subject of the cost of necessities, anyway.

Mr. Whitman himself opened the first session before Magistrate McAdoo in the Criminal Courts Building on Thursday with a statement, which was read into the records, that many persons had complained to him that certain rises in prices seemed to be the result of a concerted movement among dealers, and that the inquiry was to determine the truth of these allegations. He said he wished it understood that no charges or insinuations were made against any dealers. He wanted to find out whether prices of foodstuffs had been materially advanced in New York, and if so whether the advances had been due to economic conditions or to unlawful combinations in restraint of trade. If the latter condition is shown to be true he will prosecute offenders under the penal law for conspiracy, and under the civil law for combinations restraining trade.

Judge J. Edwards, district manager for Swift & Co., was the main witness. He maintained that little or no attempt was being made by his company to fix prices among its New York branches.

"There are times when I inform branch managers of the condition of the market," he said, "and tell them what they should get for beef but they sell for what they can get."

In answers to questions he explained that wholesale beef dealers did not get a uniform price for beef or any other meats here. His opinion was they should do so, however.

The witness contended that the increase of prices was due to a decrease in the receipts of live stock at Chicago.

SUMMARY OF THE MARKETS.

Coffee easier on reopened shipments from Brazil.—Tea quiet, a result of the recent great activity causing buyers to stock up for time. Prices steady.—Rice firm high and active.—Spices considerably quieter, with less speculation and a somewhat easier tendency but no material decline.—Sugar syrup and molasses selling moderately at full prices.—Sugar still very high, all refiners quoting granulate 7.50; raws somewhat easier.—Fancy shore mackerel very firm and selling at higher prices.—Herring better demand than usual for the season and steady prices.—Codfish scarce, strong and unusually active for the summer.—Prunes steady and no change. Apricots weak. Peaches steady with strong advice from the coast.—Nuts very strong with an upward tendency.—California oranges weaker, particularly the smaller sizes.—Lemons steady to firm, with good demand and a light spot stock.—Wheat decidedly uneasy. Week closing stronger but without very much advance situation strengthening on report of reopened shipping, as undoubtedly large demand will come from abroad as soon as it can be properly satisfied. The shortage of European wheat crops this year estimated at 300,000,000 bushels.—Flour has followed wheat in almost all hog products are firm.—All week with a reduction of 10 cents per barrel. This, however, was not shared in by all millers. At present it is a seller's market.—Provisions higher, mainly on account of reports of resumed shipping.—All hog products are firm.—Canned tomatoes steady to firm.

the recent 2½-cent advance. Business dull.—Corn firm and higher. Demand light.—Cheap peas wanted without change in the price of them of any grade.—California canned goods are dull on account of expected early arrivals of new pack.—Beans and peas easier on fairly large receipts and sales have been made at a decline, particularly as domestic peas and beans.—Eggs of fancy quality firm and scarce.

July Failures Vary as Usual.

more in General Store, Grocery, Clothing and Hardware Lines, But Fewer in Groceries and Dry Goods.

The July report shows an increase in failures in most lines for that month as compared with July, 1913. The figures are as follows:—

General Stores.—July, 1914, 101; liabilities, $694,803; July, 1913, 95; liabilities, $784,117.

Groceries, Meats, Etc.—July, 1914, 260; liabilities, $713,797; July, 1913, 216; liabilities, $3,426,04.

Clothing and Furnishing.—July, 1914, 127; liabilities, $953,906; July, 1913, 82; liabilities, $751,921.

Dry Goods.—July, 1914, 48; liabilities, $1,899,394; July, 1913, 56; liabilities, $582,748.

Shoes, Rubbers, Etc.—July, 1914, 3; liabilities, $213,500; July, 1913, 7; liabilities, $132,711.

Hardware.—July, 1914, 27; liabilities, $205,605; July, 1913, 19; liabilities, $204,279.

Refreshing Indeed.

What a refreshing thing is the following advertisement, which is just now appearing in Eastern dailies:—

No Advance In Price

Hercules Water

will be on sale at all druggists at the regular price. Try this wonderful Hungarian aperient.

EISNER-MENDELSON CO.,
Sole Importers

How refreshing a contrast, we repeat, from the greedy conduct of those holders of necessities who, though mostly making an adequate profit already, used the war as a subterfuge to make more.

Given a dealer who has a stock of imported olive oil, for example, which he is selling regularly at a fair and satisfactory profit. Comes the war, with its news that there will be no more olive oil until war is over. Naturally there is an increased demand for the oil already in the country, but is there any excuse for advancing the price? We say there is not—if the profit already ruling was satisfactory. The holder who does it does a contemptible thing, in our judgment. "We can't replace it at the price," some of them say. What of it? When your stock is gone and you must replenish at a higher price, then you can advance your own prices with a perfectly good reason. To advance them now is low-down swinishness.

We believe there are two exceptions to this—first, that of wholesale grocers, who have advanced sugar prices with the refiners' market, though practically all had stocks of sugar bought at much lower figures. Wholesale grocers have for years sold sugar at cost and below. If they had one hundred times as much cheap sugar to work on as they have, they would not even begin to get back their losses. They are entitled to all the sugar profit they can make out of the war.

The second exception is that of dealers who by reason of the peculiar customs of their business are compelled to go down with declining markets, no matter how large their spot stocks may be. A trader who has to do this has every right to go up with the market with an equal disregard of his spot stock.

We hope the Government price investigators will look well into the advance in raw oats, which has caused an advance about 50 cents per barrel in bulk rolled oats. The manufacturers of rolled oats say they have been compelled to advance rolled oats because their raw material—raw oats—has advanced, and that is true. Raw oats, quoting September options, advanced from 37 cents August 1st to 41 $\frac{5}{8}$ cents at the present time, or 4 $\frac{5}{8}$ cents per bushel. This is just about equivalent to the 50-cent advance in rolled oats, so that the question is—was there any legitimate reason for the advance in raw oats?

If the question is confined to whether there is any reason for an advance in oats at this time, the answer must be no. The crop of oats is large—more than enough to supply the needs of this country and export some besides. If the surplus is not to go abroad—and it will not unless shipping conditions radically change—it means more oats for us, and by all the laws of supply and demand, lower prices here. The above is the present prospect, and while the holders of oats may have been excused for not lowering their price right away, they have no excuse for advancing them.

Their explanation is that wheat and oats are sympathetic; that wheat went up and oats had to go up also. There are two answers: The first is that there was no excuse for the advance in wheat in the first place, and the holders of oats, knowing this, were under no obligation to follow a movement which they knew was pure greed. The second answer is that there is no present reason why oats should sympathetically advance with wheat, even though the advance in wheat was honest. Wheat and oats are considered sympathetic because they can be used—but to a comparatively limited extent—interchangeably. If there is a scarcity of wheat, people can and do eat oats as a substitute. Thus, their plausible argument goes, scarcity and high prices of one always increases the demand for the other and causes higher prices.

Perhaps, but there must be high prices of one because of scarcity, before the two products can have any legitimate sympathetic relation. A mere inflation in the price of wheat, at a time when the supply is greater than ever before, gives oats no sympathetic reason for advancing, at least no honest sympathetic reason. The oats men if they had been fair, would have waited until some scarcity of wheat developed and advanced prices, and then advanced their own.

But why argue seriously about it any longer? The advance in grains was engineered and manipulated by a gang of greedy Chicago speculators who saw merely another chance to take advantage of a situation and squeeze more money from the public. There was no reason for what they did outside of the practical reason that animates every sneak thief—"I need the money and I think I can get away with it." The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" would like to see every one of them rotting in jail!

The California lima bean growers, who are said to believe that, being farmers, they are not amenable to the anti-trust laws, have made the frankest disclosure as to their reason for advancing prices since the European war, that we have seen. California lima beans on spot are ruling at 9 cents per pound from first hands to jobber—an exceedingly high price, but perhaps a justifiable one, because there is a very light stock.

The same cannot be said of futures, however, for an enormous crop is in prospect. The price has advanced, in spite of this, about $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound, and the reason appears from the following extract from the "Oxnard (Cal.) Daily Courier":—

An unparalleled advance in lima beans was made yesterday afternoon, the price jumping from 5.15 to 5.50 at one leap. The advance followed a meeting of the directors of the Lima Bean Growers' Association yesterday. Charles Denlon, president of the association, said to-day: "The Board of Directors talked over the bean situation and decided that as other commodities had made material advances, lima beans should be bringing a better price."

Not because of short present or prospective supply. Not because the former price did not yield the grower an adequate profit, but merely because other products had advanced, and these swine that controlled lima beans "thought they could get it," too. And yet this is not an illegal combination, because the Sherman anti-trust law, out of consideration for the worthless farmer, provides that no combination among farmers to control prices shall be considered monopolistic.

The Government's investigation into the reason for advancing food prices is a good thing, though it will probably not amount to much outside of acting as a preventive in some cases. It will probably not amount to much because no advance in the price of food is illegal unless done through a combination of holders who are ordinarily competitors. Most of the advances which have occurred so far have not been made by combinations, but by individuals working in concert not because of an agreement, but only because they all saw their chance at the same time. The underlying cause was greed, which no law or investigation can eliminate or cure.

It is well to remember that the fact that two or more holders of a given food product advance the price at the same time, is only evidence of illegal combination. It is not proof of it, because the same chance to increase profits opens for all holders at the same time, and that they all took it simultaneously is merely a coincidence. The Government must prove a great deal ices from advancing.

Gap, Pa., August 19, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Can you give us any information about the Public Collection Agency, 904 Betz Building, Philadelphia?
Yours truly,

J. P. MARSH & SON.

We know very little about this con-is a name assumed by another collection agency for some purpose of its own.

When we received the first inquiry about it we investigated at the Betz Building and found no such concern in the directory. The management of the building disclaimed any knowledge of it, though its solicitors were then giving a Betz Building address. We advise do-

These Manufacturers Will Graciously Send Retailers Advertising and Display Matter

In various ways the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" is just now directing the especial attention of its readers to the question of pushing nationally advertised products to the front. Monthly Contests are being held on the subject, and a half-page advertisement published weekly contains arguments by nationally-known manufacturers for featuring nationally advertised products in order to get the benefit of the extensive advertising which these manufacturers are doing for them. In connection with this, retailers will want to know what manufacturers will supply advertising and display matter free of charge, hence the following list:—

The A. Colburn Co., Philadelphia. Furnishes recipe booklets, advertising envelopes, blotters, printed matter with dealer's name and address thereon, upon receipt of introductory order; particulars on application. To dealers carrying the line, supplies metallic signs, large muslin display signs for salesrooms and printed matter. Spices.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

There has been practically no advance in spot teas within the past week; the market has been steady to firm. The advance has probably been greatest on low-grade Congous than on any other spot tea. Before the war they had advanced 2 to 3 cents per pound, by reason of scarcity; and they have advanced an equal amount since. Future teas are exceedingly unsettled, by reason of lack of definite information about shipments, war insurance, etc. No accurate prediction can be made for the immediate future.

Coffee.

Rio and Santos coffee are weaker and have lost about half of the 2-cent advance which they have made since the war opened. Shipping is opening between our ports and Brazil and some coffee is coming out of Brazil. Foreign exchange and the other factors are also settling themselves, and that has brought about the decline. Mild coffees are fairly steady, but the tone is easier. Mocha is the highest thing, quotations green and in a large way, going all the way to 29 cents. This is an advance of 6 cents per pound within a few weeks. Actual scarcity is the main reason, though the war had much to do with it. Java is also higher.

Sugar.

The sugar market is a hard thing to forecast. There has been no further advance during the week, and granulated is still quoted on a basis of 7½ cents. Raw sugar is quoted at 6.52 cents, which is an unprecedented price. The demand from abroad still continues, with the prospect of an European crop no better. It is hard to see how sugar can get much lower for some time, unless the war should suddenly cease and everything quickly straighten out. The consumptive demand for sugar has been enormous; at present it is inclined to be dull.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged and dull, but situation is firm. Compound syrup is seasonable, quiet at prices unchanged for the week. Sugar syrup is unchanged and dull, molasses quiet at ruling prices.

Fish.

The fish market is still very much excited. Shore mackerel have advanced about $7 per barrel and Irish fish probably half as much. In fact, it is difficult to quote a price. Nothing is doing in fall caught Norways as yet; and there is no prospect of anything as yet. Cod, hake and haddock are dull on spot; futures not named as yet. Salmon on spot, meaning red and pink Alaska, is much higher, both ruling about 15 cents above the price of a short time ago. Actual scarcity is the main factor. New pack salmon is not priced as yet. Domestic sardines are about 25 cents higher than a short time ago, due to poor fishing. Imported sardines are just as much up in the air as they have been—exceedingly scarce and exceedingly high.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes, both spot and future, are higher by reason of short pack prospects. The war has nothing to do with it. The advance is 2½ to 5 cents per dozen, both spot and future. The growing conditions are not very favorable, and the season late, but it is still possible to make a big pack, so that he who speculates in tomatoes is taking a big chance. Corn is 5 to 10 cents higher also, mainly Southern corn, due to bad growing conditions. Peas dull and unchanged. Unusually low prices have been named on Southern peaches this year, due to the large crop—70 cents, as against a usual price of about 80. California canned goods are dull and unchanged. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Future prunes are fairly steady at the decline previously announced. Spot prunes and futures both are dull and neglected. Peaches are very cheap and are easy even on the present basis of price. Apricots are off because of uncertainty as to the foreign demand, which is the main factor. The California raisin operators had everything arranged to open new prices much higher than normal, as they thought there were going to be no currants, and they expected to reap the benefit. Greece, however, on Wednesday guaranteed the war risks on currants, so that the California scheme will be defeated. This has caused no special change in currants as yet, but surely will.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are weaker by a decline of 10 to 15 cents per bushel. Collapse of a totally unwarranted inflation is the reason. Marrows are unchanged, high and firm. California spot limas are still at 9 cents, by reason of scarcity, and the price may go to 10. There are almost none left. Futures are about 1 cent above normal, in spite of enormous crop prospects. Pure greed is the only reason for the advance in California future limas. Green peas are still high at about $2.10 in a large way.

Butter.

There is very active trading in butter and the line is firm at prices ranging about a cent a pound over last week. The consumption of butter is large, as the make is not quite up to normal for the season. The quality arriving is good. The market is in a very healthy condition and if we do have any change in the near future it will probably be a slight advance.

Eggs.

The receipts on eggs are very light. The consumptive demand is good. The speculative demand is also good, with the result that there is an advance of from 1 to 2 cents on both storage and fresh. The fact that there is quite a good many eggs exported makes a very firm selling and we are likely to have a further advance.

Cheese.

The make of cheese is lighter than usual at this season. The consumptive demand is very good. There is also a good demand for speculation. The market has advanced 1 to 1½ cents per pound during the week on all grades. We look for a continued good consumption, but not much change in price in the near future.

Smoked Meats.

Smoked meats are meeting with good consumptive demand at prices ranging about ¼ cent higher than last week on the whole line. Both pure and compound lard are in good sale at prices ranging the same as last week. Barreled pork is firm at an average of 50 cents advance per barrel. Canned meats are about 10 per cent. higher. Dried beef remains unchanged.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

Trading in evaporated apples is at a complete standstill, owing to the war conditions. Business with Europe has been cut off entirely, and this is keeping all the exporters out of the market, either as buyers or sellers.

The future market is nominally 5¾ to 6 cents for prime quality in 50-pound boxes, October-November shipment, with choice at ½ cent per pound higher, and the usual average for cartons. It is to be hoped that the situation will clear up before October, but until things look brighter local dealers prefer not to trade at all.

Raspberries are also weaker, in line with other dried fruits, and 20 cents, f. o. b. in barrels, would probably be accepted for odd lots of new goods here and there.

C. C. HALL.

Rochester, N. Y.

Imported Fish Specialties.

This is probably the first time ever since we started to write this market report that we are at a loss to know what to say. Never before in our recollection has there been such an enormous lot of business done in our line in so short a space of time as during the last few weeks. So great indeed has been the demand in most of our lines, that we had to execute orders in rotation, as they came in, and give proportionate quantities. We are, of course, going to get some more goods, but what we are going to get, how much we are going to get, when we are going to get them, and what we will have to pay for them is rather problematic.

While the rate of exchange has fallen somewhat, it is still a very great many per cent. higher than under ordinary circumstances. All letters of credit have been cancelled by the bankers, and this situation has not changed as yet. While some of the plants and factories where we get our goods from in Europe may still be open, we know that most of the workmen, and in a great many instances, most of the managers and proprietors have had to go to war. We know of some instances where large factories have been closed because there were no workmen and no managers. While there may be crops in the field there is no one to harvest them. Consequently, we shall be unable to get those goods.

The business in herrings has not shown any great excitement. The weather was too warm for that, but unless we can get supplies, prices of stocks now on hand must show an increase before long. We have just had a cable from Norway from our friends, telling us that fishing has ended. Whether this ending of the fishing has been occasioned by the fishermen being afraid to go out to catch more fish, we cannot tell. It does not look as if the prices for Norway mackerel will be very cheap, nor will the supply be very large.

In imported sardines an enormous business has been done, and while prices have been advanced, the percentage advance in sardines has certainly been very reasonable. Most of the people on our line have shown a very fine spirit and have let the trade take advantage of the opportunity to buy sardines at prices very little advanced over the old prices, merely covering war risk and excess rate of exchange, without taking into consideration the enormous scarcity that must prevail before long, new supplies are not forthcoming, and there is very little chance of more supplies coming forward. Naturally, stock of sardines in first hands has been very much reduced, and it is very much lower par.

Chums and Pinks.—The situation is so firm that prices are not good overnight. This applies with special force to the chums and pinks. Trade is building to-day for pinks as high as 75 cents; chums 75 cents and upward, with packers even declining to book otherwise than subject to approval of the prices. The spot chums are entirely cleaned up. New pinks are arriving but shipments will be somewhat held up, as one cannot ship out until the pack is determined, in case it should be necessary to pro rata orders.

Medium Reds and Cohoes.—So far spot halves of last year's packing is on hand. New pack will arrive during September and October.

Red Alaska.—New pack is now arriving—packers asking $1.40 to $1.50 for tallies; $1.75 for flats; $1.15 for half pack. Pack is understood to be fairly good.

Sockeyes.—Pack is about over and will be about one-fifth of last year's pack. Prices are expected to be the same as Columbia River chinooks, practically about $1.95 for tallies; $2.10 for flats; about $1.30 for halves.

Standard Canned Goods.

Local rains last week broke the drought in spots, here and there in tomato growing sections of Maryland and the adjoining States, but there was not enough of it where rain was most needed. The large buying in the previous two or three weeks broadened this week, and the buying orders for sizes of tomatoes came freely from sections excepting the South, increasing in point of number as well as quantity toward the close of the week. There has been no demand for export, as usual, and none is expected here for obvious reasons. What the future will produce from that direction remains to be seen.

regardless of any foreign demand, now looks like the market will be during the fall season.

The bulk of the buying of tomatoes for prompt shipment, with an insistent demand for September deliveries, though the canners are not inclined to book orders at this time so ahead excepting at higher prices. They are apprehensive of the crop developments, and do not show their usual tendency to book orders to the same extent as in ordinary seasons. Besides, there are rumors of possible higher prices coming for empty cans based on a large advance in the cost of pig tin solder used in the manufacture of them. The market situation about tomatoes is interesting from every viewpoint, and it is well worth close attention.

One of the first results of the war road, in connection with American canned goods, is the big, sudden advance this week in the price of baked beans, about 20 cents per dozen, caused by the large buying of the dried beans for export, thereby greatly reducing the available supply for canning purposes. Sweet potatoes are a shade higher this week and string beans are firmer. The corn was fairly active again. In the other lines of vegetables there are only the usual daily small orders, and there are no special price changes in any of them.

The peach canning season is on, and the quality of the Maryland fruit is expected to be much better than for several years. The orders coming in now are mostly for unpeeled pie peaches and for peaches in water, for which the prices are attractive and the quality is satisfactory. Apples are being canned and the packers are looking forward to pears, which will not arrive until late in September. The continued buying of all berries and cherries in all lots is wearing away the stocks of them appreciably, and some further advances in prices are noted this week. Your stocks of canned fruits in a portable position for your fall and winter trade, you will need them. Oysters continue firm with a fair demand this week.

Rice.

In view of the horrible conditions prevailing over practically all of Europe, no one can yet tell what will be the consequences of this terrible conlict from a financial, commercial and industrial standpoint. Underneath this perplexity one cannot help feeling that great commercial and industrial gain must inure to this country on account of the successful crops which we are enjoying and the short supplies abroad, making it necessary for Europe to draw on us for their food supply.

Already this situation is affecting the market for rice, our home product, and prices have advanced a full cent per pound, with every prospect of a much higher range than has existed for a long period. This condition of affairs naturally begets a strengthening spirit of optimism and the outlook, therefore, points to a very strong situation, which must hold for some time, or, at least, until there is a heavy accumulation of rough rice, which would be likely ultimately to follow a lower plane of values because of the natural weight of oversupply and lessened demand.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast report slow movement, partly due to lack of supply and especially to the sharp advances in the rough market. At New Orleans prices have again advanced and are very strongly held, as everything is being taken up as fast as milled.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas the planters have command of the situation and are securing full prices for their rough. Rains are interfering with the cutting, so that rough is coming in very slowly.

MARKET NOTES.

Peaches have a wide range, chiefly because of varying quality—10 cents up to $1. There is a large quantity of small badly flavored peaches about. The demand is good.

Delaware and Maryland grapes are cheap. They are chiefly Champions and Moore's Early, and the range is 40 to 50 cents an eight-basket carrier, against a usual price of 75 to 80 cents. The quantity is responsible. California grapes average $1.25 for the small white grapes.

Sweet potatoes have a bad black eye—too many, and Jersey is coming into the market earlier than usual. The present quotation on Southern sweets is $2 per barrel, which is a drop of $1.75 within a short time. Jerseys average 80 cents, against $1.25 a short time ago.

Nearby cantaloupes are at their height—50 cents per basket is top. The quality has been very fair. Colorado Rocky Fords will be along in about a week.

Vacation Doesn't Mean "Rest."—Vacation should mean to you mental activity. You have a "rest" vacation every night as you strike the pillow. You may crawl into bed—but you bounce out of it—seven hours' vacation. The real vacation is the eye vacation.

What do we "see," anyway, those of us that have to be on the job day after day?

Faces and foods. That's about all. But being our bread and butter we make them interesting things.

Until one day a release comes. Vacation morning arrives. Grip in hand we board the boat and the whole scene is changed. Do we "rest"? Of course not. We tango some, row a boat, fish a little, swim a lot, brag at times, but it's all a jolly eye vacation. New faces, new surroundings, new activity. Different food to eat, different people at the table. Different kind of fellows to converse with.

And "the scenes along our way," how beautifully wonderful they are. No matter if they are seen from a railroad car window. That doesn't alter their charm. What a fine thing it is to be so receptive that we enjoy blessed landscape. That's where vacation goodness comes in.

Last September while sailing on Lake George and passing one of its wondrous beauty spots, a friend said to me, "That scene is to me just like a benediction." He was having an eye vacation.

There is one place that you should never miss visiting, those of you that have a day to spend in one of the big cities, and that is the Museum of Natural History. The one in New York is particularly interesting. As you enter this building the Forestry Department alone will be a revelation to you. Such an exhibition will broaden your mind and give you a conception of the "big trees of California."

You Will Be a Better Salesman—When you return from an "eye" vacation, because it will surprise you how often little incidents of your travel will work into your sales talk.

Not long ago one of our clerks was relating to a customer what to him was a most unusual sight in the city of Philadelphia on a Saturday morning. He saw hundreds of well-dressed women going to market, each carrying a basket. The lady addressed happened to be a Philadelphian and she immediately became interested.

Get away from your home town and take an "eye" vacation.

War Prices Halted

Many items in our line have advanced. The cost of living will average higher; still there are a few bright spots for those with a limited purse. Here is an opportunity

BLUE DOT EXTRA SIFTED PEAS—With most everything in the food line advancing, here is an opportunity to buy a line of Canned Peas, at extremely low prices, in fact as low in price as similar goods have been sold for several years. We believe, in a short time, these prices will look cheap. Extra Sifted, Maryland grown, small and tender, per doz., at 85c.

BLUE DOT SIFTED PEAS—This is the same quality as noted above, only a size larger, free from yellows, tender and excellent value, to be retailed at 10c.; per doz., at 75c.

ALASKA EARLY JUNE PEAS—Here is a lot of Maryland-grown Peas, free from yellows, good full cans. There are some hard Peas in this lot, but we consider them very good value. Price, 65c. per doz.

Dry Goods—Notions—Knit Wear

Sellers at the Notion Counter.

Tulle veils, with chenille spots, in designs a little irregular, are those which are most worn by the best dressed women.

The large collars of muslin, piqué and linen have become too common; the pleated ones of soft tulle are prettier and more becoming, and they are so perishable that they will remain the perquisite of those who can afford to be exclusive.

No longer is the amber necklace in favor. One made of large tortoise shell beads is preferred at present, and sometimes the beads are incrustated with designs done in gold. With the light colored shell is seen a finely carved design in jade, and from this, in front, hangs a tassel in bright colored silk.

In connection with the new display stand being put out by the manufacturer of a popular dress fastener, is an indicator that should be of much help to the salesgirl.

This indicator is so arranged that when one hand points to a certain fabric mentioned on the dial, the other unfailingly shows the correct size fastener to be used for that particular material. This is something entirely new, is the only thing of its kind, is simple in operation, important in results, absolutely accurate and saves much trouble for the notion clerk.

A bias fold tape, quite an important item at the "notions," referred to as "trade builders," is also a great help in selling cambrics, muslins, lawns and every sort of cotton piece goods. These tapes are also said to be the prettiest trimmings for children's dresses and aprons, for women's dresses, negligees, aprons and all other washable garments. The time-saving element makes an unailing appeal. A busy woman finds that she can make twice as much underwear or twice as many children's garments in a given time if she uses ready folded bias seam covering instead of clumsy, old-fashioned methods of finishing.

Possibility of Standardizing Union Suits.

Advices from New York are to the effect that there is a well-defined tendency among many of the buyers to standardize their orders of union suits for next season. The different types of construction of this class of underwear has made a confusing situation for both wholesalers and retailers. To be sure, the manufacturers of certain well-known brands are firmly of the belief that their particular arrangement of the crotch proposition is the best which brains—if not located in the same place—and ingenuity can devise. However, there is a difference of opinion on this point, and there will be a determined effort made to have the goods designed and made up according to a standard type.

It is demonstrated that there are at least four different patterns classified on the basis of crotch construction, not to mention the various garments made by different manufacturers under each one of these models. There is, for example, the type with the opening down the inside of the leg, another with the opening down one leg, still another with the opening down the outside of the leg, and finally the type with the so-called symmetrical or central opening.

The question is therefore to decide on the type or types on which buyers can most largely concentrate. As far as can be learned, decisions made by some buyers, with this idea of getting at some sort of a standard, tend to favor the construction under which the larger number of suits are made, namely, that with the central opening. A leading nainsook suit which has been widely advertised and in which a large business has been established, is of this general type, and there are a number of well-known knit suits likewise that come under this head. What has become of the Cooper litigation, the settlement of which should have a tendency to clarify the "opening" desired? Such a knotty question, in judicial eyes, at least, may be considered of greater importance than it is in reality. The court's delay is being rightfully criticised.

Steady Advances in Dress Materials

Lightweight staple worsteds have been advanced $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 5 cents a yard; the better grades of heavyweight fancy worsteds 5 to $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents a yard; all ranges of fancy woolen suitings $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents a yard. Serges, $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents a yard. The leading German broadcloth line has been advanced 20 per cent., the stock goods held by the largest French houses marked up 5 to 10 per cent., and several leading lines of French dress goods were withdrawn from sale for spring, 1915, delivery. English manufacturers announce their mills are running and that they will make deliveries in spite of the war. The better grades of domestic dress goods are in sharp demand and merchants are getting busy placing orders.

Linens Scarce and High.

On all linens for immediate delivery the demand is abnormal. The prices for Russian crash are fully 50 per cent. dearer than before the war in Europe became general. Linen canvas and padding are advanced again. Handlers of German, Austrian, Russian, French and Belgian goods obtained the highest mark-ups, because the chances of procuring additional quantities from producing centers are considered very remote. Linens that were not figured as desirable a few weeks ago and fabrics that have been in the hands of importers for a long time, were absorbed readily. On plain white linens an advance of 20 per cent. was paid. Goods of this kind have not been in active request for months, but now all is changed. Odd widths and patterns that would not be given a second glance a couple of weeks ago were snapped at prices asked without a question. Irish and Scotch linen stocks will doubtless be replenished, but prices are going to be high for a long time to come. During last week prices on these goods were uplifted 10 to $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Protection of Trade-Marks Regrettable.

Legal measures instituted to protect established trade-marks or brands are necessarily of pertinent interest to every general merchant. The appended explains itself:—

New York, August 14, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In reference to the decree received by this company against Lucien J. Freud in the United States Court, you have treated the matter very ably. It gives to every fair retailer an insight of what is improper and it also gives notice to the unfair dealer that if he persists in practices like these he will involve himself in trouble.

We regret that we must do what we have done to sustain the integrity of our mark so that it is not imposed upon, to the detriment of the buying public and ourselves. We will be very thankful when litigations of this kind will become unnecessary, and we hope that every merchant will act justly by us and everyone with whom he deals, so that corrections of this nature are needless. The article that you have written regarding this issue should receive wide notice, as the matter is lucidly treated and should be of great benefit in educating merchants to do business in a fair and upright way.

Yours very truly,

THE B. V. D. Co.,
Abraham Erlanger, President.

Official Sweater Scale Sizes.

A dependable scale for sweater sizes has been a matter which has engaged the attention of the experts of the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association for some time. Their results are formulated in the following official statement:—

Philadelphia, August 7, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—For several years a committee on scale of sizes of men's and boys' sweater coats has been working with a view to standardizing the sizes of these goods. The committee has had numerous conferences and voluminous correspondence with wholesalers and manufacturers for the purpose of securing a free interchange of views on the subject, so that the scale, when finally adopted, should represent the views of the majority of the trade who are anxious to have a fair scale of sizes adopted.

It was realized that the adoption of a scale was rendered difficult by the fact that the final size of the garment depended a great deal on the quality and elasticity of the material and the kind of stitch used in manufacturing. The committee realized that the size depended largely on these elements, but at the same time the size situation has been so unsatisfactory that a standard scale was felt necessary in the interest of consumers, retailers, wholesalers and manufacturers. A tentative scale was made public in January, 1914. This brought about considerable criticism and information enabling the adoption of a final scale on July 15, 1914.

Yours truly,

THOS. A. FERNLEY,
Secretary-Treasurer.

The official sizes were published in this journal, issue of July 27th.

Western Wholesale Stocks O. K. Normal Requirements.

Advices are to the effect that Western merchants are in the primary market buying such imported goods as could be had at a fair figure. As a rule they are not averse to taking on American merchandise of the same character, but being infected with the "imported" they are making a high play for what they can get hold of in the European line. They have not been so successful in their energy warrants. On this and other points Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of the goods trade, says: "Dry goods trade has been stimulated during the week by efforts of merchants to cover their requirements for the next few weeks of imported merchandise, and domestic merchandise where imported ingredients or raw materials are needed for the manufacture. Wholesalers are restricting the distribution of imported stock of merchandise that are about to be depleted in order to divide them up as much as possible among their customers. Wholesale stocks in general are in good shape to take care of normal requirements for the immediate future. Pri- have advanced on several lines of imported goods to cover the increased change and the advance of nearly per cent. in ocean freight rates high war insurance.

"Dyestuffs are practically all made in Germany and the quantity on hand in this country is very small, only enough to last two or three months, due to the fact that they deteriorate with age, consequently textile manufacturers are making a very serious complication in regard to future production. There are not so many merchants in the market from the cotton growing States who would have been here under normal conditions, and those who were operated conservatively. Many merchants from all other sections have entered the market and have bought what they needed for the next few weeks. The total volume of business for the week compares favorably with that of the corresponding period a year ago.

The weekly review of trade by J. V. Farwell Co., Chicago, follows: "The stability and adaptability of American merchants is being most strongly evidenced by the quickness and calmness with which they have conformed to changed business conditions, brought about so unexpectedly by the European war. The 'sit-tight-and-don't-rock-the-boat-idea' in handling the situation has met with speedy and intelligent response. Merchants in large numbers from all over the country are coming to market only to buy merchandise, but to gain rate first-hand information in regard pricing their stocks for immediate future sale. The stringent conditions in the dress goods field occasioned the shutting off of importations of nan dyestuffs has given an impetus to the selling of colored dress goods domestic manufacture.

On account of the impossibility of bringing foreign goods and the more normal demand on certain fabrics, as broadcloths, fine French serges, and other goods in which foreign manufacturers lead, prices of ready-made garments are bound to be higher. Increase is also due to the fact that fabric yardage has increased 20 to 25 per cent. on account of long coats and fuller skirts. One leading garment maker has advanced its broadcloths 20 per cent. Others are notifying customers they can take no orders for delivery after September 1st to 15th."

White Goods in Strong Demand.

White goods have become exceedingly popular and will probably be worn freely in the late fall. Merchants and jobbers in the market for everything in these lines, trading has been active and prices have advanced. Organdies for spot delivery in the primary market advanced nearly 2 cents a yard in gray. On finished goods all prices being obtained, some of the finest imported goods having advanced 20 to 25 cents a yard on small sales. There is a demand for dimities, both in cords and checks; piques, principally in narrow-wales; fine ratines and rice cloths. Demand is very unusual at this time of the year.

Call for white ratines is also exceedingly active and inability to supply immediate requirements led to the placing of orders to be delivered as late as October 1st. Narrow wale piques are going rapidly and sales of dimity cords in larger quantities than for years. Merchants are sorting up their lines of fine linens and Persian lawns, besides getting fairly good lots of organdies and muslins. Lines of novelty voiles, running from 14½ to 22½ cents, have been ordered better than anticipated. Ratine and muslin are wanted in the new styles, both in stripes and checks. Lace goods are also being sold generously, and will undoubtedly be wanted for many purposes supplied hitherto by real

New Fabrics and Colors for Fall.

One of the most distinctive features which govern the trend this fall are the numbers of new fabrics offered for use which differ in weave and coloring decidedly from those worn last season. Prominent among these are the corded fabrics which include Bedford cords and corduroy effects woven upon light and very supple foundations. As velvet is scarce, they will be very scarce articles—that is, the goods, but not the domestic goods—become, therefore, very exclusive and high priced. This being a formula of a high-style expert, should be taken with due allowance by the general storekeeper who is in close touch

If you had been in charge of our shipping department the last two weeks you would not ask whether merchants were interested in our various lines. You would know from the number and volume of orders received that they were tremendously interested and sending in such a rush of orders that we have been taxed to the limit to get them out. It is next to impossible to make shipments as promptly as is our usual custom, but the delay will be so little that we don't anticipate any annoyance to our customers. The Coffee Sales have been very large and we believe it is good business for merchants to carry a full stock of desirable Coffee. There are only a few vessels on the way and great uncertainty as to when other vessels will sail. Some of them are loaded but still remain in the port of original entry, not having started on their voyage. No one knows when they will arrive or what will occur to them on the way. We prefer, under these circumstances, to have our Philadelphia warehouses full of Coffee, rather than take chances on these uncertainties.

The stock of Tea in the United States is the smallest for many years and the extra demand caused by the war in Europe is making such inroads in the stock that the desirable Teas are pretty well culled out. Incidents like the following will illustrate the uncertainty of Tea imports at this time: The German ship "Schneefels" carrying an assorted cargo from China to United States, amounting to about $1,000,000 and containing a large quantity of Tea, was captured by a British ship and taken to Gibraltar as a prize. The ship naturally will be used by the government for its own purposes and the cargo dumped out on the dock or put in a warehouse. Probably in the course of time some arrangements will be made to have it forwarded to its destination in the United States, but you would not want to wait that long to get the Tea that you need for stock. Under these unsettled conditions we believe that it is very much more preferable for merchants to carry a little extra stock and not take the chance of being caught in a corner. The Parke stock contains a full assortment of all kinds of Coffee, Tea, Spices and Extracts, and you can be sure of getting the best service and quality.

Advance of Twenty Per Cent. Spool Cotton. Sponsors to be Prosecuted.

Sharp advances in certain lines of goods were to be expected for ob reasons. Merchandise that is of do tic origin, and on which no reason excuses can be made for increasing selling price to the consumers other on general principles of the Euro war is in another class. Such adva are condemned by everybody and l been made the subject of investigat by National and local officials. A which recently came to the attentio the Department of Justice, Washing D. C., is thus described:—

A circular issued by the Spo Cotton Co., of New York, a nounces a 20 per cent. advance the price of numerous lines of spo cotton, to take effect August 15 has been received at the Departme of Justice. The wholesale fi which transmits the letter stat that in the face of a large cott crop, and the lack of ocean tra portation, it is unable to apprecia the necessity of an advance in pr of spool cotton.

Just what defense the Spool Co. will put up this journal does pretend to know; but the Depart stated prosecutions will be starte once against them and other alleged fenders in different lines of trade u similar charges.

Mens' Staple and Fancy Shir

Men's shirts are always an impo line for the general merchant; and success and profits depend altogethe the selection of his merchandise how it is exploited and displayed. course, neckwear and other furnis belonging to men have a place in department, but of the details later, as the seasons opens up. In s stripes continue to hold their own spite "phony" patterns introduced firms whose long suit is freaks. T is no great or radical change in co ings—the stripings being blue, g ge, helio. black and orange. The ple starched cuff is being strongly favored, and the narrow style is preferred by the manufacturers at least. What merchants and the consumer the ultimate judge—will say remains to be heard from.

A great effort is being made to push the mushroom shirt, but with no great success. In short, it is something of a lost. Cross-bar shirts are in the same classification. Men, as a rule, are partial to such creations, unless they are fond of having lace edgings on their underwear. Tango tucks, pleated cross bars and other peculiar terms are used to describe certain shirt fronts, to which the "Willie boys" are partial—not the staple merchandise. The usual plain and pleated bosoms are, of course, included in the new lines—merchandise always salable and with which the general merchant makes no mistake in stocking. There are several improvements on shirts—cut, fit and adaptability that should not be overlooked in making an order.

Hosiery Imports Cut Off.

It is idle to talk of further increase in hosiery imports as long as conditions in Europe remain as at present. Shipments from Germany are out of the question, and no one can tell how long it will be before it may be possible to receive deliveries on orders which have already been placed, says the "Textile Manufacturers' Journal." Of course, the new business of an important nature is equally impossible, so that imported hosiery as a factor in this market is practically negligible.

Low prices made by domestic manufacturers and a fortunate turn of demand to silk goods had prevented a serious rise in the tide of foreign hosiery imports prior to the outbreak of the European war. Our hosiery manufacturers had held their prices down to the bottom and, value for value, they had beaten what the German market had to offer, but at the cost of profits.

It is stated by an authority from Chemnitz that whereas exports to the United States have recorded only a moderate increase in total volume lately, they have been marked by a radical increase in number of individual orders. An American buyer who visits Chemnitz says that this is indicative of less buying by the jobber and more by the retailer. How long the domestic mills would have successfully combatted the foreign will remain an unsolved problem unless the present war is short and decisive.

Some domestic hosiery buyers have revealed that the market was to be deluged with low-priced German goods, and this belief had dulled their interest in the domestic product. Such buyers are now in a serious position and must be satisfied with such domestic goods as they can secure. The lower duty as it now exists was a dangerous menace to the industry, as it rendered the United States a potential market upon which foreign makers might dump quantities of goods when their regular customers refused them, or when American mills and they must raise prices to live.

Such a danger is temporarily eliminated. European wars afford domestic hosiery mills the highest protection that they have ever enjoyed.

Laces and Embroideries in a Flurry.

With the previous announcement that laces and embroideries had returned to favor and would be generously used in the coming season's wear for women, advices now are goods are becoming scarce. Such merchandise as is found in market is being rapidly absorbed at enhanced prices. These stocks, however, will soon be exhausted, and the shut-down on imports has placed this branch of the dry goods business in an acute position. The lace trade in the fall is the heaviest, whereas embroideries are more in demand in the spring and merchants do not want deliveries before January, or December at the earliest. Nevertheless there has been a rush on for laces during the past two weeks, and there is an increased activity in embroideries, and some stocks of imported goods are about cleaned out. American manufacturers in these lines as yet are not cutting much of a figure.

More Activity in Hosiery. Prices Stiffening.

Buyers who have heretofore been placing hosiery orders in Germany, finding their supply effectually cut off, are now purchasing American goods, and in a large way. They have held off until the last moment, and then in order to cover themselves, domestic goods were bought. This has created considerable activity in the hosiery trade, smaller merchants following the lead. There will be a generally improved demand from now on. It is said that the large retailers who have hitherto bought direct in foreign markets, are not being welcomed with open arms by American factors, a disposition being shown to give them a taste of their own medicine.

Reports of contemplated advances in certain lines of hosiery, such as lisle, are rife; but as yet no increase of any moment have been bulletined, though it is believed they will come along later. Should a general improved demand materialize, as is expected, it would not be at all surprising if higher prices for some lines were posted. In view of this, and considering the situation as a whole, the small town merchant, if he has been holding back his order for any reason whatever, will serve his best interests by not losing much time in being booked up for the fall and winter.

Boots Shoes Findings

Fastening Buttons on Shoes.

Button shoes of certain styles are always in vogue for both women and men. The fall styles, however, show still larger and more varied lines of these shoes than for some time, and they present a trim, natty appearance, which merchants cannot but admire. In respect to the buttons themselves, an authority says they should be fastened on with metal. Thread is used mostly on women's and children's shoes. With thread, the buttons will fall on their side under strain and will give the whole shoe a bad appearance. The metal fastenings will produce the same effect when too long. The metal fastenings will imbed themselves in the leather and quickly wear out the leather at those points. The same is true if instead of the fastenings the eye of the button is extra long. Furthermore, a button that does not set naturally on the buttonhole will destroy the buttonhole quicker than anything else. The metal fastenings keep the shoe in shape better than thread during the side lasting operation.

Uniformity in lasting demands a rigid brace to keep the quarters exactly where they belong in all shoes alike. Only cheap, stretchy quarters call for a yielding brace. In other words, the shoes that are held rigidly during the lasting process, must be adapted to withstand a straining at least 40 pounds. Button shoes are in favor, but in some kinds, such as children's, the cheap button and the cheap fastenings will in due time kill that style of shoe.

The American Shoe a World Beater.

The American shoe is a world beater. Every American manufacturer should nail that banner to the flag pole on his factory. Watch the tremendous development of American shoemaking that is now taking place. During the past six months more new machines, materials and methods have been introduced into American shoemaking than in any former 12 months, says the "American Shoemaker." It may be well to keep a watchful eye on shoe manufacturers abroad. But sight should not be lost, not even for one minute, of the tremendous progress that is being made in American shoe manufacturing. This progress will keep the American shoe a world beater.

Pure Shoe Legislation Not a New Idea.

With all the agitation about the enactment of so-called "pure shoe" laws, which is aimed to govern their construction according to an official or legal standard, it is interesting to note such measures were actually in the books back in colonial days. The Province of Pennsylvania in 1720-1721 not only had such a law, but also made it a crime for a tanner of leather to become a shoemaker or currier. The laws governing the various departments of the business are curious as relics of the past, and it is also interesting to note that Benjamin Franklin was the printer of the law books of the Province of that period.

Chapter 236, folio 201, Section 1 provides that leather insufficiently tanned shall be exported or forfeited. Section 2 says, "Persons using the trade of tanning shall not occupy the trade of shoemaking or currier." In the third section it sets forth that none but tanners shall buy or contract for skins except those engaged in the art of tanning or carrying leather. No leather or rawhide shall be shipped or exported from the Province except by tanners and curriers, according to Section 4.

The price is placed at nine pence per pound for all well-tanned leather, at a penalty of forfeiture of leather and one shilling per pound for all so sold, in Section 5. It was against the law provided in Section 6 to use or work leather before it had been searched or inspected. Shoemaking was undoubtedly still considered a mysterious art, and provision was made for just what articles were to enter a shoe, as Section 7 reads:—

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that no person occupying or using the mystery of the shoemaker, shall make or cause to be made any boots, shoes or slippers for sale but of leather well and sufficiently sewed with good thread, well twisted and made and well waxed. Nor shall mingle the over-leather, that is to say, part of the over-leather being of neat leather and part of calves leather. Nor shall put into any boots, shoes or slippers for sale, any leather made of sheepskin, bulls hide or horses hide; or into the upper leather of any shoes or slippers, or into the inner part of any boots (inner part of the shoe excepted) any part of any hide from which the sole leather is cut, called the neck, shank, flange, powle or cheek, upon paying a forfeiture of all such shoes, boots and slippers, to be divided and applied in the manner directed by this act.

Prices in those days were not optional with the manufacturer or retailer, but the statute generously provided in Section 8, which reads:—

That no shoemaker, or any other person, shall take or receive above a rate of six shillings and six pence for a pair of good, well made men's shoes, and five shillings for a pair of good, plain, well-made women's shoes, and so proportionately for all smaller shoes for any person above four years of age, according to their several sizes, to be set and rated by the mayor and aldermen of the city of Philadelphia in their quarterly court of record and by the justices of the respective county within the Province in their respective generally quarterly session of the peace, on paying a forfeiture of such shoes as shall be sold above the rates in this act, directed and limited, and above the several rates that shall from time to time be set and rated by the aforesaid mayor and aldermen and said justices in their respective courts of quarterly sessions, in manner before mentioned.

In the "good old days" one reads and hears so much about the people evidently believed in a law for everything.

Shoe Manufacturers Worried by War.

Advices from Boston say that practically all lines of business in New England have begun to feel the effects of the continental war in a very keen fashion. Many merchants and manufacturers are in a condition bordering on despair. Not only have they seen their foreign shipments held up, but they have received numerous cancellations of domestic orders. Embarrassment has been accentuated by the fact that it is impossible to obtain payment for goods which had already been shipped abroad and reached their foreign destination. Marked disturbance has been caused in the boot and shoe trade, extremely heavy cancellations having taken place during the past fortnight. What renders the situation all the worse is the fact that leather has been steadily advancing, owing to the rapidly diminishing supply of calfskins, the bulk of which comes from abroad.

As yet no change in the price schedule of shoes for next spring and summer has been announced; but rumors to that effect are not lacking. It is understood that if the supply of needful raw material is curtailed as rapidly in the future as recently, there must necessarily be a revision of prices; or the substitution of domestic goods to maintain the equilibrium. Just how much this will stimulate American manufacturers in these specialized lines to sell or improve their product up to the required standard—unless it is already on that plane and merely price determines the preference of foreign merchandise—remains to be seen. The prices for the fall will not be changed unless on new or late business.

Shoe Manufacturers in Receptive Mood.

Disturbed conditions in the shoe market have not as yet reached the buying merchant. He may have imagined something is wrong, with his judgment affected by the current war feeling, but as yet no definite information has been vouchsafed as to future conditions in relation to prices. It is true that along about this time the samples for next spring are supposed to be ready for showing the trade; but manufacturers are not inclined to quote prices, for the simple reason they are in no position to make commitments absolutely. The tentative styles have been illustrated and described, but that by no means determines the market.

It is expected that shoe merchants, knowing the condition of affairs, would place their orders for the spring; but nevertheless they are not doing so. Higher prices are predicted, but at the same time the manufacturers—wholesalers awaiting their decision—are loath to quote figures they could stand by six months hence, unless the warring nations in Europe would cease their fighting and some sort of a peace basis was agreed upon. From the accounts reaching this country, nearly every industry is paralysed, so far as large operations, at least, are concerned; and the sole market for shoes seems to reside here.

A number of remarkably large orders for supplying the needs of the European armies are reported to have been placed here; but on investigation these reports have been found to be baseless. The daily papers are responsible for all of these supposititious orders, and as they are capable of saying anything at everything—good, bad and indifferent—the source of the information was discounted and disbelieved immediately on the appearance of the reports, the magnitude of which were Munchausenian in their aspect. What a daily will not say on the slightest provocation and on the slenderest showing of facts, is beyond any one's comprehension. So it has been with the shoe situation. As not a single shoe manufacturer has notified the trade they are in straits for anything in the way of supplies, and the only instructions so far ascertainable emanating from the head sources is the effect "all we want is orders."

Hardware Tools Specialties

The Why of Paint and Other Brushes.

In connection with their hardware stock, the general storekeeper, as a rule, has stocks ready-to-use-paints, a subject to which "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has given considerable space recently. Prominent paint manufacturers, experts and scientists have contributed valuable information from time to time and a number of points have been brought out that have never been published before until they appeared in this journal. Of course, with paints go brushes, of which the merchant should be familiar with. He knows many storekeepers know anything about the bristles in a paint brush, and with some varieties of bristles are better for the carrying and laying on of paint than others. The appended, from "Brush and Handles"—odd name for a paper—is it not?—is of value in this respect.

The Chinese bristle used for paint brushes is either white or black and if the black is natural color or is dyed, it is a wonderful dye, as the bristle will hold its color under any and all conditions of painting, varnishing or cleaning. The Tientsin is soft and solid, fairly uniform in quality, but some of it is very poor.

The Hankows are stiffer, divided into more grades, in all qualities and prices. Then the cock chop, anchor chop and superior Hankow are for fine paint brushes. The Hankows and Tientsins are also mixed considerably for some brushes. Chinese bristles are specified a good deal by the purchasing agents of railroad and other large corporations in buying paint and varnish brushes.

In Russian and Siberian bristle it has some advantage in the flag or tiny split ends, which are used for smoothing, cut the paint. This flag is often long and very fine and on the hog it is a protection, shedding the ice, snow and cold. In Chinese bristle it is much shorter. But in making the paint brushes of the Chinese bristle, the best results as to the flag can be obtained by making the ends come more closely together, some dressing their brush mixtures in $\frac{1}{8}$ -in. sizes, instead of $\frac{1}{4}$ -in.

Russian bristle has more of a barb, like a fish hook, with the hook toward the flag. The barb on it helps to prevent the water, snow and ice from working down on the hog's hide. This is not apparent on the Chinese bristle. In a paint brush the barb also assists in picking up and holding a heavier load of paint and makes the flow more even. The Russian bristle will do finer work, will wear longer and distribute the paint better than a Chinese bristle, even if it is of the same size, shape, weight and length. The Russian bristle of this kind costs more money, and it is worth more. But for certain purposes many consider the Chinese bristles the best.

After serving their purpose, with the bristles pretty well worn down, the old paint brush goes back to the brush manufacturer again, is thoroughly cleared, sterilized and processed, and the bristles are used in hair, hand, tooth and other kinds of brushes. There is quite a trade in old and discarded paint brushes, and they are carefully gathered up and command a price. It is said that the making of brushes is full of "tricks of the trade" most astonishing to the layman.

Great Future of American Hardware. Foreign Stocks Exhausted.

From what has been gathered as heard in the hardware trade, the Continental war is causing no great uneasiness, excepting with buyers of foreign merchandise. A. H. Bryant, secretary and sales manager of the Simmons Hardware Co., Philadelphia, when called upon Thursday last by the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," in a general talk on the situation, said:—

I cannot say we are feeling any bad effects from the European disturbance. Our export trade with Europe, of course, is absolutely shut off, but it will be resumed just as soon as facilities are provided for the safe transportation of goods. We stand ready at any moment to resume shipments, and are eager to do so, but at the present time the risk would be on the consignee. Orders from South America are greatly beyond the usual requirements, the trade buying as never before, appearing as if they were acquiring stock sufficient to cover five or six months' needs.

It is known that with the exception of a few lines, the great bulk of foreign made hardware is in cheap goods. Cutlery, scissors; in fact, the greater part of the cheapest hardware sold in the American market, is made over there. The supply is now cut off absolutely, and the trade are now turning to American goods and are buying freely. At any time the stock of foreign hardware in this country is not very large; and in times like the present it is quickly absorbed. Merchandise of this character is strictly competitive and I do not believe there is a merchant handling hardware who is particularly proud of selling such lines. They are the cheapest made, and their low price commands a trade with whom quality is a secondary matter. Now American hardware must be used, and a lasting benefit will result from establishing its real merit among those who heretofore were content with the cheap stuff.

I really believe every domestic manufacturer of hardware will have no trouble in selling promptly all the goods their plants can produce. I am also of the opinion that the manufacturer of any special line which he may have had trouble in marketing simply on account of its higher price, will find his goods moving out more rapidly and selling more satisfactorily. That is, the trade will recognize its merit and it will become a staple article even at the higher figure. There has been no advance in prices on finished goods, but on raw material, yes, a decided increase in cost.

A merchant recently called to see me the other day, a man whose stock consists of foreign hardware, in which he did a large business. His supply of goods had been cut off and his stock shot to pieces in the last few weeks. He went to New York to buy, but found concerns with the goods he had been accustomed to handle refuse to take his order, holding the merchandise for their own customers. The result was he had to turn and purchase American hardware to retain his trade. Here and there a few soft spots appear, especially where the major part of the population are foreigners, as in the coal and mining regions. They are upset and excited, do not care to work, have a little money saved, but are not buying anything at the same time for obvious reasons. All our branch houses throughout the West are doing a splendid business. The West have the riches—the tremendous crops—and are buying generously.

Novel Hardware Poster Display.

Every merchant who is interested in his hardware department sufficient to originate better ways to display or call attention to the stock would find it profitable to give a few of his best thoughts to the problem. One hardware man made a poster display in his store which attracted marked attention and led to increased sales. The idea was this: The manufacturers whom he represented sent him many posters—works of art in printers' ink, some of them as large as life and the store and store windows were decorated with them, and included the National Lead Co.'s Dutch boy painter; Carborundum Co.'s view of Niagara Falls; Sargent & Co.'s embossed signs; Yale & Towne's builders' hardware; Horton Manufacturing Co.'s fishing scenes; Winchester Repeating Arms Co.'s moose and hunting dogs; Starrett & Co.'s tools; Landers, Frary & Clark's household utensils; Firestone, Goodrich and Kelly Springfield Co.'s automobile tires; the Victor Sporting Goods Co.'s poster of Herzog stealing third base; Jerome B. Rice Co.'s seeds; U. M. C. Co.'s pointer; White Mountain Freezer Co.'s view of the White Mountains; Gillette Razor Co.'s life-size signs and Cabot's circle of shingle stains, were prominent ones in the exhibit.

There were hundreds of others, all artistic in their makeup. The collection represented many thousands of dollars spent annually for advertising and was well worth seeing. The exhibit lasted a week, and the dealer's customers were invited to visit it by means of a neatly printed invitation. By sending to the above firms the same posters and other printed matter can be obtained, and it is well worth the trouble of any general storekeeper, either personally or

Anything that will shorten the process of waiting upon customers will give your sales clerks more time to wait upon more customers. The accepted answer to this selling problem is—advertised goods.

Advertised goods remove the necessity for argument. The purchaser knows advertised goods, knows N. B. C. goods, has confidence in them and buys them. Advertised goods eliminate argument and so save lost time.

By one move—the selling of advertised goods—your clerks can sell to three or four people in the time it formerly required to sell to one. Prove it yourself—sell N. B. C. products—they are nationally known—their quality is automatically repeated in every biscuit.

Pittsburg (Pa.) Detectives Out for Price Raisers.

Helping the General Probe by Seeking Evidences of Illegal Combination. Bakers Not Advancing Bread. Big Fruit Crops Means Heavy Waste.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Pittsburg, Pa., Aug. 20, 1914.

Pittsburg city authorities lost no time in following and co-operating with President Wilson in his efforts to find the cause of the sudden and unwarranted rise in prices of food-stuffs. Acting Mayor Swan announced that a part of the city's detective force would be delegated to aid in the probe to ascertain whether or not there is in this city any combine for the purpose of increasing food prices with the European war as a cloak. If any hint of such a combine is found the matter will be followed to the finish and prosecutions made. County officials also are active in the investigation.

A bill of equity has been filed against John Herman, Harry Davis, Charles Bauman and officers and members of the Bakery and Confectioners' International Local Union, No. 12, of Pittsburg, by George Burkarth, on August 16th. Burkarth alleges that a boycott has been made against him because he would not sign an agreement stating that he would employ only union labor.

The bakers of Pittsburg will not follow the example of those of some other cities in raising the price of bread as a result of the war. According to their managements, neither the Ward Baking Co. nor the National Biscuit Co., two of the largest baking firms in this city, are contemplating any change in the price of bread. The manager of the Ward Co. says that he can see no cause for an increase.

State Zoologist H. A. Surface has sent out a warning to the buyers and fruit growers of Southern Pennsylvania. On account of the 'large' crops and low prices of fruit much of it is being left on the trees to rot. On account of the failure of the crops in the Northern country, Dr. Surface says there will soon be an enormous jump in prices. The fact that Europe will also be calling upon us soon for fruit will tend to have the same effect.

Thomas Hanna, aged 68, a grocery dealer of Washington, Pa., died there on August 13th. He is survived by his wife and five children.

Michigan's New Food Law in Effect September 1.

Manufacturers in Michigan and those who sell in Michigan are said to have misunderstood the food law passed by the State Legislature August 14, 1913, governing the stamping of contents on all goods sold in containers. This will cause no little inconvenience and annoyances to the inspectors of the State Dairy and Food Department after September 1st, when they attempt to enforce the law. As drafted, the law provided that the weight of all goods should be stamped on the container. To give the jobbers and retailers an opportunity to sell the great quantities of unstamped goods on their shelves, they were allowed until September 1, 1914, before any prosecutions would be made for infraction of the law. The manufacture of such goods without the containers being stamped, was prohibited after January 1, 1914. Seemingly the manufacturers have misconstrued the law, and think that they may send out their goods unstamped until September 1st. The State Dairy and Food Department is determined to prevent all manufacturers committing any infraction of the law, and the bakers, especially, will be visited, in an effort to enforce the stamping of all containers. Many manufacturers of catsups and meat relishes have been most flagrant in their violation of the law in this respect.

The Science of Retail Advertising

This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

Franklin, N. J., August 5, 1914.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Am inclosing circular which we have issued this week and will be pleased to note your criticism of same.

This correspondent sends a picture postal showing its store to be a decidedly good looking and pretentious establishment—a two-story brick building, with seven or eight bulk windows. The

There is too much display type on the circular. All those boldface lines the top and bottom add nothing to the advertisement. The printer has put a lot of type styles together that one never to have gone together, and detracts from the clean-cut appearance of the advertisement. One headline would have been sufficient—something like "One Week's Bargains at the New Brick Store." Then jump right in and tell about them. I am glad to see that the Zinc Co. have given the regular price of these offerings as well as the reduced price; so many advertisers forget that or don't consider it necessary.

Now I want to show this correspondent how much more interesting he can make his advertising merely by taking a little more time and space to describe his goods. He may not be able to advertise quite so many things at a time, but that makes no difference if he gets more results from those he does advertise. As a matter of fact, if he would cut out some of his boldface lines, he would have extra room enough to follow the plan I am going to suggest to almost all the articles advertised here. Take the first item under the headline "We Also Offer, etc." It appears in the circular now in this way: "Ladies' Fancy Parasols, reg. 75c. and $1.25, now 39c." Apparently this is a real bargain worth playing up. Wouldn't it have been stronger exploited in this way:

Ladies' Fancy Parasols 39c. Regular 75c. and $1.25

A splendid bargain. Come quickly, for we haven't so many. Plain brown, black and white, and other green and red stripes. Fancy and plain bamboo handles and splendid quality gros grain silk.

Of course, I have imagined the specifications, but the true ones would probably be just as attractive. Isn't it certain that a woman reading my description of this bargain would feel impelled to look it up than she would by reading the laconic line, "Ladies' Fancy Parasols, reg. 75c and $1.25; 39c?" It doesn't seem to me to be a matter of opinion, and I should follow this plan throughout the entire circular except perhaps where a list of articles of the same class is advertised, as in the case of American shoes.

How to Make Other Cocos as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so that they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

BURK'S Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

Here's Where I Get in the War.

Say, this is some war, ain't it? Seems to me every time I look in the paper I see where somebody's declared war on somebody else. If it wasn't a war it would be a joke, like a lot of kids scrapping in an alley—whenever one of 'em looks crosseyed at the other—biff, declare war on him.

The first thing these blamed kings know, I'll declare war on the whole of 'em. They'd better be durned careful, I'll tell 'em that, and when the thing happens, they needn't come meechin around to my back door trying to call me off. Butting in to my business the way they're doing, with no reason. What did I ever do to them? I've always given 'em all the advice they asked me for and never charged 'em a cent. I wish now I had charged 'em, and when they come to me again I will too.

I never did like these kings—they ain't real folks. Mamma always kicked about me being intimate with 'em. I used to tell her, "they hunt me up, I don't hunt them—when they come around and ask me to go fishing with 'em, I can't turn 'em down, can I?"

But now it's different. They're hurting my business and unless they call it off mighty quick I'll never speak to one of 'em again.

Only last Wednesday three good big orders that I was due to get, were cut right in half, just on account of this measly war. Cut right in half! The first man I went into wasn't going to give me any order at all, but I soon told him what I thought of him.

"You won't, eh?" I said, "like fun you won't! This is your time to order, and you've got to have these goods. If you don't place your order now, you may not get 'em—not at this price anyway. I ain't going to let you hurt yourself if I can help it."

"All the same," he said, "I don't want to place my order now."

"All right," I said, "I'll sleep right here on your floor till I get the order."

That fixed him, and he gave it to me—for half the stuff he really had to have. All the talking I could do didn't move him a bit—he had his mind made up that it was risky to buy goods with this war going on.

"But why?" I said. "I want you to tell me why this infernal war makes any difference to you. You don't sell a cent's worth of goods outside the town, do you?"

"Sure I do," he said, "I do business all through this end of the county."

"Oh I know," I said, "but what of it? You don't sell in England or Germany or any of those other places, do you?"

Of course he didn't.

"Then where do you come in?" I said.

Well, it was upsetting everything—things were going up, and the United States might get in it, and everybody was shaky, and a whole lot of other pipe dreams that didn't come to anything.

"Pooh for all of that!" I said. "If everybody's shaky it's because a lot of glooms like you get all worked up over nothing and talk like you're talking to me now. There ain't any more reason in this war why you shouldn't give me your regular order than there would be if the King of England got a boil on his neck! It's all durnfool talk!"

But half his order was all I could get. And two more of my customers blew the same brand of hot air at me that same day. Not one of 'em had anything to go on. Nothing I could say made 'em see sense, and I talked some, believe me. They didn't know what was going to happen. Any morning they might hear that the Indians had scalped William J. Bryan and they were afraid. Made me sick!

And when I got home the Friday after that, what did I get from my own house but more of it! "Mustn't sell any more futures because we ain't buying a thing now but what we've got to have!" What d'ye know about that? I went at the boss, too, same as I'd gone at my own customers. He didn't have any more reason than they had—he simply didn't know what was going to happen and until he did he was going to lay low. Drat these kings! I scrapped with him until I saw he was getting sore, and then I quit.

Gee whiz, I hope we never get mixed up in any war ourselves. If we go all to pieces over somebody else's war, 5,000 miles away, anything could happen if we got in a war of our own.

I just might as well declare war on 'em now as any other time, so here goes—I'll do it. It's done—I'm out now to lick 'em all and I'll make molasses taffy and spearmint contraband of war.

Of course, I'm a gentleman, and I have to give 'em a reasonable time to apologize. How long ought I to give 'em? I never declared war on a king before. Lemme see—well, I'll give 'em till 1925.

THE STROLLER.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

All association interest is now centred in the big State convention which will be held at the Hotel Adelphia on September 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th. The programme is varied and full of interesting things. From start to finish it will be of ginger. The programme will be printed in the next issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World." There will be a lot of entertainment, consisting of a theatre party, automobile rides, Willow Grove excursion and supper. There will be something doing every minute. Merchants everywhere are invited to come. If you cannot come for all the session come for at least one day.

The following committee has been appointed to audit the report and award the money to the associations under the Pennsylvania Plan: F. B. Farley, chairman, Philadelphia; C. A. Bell, Pittsburgh; A. Woods, Butler.

Associations throughout the State should get in all their reports of merchandise bought from manufacturers under the Pennsylvania Plan and present them to the convention. There are twenty associations. Every association has a good chance.

George W. Brakeman will represent the Union City association at the Philadelphia convention.

The Pottstown association joined the State association. It is a splendid live wire organization and it is doing splendid work. The following have been elected delegates to the State convention: Thomas F. Storm, J. Allen Brakeman and John A. Bunting. Many members will attend the convention traveling by automobile to Philadelphia. The arrangement for the convention will be in charge of William Lamb, chairman; H. Wesley Gull and Morris Weitzenkorn. They will receive a royal welcome.

Secretary E. O'Brien, of the New Castle association, will attend the convention and he will be accompanied by 8 or 9 members of the association.

Both the Reading and Pottstown associations will be represented at the convention by large delegations of visitors in addition to the regularly appointed delegates.

There will be a big theatre party at Keith's Million Dollar playhouse complimentary to the delegates and guests on Tuesday, September 7th. This event has been arranged by the manufacturers in the Pennsylvania Plan.

The supper at Willow Grove on Wednesday, September 9th, is a compliment tendered jointly by the Wholesale grocers of Philadelphia the Association of Specialty Manufacturers' Representatives. It will be one of the big events of the convention.

The Philadelphia and Frankford Associations have prepared splendid banquets for all visitors.

Headquarters at Hotel Adelphia, the big new hotel, where convention headquarters will be and where sessions of the convention will be held.

Bear in mind that every merchant is welcome to attend the convention. Come and show your strength.

Mr. John Wanamaker will address the convention on Wednesday, September 9th, at 10 A. M. The presence of this king of merchants will be worth listening to.

It will be a big convention; big attendance; big in the quality of delegates; big in ideas; big in results. Come.

Two thousand two hundred and fifty-two policies have been issued by members of the Erie Business Men's Exchange in the Retailers' Mutual Fire Insurance Co. The total line cost of this insurance at current rates would have been $3,398. Erie members paid in premiums and assessments $24,004. They have saved $21,004 in premiums, or 49 per cent. standard rates. The company has paid 48 fire losses in Erie during the past eleven years.

The Erie associations will be well represented at the convention.

The Lancaster Retail Merchants' Association will be represented by delegates at the State convention. This organization is not affiliated with the State body.

The Business Men's Association of Muncy, Pa., has arranged for a Farmers' Day, on August 26th, and invitations have been sent to all farmers in the district to be the guests of the association. Calhoun's Band will furnish the music for the all day concerts. The two moving picture theatres will be free for that day. There will be a big programme of athletic sports with handsome prizes. R. H. Bell, County Agriculturist, and Prof. S. B. Dunlap, Principal of the Lycoming County Normal School, will address the visitors on the main street from 1.30 to 3 P. M. There will be a big baseball game at the play ground at 3 P. M. At 6.30 P. M. there will be a parade of automobiles. Prizes will be awarded the handsomest decorated car and also the most comic one. A big band concert at 7.30 P. M. All stores will close from noon until 4 P. M.

Muncy is a live town and is trying hard to get in closer touch with the farmers. The slogan of Muncy is "Strive here and thrive." Streets are being paved, signs calling attention to Muncy's attractions are being erected on country roads and all through the influence of the business men. Farmers are responding by dealing with the Muncy merchant. Good work.

Mr. Smedley will address the Freeport association on August 25th.

Imports of Madagascar Lima Beans Into This Country.

The 1913 crop of lima beans in Madagascar amounted to 6,047 metric tons, and the 1914 crop will be approximately 10,200 tons. There were 14,014 acres devoted to the production of lima beans in 1913. In 1913 the export of beans totaled 7,539 metric tons, of which 5,897 tons went to England, 853 tons to French colonies, 307 tons to France, and 109 tons to the United States. Quantities of the beans shipped to England are probably re-exported to the United States. The 109 tons shipped from Madagascar to the United States direct in 1913 were the first direct shipments. Further direct shipments of beans to American ports have been made this year. These beans sell in the United States in competition with California limas.

Apples are very cheap—10 to 60 cents, against nearly twice that last year. The quantity is enormous.

Every Way That Milk Is Used

In all the various recipes and dishes of which milk is a part; for table and general household use, and more especially infant feeding, your customers will use Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk and Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk. You can greatly increase your sales if you will keep these brands prominently displayed upon your counters.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Harvard College Devises Complete System of Bookkeeping for Retail Grocers

At First Glance Seems Complicated But the College Says It is Not Too Complete to be Practical. Reproductions of All the Blanks Used, With Explanations of These and of the Whole System.

In a recent issue it was reported that Harvard University, convinced that the loose system of bookkeeping prevalent among retail grocers was responsible for at least some of the failures in that line, was about to devise a complete plan of bookkeeping which would keep any retail grocery business straight with a minimum amount of work. This system has now been completed and a set of the blanks and forms furnished to this journal with permission to publish. The Harvard Bureau of Business Research, which devised the plan, supplies the following argument for the system:—

The Harvard System of Accounts for Retail Grocers is simple and substantial. It is no more complicated than the business which it serves. If properly kept, it will show the vital facts about the business. With less than this no grocer should be content. If the system were less complete it would be less practical. If it were less detailed, it would be less useful. But this system does not require an average daily use of more than four accounts, with an average weekly use of eight other accounts. For some concerns the number of accounts used daily and weekly will be even less.

We would suggest your looking over the forms of the system, especially if it is for the first time, in the following order:—

1. Read Publication GP—the Profit and Loss Statement.
2. Look at the Analysis Sheets—Publications GM and GY.
3. Read Publication GX—the Explanation of the Profit and Loss Statement. This last should become your reference pamphlet.

This system of accounts is based upon the cumulative experience of the Bureau in its country wide study of the shoe trade, its preliminary studies of the marketing of other commodities, and its special research in the grocery business. It is given to the trade in exchange for figures from the books of its users. Such figures are treated in strict confidence. No name appears upon them, a number only. Bulletins prepared from tabulations of these figures are sent to adopters of the system furnishing them.

The excellence of this system is not the only argument for its adoption by you. The greatest argument is that before comparisons can be made between figures from stores and groups of stores it is necessary for the retail grocery trade to have a uniform system of accounts. Not until such comparisons can be made can standards be established—standards, for example, for stock turn, sales force, rent and other items. It is in tabulating the figures and thus establishing standards that our work will be most useful to you. But our success in doing that depends upon the readiness with which you adopt the system and furnish us with your figures.

"Publication GP," the first thing to be read, is here reproduced. In the original it is a printed blank, with dotted lines opposite the various items for the entering of figures showing percentages. It is more convenient to reproduce, however, in this form:—

PROFIT AND LOSS STATEMENT.

|--------------------------------|----------------------------|
| No. | 191.. |
| (Number only without name) | (Date of filing statement) |
| For period extending from..... | |
| 191.. to..... 191.. | |

A brief explanation after each item is given on this sheet. A fuller explanation is given in the accompanying pamphlet, Publication GX, numbered correspondingly, which it is advisable to read also; where especially advisable, there is after each item a notation—"See Publication GX." Ledger items, 30 in number, are indicated by capitals. Note, however, that only 29 of the 49 numbers on this sheet, will be required as ledger accounts by any retail grocer. The other numbers are for group titles or for items derived by adding, subtracting or multiplying other items. Furthermore, of the 29 ledger accounts, probably not more than four will be used on the average daily, and eight more on the average weekly, by many stores.

Publication GP. Supplement Publication GX. Bulletin No. Bureau of Business Research, Graduate School of Business Administration, Harvard University—1914.

Publications GM and GY—large blanks, ruled for the accounting of accounts. They appear much reduced in connection with this article. The following explanations are given:—

FOR GM.

This Analysis Sheet—Publication GM—is a convenient form showing by days the store's operations in part for one month in accord with the Harvard System of Accounts for Retail Grocers. This sheet does not contain all the accounts of the System, but only those that will be used on the average daily or weekly by many grocery stores. A complete Analysis Sheet for one year in 12 months with statement at inventory is provided in Publication GY on which can be entered the totals taken from this sheet together with the items drawn from the ledger or from other sources. The numbers at the heads of columns correspond to the numbers of Publications GP and GX where they are explained, and to the numbers of the complete Analysis Sheet, Publication GY. It is not recommended that an analysis sheet be used instead of an adequately kept ledger, but it may be used in addition to the ledger to give a summary view of transactions. This Analysis Sheet—Publication GM—is given as a model. All retail grocers are invited to copy it or to have printed copies of it prepared. If preferred, however, additional copies may be secured from the Bureau of Business Research at a moderate price.

FOR GY.

This Analysis Sheet—Publication GY—is a convenient form for showing by months the store's entire operations for one year in accord with the Harvard System of Accounts for Retail Grocers. Provision so made for the Profit and Loss statement (as outlined and defined in Publications GP and GX) at inventory taken at the end of the year. Many of the entries in the monthly columns (M) will be taken from the Analysis Sheet, Publication GM. The remaining items, such as rent, insurance, taxes and others, will be supplied from the ledger or from other sources. Any of the entries in the statement columns (W, X, Y and Z) will be totals (added horizontally) of the monthly columns. On the statement at the end of the period these will, of course, be the horizontal totals of the monthly columns on this sheet. The item numbers at the extreme left and right correspond to the numbers of Publication GP and GX where they are explained, and to the numbers of the partial Analysis Sheet, Publication GM. Capitals W, X, Y and Z at the heads of the statement columns and at the heads of the monthly columns indicate the proper place of entry in the various columns. It is recommended that an analysis sheet be used instead of an adequately kept ledger, but it may be thing further. The Bureau of Business Research, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., will send the complete system, including blanks, to any grocer free of cost. To those outside the grocery business the price is 50 cents:—

The general scheme of this accounting system is simple. Briefly, the Merchandise Statement (1-15), through its statements of inventory and its accounts for sales and purchases, establishes the amount of gross profit which the business has yielded during the period covered. The Expense Statement (16-41) shows how the expense of conducting the business is distributed in buying, selling, delivering, managing and in meeting fixed charges and upkeep. The difference between the total amount of expense and the gross profit is the Net Profit (or Loss) from Merchandise Operations (42). To it the net balance of Other Profits and Losses (43) is added (or from it subtracted) to obtain the amount of Total Operat-preserved goods; coffee, tea and spices; dried fruit and nuts; confectionery; essences and extracts; dairy products; beverages and condiments; fruit and vegetables; meat and fish; cigars and tobacco; grain and feed; sundries, such as woodenware and seeds. The accounts for other lines such as hardware, for example, are to be kept separate.

1. GROSS SALES is to be credited with the total daily cash and charge sales of all merchandise, as defined above. Receipts from other sources are credited to Account 43.

If a specific amount is paid by the customer for a container, such as a milk or cream bottle, water bottle, demijohn, molasses jug or box, the amount is to be credited to this account, but, inasmuch as a profit is seldom made on these containers, it is recommended that a separate record be kept of such charges. All refunds for such containers are to be charged to Item 2.

If cash discounts are given by the retail grocer to customers they should be kept in a separate account and deduction from Gross Sales along with Returns and Allowances (2).

returned by the retailer to the manufacturer or wholesaler, nor with allowances made to the retailer by the manufacturer or wholesaler for defects in goods. Such returns and allowances are recorded in Item 5.

3. NET SALES is Gross Sales (1) less Returns and Allowances (2). Dealers who do not keep the returns and allowances account, but simply meet that item when the return or allowance is made, without recording it, will find their total sales figure of the period the Net Sales figure demanded here. This is the item out of which all bills are paid, all expenses met, and all profits received; hence it is the item on which all percentages are based, and therefore is printed on Publication GP as 100 per cent.

4. INVENTORY OF MERCHANDISE AT BEGINNING OF PERIOD is for merchandise only; as defined on page 5, including containers.

This inventory is that brought down from the end of the last period, by whatever method that inventory figure was obtained. For dealers whose accounts were adjusted to this system at that time, it would correspond to Item 11 of ed in addition to a ledger to give summary view of transactions. This Analysis Sheet—Publication GM—is given as a model. All retail grocers are invited to copy it or to have printed copies of it prepared. Preferred, however, additional copies may be secured from the Bureau of Business Research at a moderate price.

In addition to the above the Harvard Bureau supplies the following simple and detailed explanation of the plan, so that it can be adapted to any retail business without any-ing Net Profit (44). The final section (45-49) shows what application is made of this net profit.

In order to maintain the simplicity of the system, no departmentalization of the accounts is made, but any concern which has a business large enough to warrant it can readily adjust the system to show the results obtained in each department. On the other hand, if any accounts called for by this system are lumped together, a confusion will result, which will obscure vital facts.

MERCHANDISE STATEMENT accounts for all groceries and provisions—including staple groceries; bakery goods; package goods; canned and

2. RETURNS AND ALLOWANCES. should be charged, at selling price, for all merchandise returned by customers, whether for cash or credit. The account should be charged also for allowances made to customers for defects of any sort in goods, whether the allowance is a rebate, reduction in price of substitute goods or credit to the customer's account. All refunds to customers for containers, such as milk bottles or water bottles, which are returned, should be charged to this account, but a separate record of such refunds is recommended.

Note that this item has nothing whatever to do with merchandise their last preceding statement. In connection, therefore, with this section, it would be well for all dealers, and those in charge of dealers' accounts, to read or reread Sections 8-11.

An inventory at least once a year is earnestly recommended.

5. PURCHASES OF MERCHANDISE AT BILLED COST is to be charged with the face of the invoices of merchandise as defined on page 5, including containers, without the deduction of any cash discount. (Cash discounts are discounts taken for early payment of bills. Trade discounts are discounts that appear on the face of the bill and are received whether payment is made early or late; they should never appear in any account.)

This account is to be credited with any returns of merchandise made to manufacturer or wholesaler and with any allowance for defects in goods received from manufacturer or wholesaler.

6. FREIGHT, EXPRESS AND CARTAGE ON PURCHASES OF MERCHANDISE includes all freight, express, drayage, parcel postage and other transportation charges on incoming merchandise, whether paid to the transportation agent or to the shipper. If a team is kept solely for hauling incoming merchandise, the expense downs, see Sections 9 and 10. If these items are not kept separate, there will be no inventory entry here, but in Item 12 only.

9. DISCOUNT ON INVENTORY OF MERCHANDISE at the end of a period is obtained by multiplying Item 8 by a discount equal to the average rate of cash discount taken on purchases. For example, if on purchases of $40,000 during the period cash discounts amounting to $400 have been taken, the average cash discount is 1 per cent. If the Inventory of Merchandise at End of Period is $4,000, there is a Discount on Inventory (9) of 1 per cent. of $4,000, or $40. That is, $40 of the ent from Depreciation of Merchandise (10) and that dealers taking no discounts would have no Discount on Inventory, whereas all dealers have some depreciation, whether they record it or not (see Section 10).

10. DEPRECIATION OF MERCHANDISE is not insisted upon by the Bureau of Business Research, nor indeed is any depreciation account essential to the adoption of the Harvard System of Accounts for Retail Grocers. Because of the rapid stock turn and absence of any style risk, depreciation is relatively less important in the grocery business than in the shoe business, for example. What from Net Sales (3). To this profit Cash Discounts Taken on Purchases of Merchandise (14), which is really a deduction from cost, is added to obtain Gross Profit on Merchandise (15). If instead of Purchases of Merchandise at Billed Cost (5) the net cost, that is, with cash discounts deducted, had been used, and a cost had been used for the Inventories of Merchandise (4) and (8), then Profit on Merchandise (15) would be identical with Gross Profit on Merchandise (15). This will also be the case if the dealer takes none of his cash discounts.

therefor should be charged to this account.

Note that this is for incoming charges only, in getting the merchandise to the store, and for merchandise only, and that it is a merchandise charge and not an expense. Outgoing transportation charges, which are an expense, are charged to Other Delivery Expense (24), and incoming transportation charges on office supplies are included in Account 27. Likewise transportation charges on replacements (not additions) of equipment are included in Accounts 24, 30 and 33, according to the nature and function of the equipment.

7. TOTAL MERCHANDISE COST is the sum of Inventory Merchandise at Beginning of Period (4), Purchases of Merchandise at Billed Cost (5), and Freight, Express and Cartage on Purchases of Merchandise (6).

8. INVENTORY OF MERCHANDISE AT END OF PERIOD is to be taken at billed cost without the deduction of any cash discount, and with no cut-down whatever—the original billed cost, undiscounted. For discount on inventory and depreciation and cut-total cash discounts taken have not yet been earned. For cash discounts are not earned, even though taken, until the merchandise on which they are taken has been sold.

What a dealer really does in taking a cash discount is to pay the manufacturer or wholesaler less for his merchandise than he would have paid had he paid later. Not until the dealer has been reimbursed for his payment by his customer does he really get this difference known as discount. If Discount on Inventory is not deducted from the amount of inventoried merchandise, the present value of this merchandise will be by so much inflated; the cost will appear to be greater than it actually was at the time the merchandise was purchased. Hence merchandise at billed cost still in the dealer's stock at inventory, though cash discounts have been taken on it, must be reduced in value by the average cash discount taken. Discounts earned, of course, will be a part of the total of Cash Discounts Taken on Purchases of Merchandise (14).

Note that Discount on Inventory of Merchandise is absolutely different from Depreciation of Merchandise (10) and that dealers taking no discounts would have no Discount on Inventory, whereas all dealers have some depreciation, whether they record it or not (see Section 10).

11. NET INVENTORY OF MERCHANDISE AT END OF PERIOD results from subtracting the sum of Discount on Inventory of Merchandise (9) and Depreciation of Merchandise (10) from Inventory of Merchandise at End of Period (8).

If these items are not kept separate—if, for example, the amount allowed for depreciation is lost in the inventory and no discount on inventory is taken—there will be no inventory entry for Item 8, but for Item 11 only.

12. NET COST OF MERCHANDISE SOLD results from subtracting Net Inventory of Merchandise at End of Period (11) from Total Merchandise Cost (7).

13. PROFIT ON MERCHANDISE can now be obtained by subtracting Net Cost of Merchandise Sold (12) credited with all cash discounts taken on purchases of merchandise. Cash Discounts Taken on Purchases of Merchandise is really a deduction from the cost of merchandise. Here, however, because of the custom of the trade, cash discounts are considered as an additional profit and are added to Profit on Merchandise as explained in Section 10. For the treatment of the part of these discounts taken but not earned, see Discount on Inventory (9).

Frequently cash discounts are recorded in the same account with interest—"Interest and Discounts." This is objectionable, for interest figures are desired in Account 46, and therefore only discounts should appear here.

A record of cash discounts is available but not taken—cash discounts lost—will be found of use.

15. GROSS PROFIT ON MERCHANDISE, the sum of Profit on Merchandise (13) and Cash Discounts Taken on Purchases of Merchandise (14), completes the merchandise statement.

Sell Borden's Milks for Cooking Purposes

BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND CONDENSED MILK and BORDEN'S PEERLESS BRAND EVAPORATED MILK should also be sold by you for cooking purposes. Do not be satisfied to let your customers use BORDEN'S MILKS only at the table; they are better than raw milk for many dishes; for baking cakes, cookies, cinnamon buns, crullers and waffles; they enrich all gravies, soups and sauces. BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND CONDENSED MILK is the best for babies. It is rapidly and completely digested by the infant stomach, contains all the nourishment of fresh cow's milk and is absolutely pure. It has been famous as an infant food since 1857; more infants have been successfully reared upon it than upon all the other infant foods combined, and the hundreds of thousands of sales of EAGLE BRAND have passed solely through the wholesale and retail trade. You have no article in your entire stock that is more popular or more widely known. You will avoid trouble from dissatisfied customers if you will PUSH THE SALE of BORDEN'S BRANDS.

"BORDEN'S BRANDS, both sweetened and unsweetened, are made from the HIGHEST GRADE raw milk by the most modern process of manufacture and are guaranteed ABSOLUTELY PURE"

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants persons, order takers and all others engaged in selling, both as regular and extra force; also with the part of the salary of the proprietor, active partners or manager and of the wages of the office and delivery force proportionate to the time given to selling. If, for example, a delivery clerk spends one-half of his time in the store waiting on customers and in taking orders, one-half of his wages should be charged to Salaries and Wages of Sales Force (19) and one-half to Wages of Delivery Force (23). Similarly, if a bookkeeper spends part of his time in taking telephone orders, a proportionate part of his salary should be charged to Item 19.

20. ADVERTISING should be charged with expenditures for:—

(a) Space in newspapers and periodicals.

(b) Circulars and postage on circulars; space on street car cards, on billboards and on local programmes.

(c) Advertising novelties, trading stamps, charitable donations, window displays and operating and lighting electric light signs. Window rent, if incurred, any miscellaneous advertising, such as decorations and merchandise given to customers to attract trade should be charged here.

Grocers doing considerable advertising may find it worth their while to divide this account, either regularly or at the end of the period, into three, as above—(a) Newspaper; (b) Circular, and (c) Other.

21. WRAPPING AND MISCELLANEOUS SELLING EXPENSE should be charged with purchases of wrapping paper, cartons, twine, salesmen's order blanks and any other item of direct selling expense not covered by Sections 19 or 20.

Note purchases of containers, such as bottles and jugs, are not to be charged here, but to Purchase of Merchandise at Billed Cost (5).

22. TOTAL SELLING EXPENSE is the sum of Items 19-21.

DELIVERY EXPENSE is the expense of carrying goods which have been sold from the store to the residence of the customer or to other destination. It includes all expense incurred in transporting outgoing merchandise, whether by owned equipment or by hired service.

23. WAGES OF DELIVERY FORCE is to be charged with wages of regular or part time employees engaged in delivery, and with the part of the wages of any others, whether in sales force or office force, proportionate to the time given to delivery work. If, for example, a clerk spends one-half of his time in selling or order collecting and one-half in delivery, one-half of his wages should be charged to Salaries and Wages of Sales Force (19) and one-half to Wages of Delivery Force (23). Again, if a clerk in the office gives one-third of his time to checking delivery slips, one-third of his wages should be charged to this account (23). If a shipping clerk is employed to inspect and check up outgoing packages, his wages are to be charged to this account.

24. OTHER DELIVERY EXPENSE is to be charged with all stable or garage expense, including repairs, rent, upkeep, taxes on delivery equipment, replacements of order baskets and a fair depreciation charge on the whole delivery equipment. If the stable or garage is owned, rent should be charged to this account equivalent to the amount it could be rented for to others. All expense for insurance of stable, garage and of other delivery equipment is to be charged here. This account should also be charged with pay-

Trade Interested in Proposed Embargo on All Food Exports. Wheat and Flour Touch Highest Point Yet. No Conspiracy to Advance Prices Found to Date. Investigation Proceeds But Is Not Prolific.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, Aug. 28, 1914.

The trade here are very much interested in the plan emanating from several quarters of the nation to settle the food question in this country by placing an embargo upon all exports until the European situation straightens itself out. As published in last week's issue, there is a bill pending in Congress along this line. It is understood here that large quantities of food products have been stored all over the United States in spite of the large domestic demand for it and the present high prices, merely in the expectation that foreign countries would want it when they got back to working again and would be willing to pay high prices.

If an embargo could be placed upon all food exports for an indefinite time, there would no longer be any incentive to store this; in fact, the holders would have to bring it out and get rid of it within the legal limit or have it on their hands. It is claimed that there is nothing in the United States Constitution to prevent an absolute embargo on all exports in a given line, although there is a provision which would prevent discrimination between the States.

On Wednesday wheat and flour touched about the highest point reached during the war. Wheat touched $1.25 per bushel, with prophecies freely made that it would go to $1.50. The increasing foreign demand and the continued refusal of farmers to sell were given as the reasons for the advance. Flour also touched a high point, with prophecies of even higher prices. In one day some millers advanced 50 cents per barrel, holding spring flour at $7 a barrel in a large way. This is $2.75 higher than before the war opened. The holders of flour are expecting an enormous demand from abroad; in fact, they say this has already set in. The countries that want American flour are Norway, Great Britain, France, Spain, Italy, Portugal, Greece and Turkey. The question of financing sales is still pressing, but as soon as it is disposed of all these countries will begin to buy very heavily, and prices here are almost certain to advance still further.

From all information obtainable, the United States District Attorney's office has found no evidence of any illegal conspiracy to advance the price of food. Roger B. Wood, Esq., Assistant District Attorney, who has been in charge of the investigation, issued a statement during the week that "no evidence of conspiracies to force up the price of food has been disclosed which would warrant criminal action by the Government." This is taken to mean that there will be no attempt to indict anybody.

Mr. George W. Perkins, chairman of the Mayor's Committee on Food Supply, issued a statement during the week expressing the opinion that the present advances in food products have been coming on for a long while, and would have come on anyway in a short time, even if the war had not broken out. Mr. Perkins says it is the housewife who should be indicted, because she went into the market as soon as the papers began to talk high prices and bought ten times as much of certain commodities as she would ordinarily have bought. This is particularly true with sugar, and according to Mr. Perkins it is mainly responsible for the advance.

The price inquiry before Chief Magistrate McAdoo has continued during the week. One of the products investigated was meat, and a number of other packers' agents were examined. The gist of the testimony appeared to be that advances in meats had occurred because packers were holding back the cattle for a better price.

Apparently this disposition extends even to Argentine Republic, where, before the war, beef sold at from 8 to 9 cents against 10 cents now. But little beef is coming into this country from Argentine Republic at the present time owing to the difficulty of financing shipments.

The advances in flour were looked into, and a number of millers' agents were permitted to testify. George A. Zabriskie, New York agent for the Pillsbury Mill, said there was no combination among the millers, and in his judgment but little speculation. He blamed the advance principally upon the housewife who went to the market in large numbers at an outset and by making extraordinary purchases nearly tripled the demand, thus putting up the market on herself.

Mr. Zabriskie favored placing an embargo on an exportation of wheat and flour. He thought it might go to $10 per barrel if the war continued for any time.

Pittsburg (Pa.) Mayor Wants to Sell Food to Consumers at Low Prices.

Asks City to Appropriate $25,000 for This Purpose. Would Make Moderate Profit. Ordinance Introduced to Prevent Advances.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Pittsburg, Pa.,

August 27, 1914.

The Mayor of Pittsburg asked Councils to appropriate $25,000 with which to buy food products to be sold to the public at small profit. The selling is to be in charge of the Department of Public Works, and will be through distributing stations centered about the city.

Another plan to be tried in shape with the introduction Tuesday of the same ordinance which Chicago Councils passed the day before. Its text is as follows:

Section 1. Be it ordained and enacted by the city of Pittsburg, Council assembled, that it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to buy up or cause to be bought up, while on their way to market or to any dealer in such goods within the city, any meat, poultry, fish, butter, eggs, cheese, lard, milk, vegetables, flour, or sugar, fruits or any other food stuffs or provisions with intent to withhold same from sale in an open market in order to create a scarcity of such article or articles, commodities, foodstuffs or provisions, or for the purpose of controlling or artificially fixing or enhancing the market value of said article or articles, and it shall likewise be unlawful to contract for the control of such le or articles, commodities, food-uffs or provisions so as to create scarcity of same.

WITH THE EDITOR

The Postum Cereal Co. has radically changed its selling plan, and from now on will quote but one price on Post Toasties to all, no matter what quantity is purchased. The details, together with the new prices, appear in another column.

This is about the third large company to make this change, and it is obviously becoming important. Whether it is logical to abolish the time-honored custom of charging less per case for one hundred cases than for one case, we shall not discuss. Much has been said on the subject, pro and con, and probably nothing new can be added. The point that impresses the writer is the extent to which large buyers like chain stores will be injured if this tendency toward one-price continues, and what the probable result of that injuring will be. Many of the large buyers, particularly the chain stores, gain their advantage practically through quantity prices. Their expenses are in some cases more than the expenses of the small dealer and if they did not buy cheaper they would be nowhere. The present tendency appears to be to rob them of that advantage, which we repeat, appears almost indispensable. Of course the large buyers can still buy plenty of goods at a quantity price, and for the present there seems no need to worry. But if it continues, what will be the probable result?

Almost certainly the probable result will be a coalition among the large buyers for the purpose of manufacturing and packing the products on which they are denied quantity prices. Nobody can deny that such a coalition could be effected, or that after being effected it could instantly become a manufacturing factor. Remember what happened in Philadelphia to the Sperry & Hutchinson Co. with their green stamps a few years ago. The S. & H. Co. made a contract by which the William Butler Co. were given the exclusive chain-store right to handle green trading stamps in Philadelphia. Thomas P. Hunter, of the Acme Co., at first thought the stamps would not amount to much, but as soon as he saw that they were going to be created his own Crown Stamp Co., which within a few years completely crowded the S. & H. stamp out of the city.

Whether the combined chain stores could do the same with such products as Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes Co. and Post Toasties is a somewhat different question, but that they could do much is sure. Speaking of Kellogg's, in Philadelphia the chain stores, acting for the most part together, have eliminated it from the chain-store field since the Kellogg Co. refused to sell them direct.

The Connecticut Supreme Court has just made a decision which is typical of those that bring courts and the law into contempt and ridicule. The decision is that a man who keeps a restaurant and serves food is not a dealer in food, but a man who merely sells the right to eat! As such he is not amenable to the laws controlling grocers in the sale of food! Really it is hard to discuss such a piece of foolishness calmly.

One E. D. Merrill went into a Waterbury, Conn., restaurant and ordered creamed sweetbreads. They were bad and she was made ill. Later she sued the restaurant keeper under the fundamental law that every seller of food impliedly guarantees it to be wholesome and fit to eat, which guarantee was violated in the case of the sweetbreads, with consequent damage. The case was tried in the lower court, and the woman got a verdict for $6,500, which was probably excessive. On appeal it was reversed, on a ground that the writer has never heard of, and which seems to be the veriest nonsense. More, it is a decided discrimination against grocers. Here is the reasoning with which the Connecticut Court advances the theory that a grocer must be held to impliedly warrant the wholesomeness of his goods, while a restaurant keeper need not be:—

The restaurant keeper's customer does not become the owner of the food set before him, or of that portion which is carved for his use, or of that which finds a place upon his plate or in side dishes set about it. No designated portion becomes his. He is privileged to eat and that is all. The uneaten food is not his. He cannot do what he pleases with it. That which is set before him or placed at his command is provided to enable him to satisfy his immediate wants and for no other purpose.

The true essence of the transaction is service on the satisfaction of a human need or desire—ministry to a bodily want. A necessary incident of this service or ministry is the consumption of the food required. This consumption involves destruction, and nothing remains of what is consumed to which the right of property can be said to attach. Before consumption title does not pass. After consumption there remains nothing to become the subject of title.

What the customer pays for is his right to satisfy his appetite by the process of destruction. What he thus pays for includes more than the price of the food as such. It includes all that enters into the conception of service and with it a small factor of direct personal service. It does not contemplate the transfer of the general property in the food supplied as a factor in the service rendered.

Just as sensible to say that with the restaurant charges for is a place to sit and the use of the light—food is thrown in! We defy anybody to give a respectable reason why a grocer who sells sweetbreads uncooked should be held to give an implied warranty that they are fit to eat, while the restaurant keeper who serves the same sweetbreads cooked should not. Certainly this decision gives no reason.

The Retail Grocers' Association of Jackson, Mich., is much worried up, as well might be, by the fact that Michigan State Prison has established a cannery and will this year turn out many thousand cases of vegetables and fruits. The statement by the secretary of the association makes the matter more important than seems at first glance:—

Now, on first thought, this might not appear to you as anything of the ordinary, but when I say to you, as many have said to me, "I would not use any canned goods for fear I would get a can that was packed in the prison," you will understand how this is going to cut in on the sales of canned goods.

The local business organizations have done all in their power to have the producing of food products in the prison discontinued—in fact against ever starting it. The Chamber of Commerce even offered to buy all real estate owned by the State here in the city provided they would move the prison out of the county, but the Governor and wardens seem to claim that they can pack just as good goods and do it much cheaper than independent packers can that the State is entitled to the business. They contend that their conditions are entirely satisfactory, and that all the convicts are inspected as to their health before they go into the canning factory, which we grant to be true.

The objection made here—that consumers will stop eating canned goods through fear that

Will You Get Yours From the Pennsylvania Convention?

From September 7th to 10th next, in Philadelphia, the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association will hold its annual convention. The full programme was published last week. More live local associations are connected with the State body than ever before, and prospects point to the largest attendance on record. Vital trade topics will be discussed and much important business transacted, among this being the making of the Pennsylvania plan awards. The delegate who attends will get his money's worth, not only for himself, but for the association that sends him.

This is to emphasize:—

1.—That every merchants' association in Pennsylvania should send somebody to this convention.

2.—That every merchant who can should come whether as a delegate or not.

It is going to be a big convention. You'll be sorry if you miss it.

they might get a prison can, can be removed by putting the prison label on everything packed in prison. That would probably kill the business forever, for to most people, rightly or wrongly, there is something revolting in eating food which has passed through prisoners' hands. Nevertheless the labeling ought to be done in justice to everybody.

There is of course a much larger question involved. The old question—what are imprisoned convicts to do if they are not to work and their product be disposed of? Every manufacturer who produces something that is also produced in a prison objects to being forced to compete with prison-made goods. That is because the prison goods can be sold much cheaper. The National Canners' Association is now beginning to stir in its seat over this Michigan incident, and very probably it too will soon enter formal protest.

What is to be done with these convicts? All penologists agree at solitary confinement, without work, is slow murder. If prisoners work, they must produce something more than enough for the needs of the prison. What is to become of it? If it is sold outside, it must compete with other manufacturers' goods; it cannot be destroyed.

We have never seen any good reason why goods should not be made in prisons—the work of making them is a perfect godsend to prisoners—and the surplus sold in the open market. But that it should be labeled "prison made" is hardly debatable, it seems to us.

American Sugar Refining Co. Explains Advances in Sugar.

Say it is Due Entirely to Extraordinary Demand for Raw and Refined, Following Upon Expected Failure of European Beet Sugar Crop.

The American Sugar Refining Co., which is the leading single factor in the sugar business in this country, though it produces only 40 per cent. of the total, has sent this paper a statement concerning the advance in sugar and the reason for it. The statement is directed to the trade, and is as follows:—

This company realizes the difficulties which have arisen by reason of the phenomenal rise in the price of sugar. It appreciates that it may be necessary for you to explain to your customers the present high price of a necessity of life, usually sold at much lower prices than now prevail.

The situation is so unusual as to occasion universal comment, but the rise is easily explained, and we desire to make to you, and through you, to such of your customers as are interested, the following statement:—

In the first place let us make it clear to you that this company sells less than 40 per cent. of the refined sugar used in the United States, and secondly, that it does not own an acre of sugar land and does not produce a pound of raw sugar. It is entirely dependent for its supply upon the growers of cane sugar of Porto Rico, Cuba, Hawaii, the Philippines, Java and other countries.

In normal times Europe has a beet crop producing each year about eight million tons of refined sugar. For example, the European countries, including those now at war, produced during the last campaign the following amounts of sugar:—

| Country. | Tons. |
|-----------------------|-----------|
| Germany | 2,738,000 |
| Austria | 1,710,000 |
| France | 800,000 |
| Russia | 1,750,000 |
| Belgium | 230,000 |
| Holland | 230,000 |
| Other countries | 796,700 |

Total 8,254,700

This constitutes about 45 per cent. of the world's total supply.

The war will mean a serious loss to the European crop, and has brought about a tremendous advance in sugar prices in European ports and an unprecedented demand for raw and refined sugars in this country and its sources of production. We have been compelled to raise our price for refined sugar to an amount corresponding to the increased price which we have to pay for raws.

On July 28th raw sugar was sold at 3.26 cents per pound. On August 14th the price of raw sugar had risen to 6.52 cents per pound. On July 15th this company was selling granulated sugar for 4.40 cents per pound since which time it has been compelled to raise its price to an amount corresponding to that which it has had to pay for raws.

We sincerely trust that the threatened loss of the best crops in Europe will not be so serious as estimated, and that the yield abroad may approach the normal. It is for the interest of refiner and dealer that the consumption of sugar should be as large as possible, as high prices cause a reduction in consumption. In any event this company will continue to offer its sugars at a reasonable margin over the raw sugar prices.

Provisions Added to Clayton Anti-trust Bill Preventing Manufacturers from Inducing Retailers to Handle No Competitive Goods.

Provisions against exclusive and "tying" contracts, eliminated from the Clayton anti-trust bill by the Senate Committee, were restored by the Senate during the week after a long debate. Under this section all contracts by which manufacturers pledge dealers not to handle the output of a competitor would be illegal.

44—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because that is the only way in which you can make money out of other men's capital.

¶ Suppose you are doing business in a town of 5000—1000 families, practically all of which take some periodical, advertising, let us say, a well known grape juice. Most of the 1000 families take more than one periodical.

¶ It is probable that in the course of the month, every buyer in that town sees the grape juice advertising, the object of which is of course to bring orders for it to your store, if you sell it.

¶ How much would it cost you to reach every buyer in your town by advertising? As a matter of fact, you could not do it. There is almost no practical way for you to do such a thing. Yet the manufacturer, with his better facilities, does it, and his efforts will bring steady returns to you if you will meet him half way.

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

Available Literature on Coffee.

By WILLIAM B. HARRIS.

The grocer frequently inquires as to what literature there is on coffee that will increase his knowledge on the subject. What he is looking for is some text book that will give him a general idea of this commodity.

There is, however, very little obtainable that will prove of any great benefit. Most of the largest libraries have a number of books dealing with coffees from plantation to cup, but these are not accessible to very many and much of the printed matter would prove of little or no benefit to the average merchant.

There are of course accounts in encyclopedias, but these are for the most part brief and unsatisfactory. The best article of this description is to be found in the "Grocers' Encyclopedia." This book covers the subject very fully in an account running over a number of packages and the article is well written and accurate. It is also illustrated with color plates which are very well prepared. The book contains besides the chapter on coffee a fund of information for the grocer dealing with almost every article he has for sale, but it is an expensive publication and many of the retailers do not care to spend the amount for a luxury.

There is a small and inexpensive book entitled "Coffee: Its History, Classification and Description," by Joseph Walsh, that is still published, but there is a great deal contained therein that would be of little or no service to the retail dealer.

Quite recently there was issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Statistics, Bulletin No. 79, on "Coffee Production Trade and Consumption." This pamphlet can be secured by writing to the department and inclosing 15 cents. It contains a detailed account of coffee, beginning with the history and the origin. All the principal coffees are described at length and there are tables of statistics giving the production and consumption of the various growths. This is by far the best pamphlet obtainable on coffee and it is within the reach of anyone who cares to read up on the subject.

Besides there are the trade papers that should in no wise be overlooked. Every retail dealer should provide himself with one or more of these weekly or monthly publications. They are continually printing articles on coffee from which the dealer can secure much valuable information if he is on the lookout for them.

A Garnishment Law in Pennsylvania.

Sykesville, Pa., August 24, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I would like to know if the garnishee law will hold good in Pennsylvania? Yours truly,

GEO. R. NULL.

There is no garnishee law in Pennsylvania now, except one allowing the attachment of wages for four weeks' board. There is much reason to believe that a garnishment law would be unconstitutional, for the reason that it would violate the constitutional provision that there shall be no new method for the collection of debts.

The Manufacturers Who Are in the Pennsylvania Plan.

Erie, Pa., Aug. 22, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In answer to inquiries to this office for complete statement of the names of firms on whose goods competitors for awards in the Pennsylvania plan are entitled to make a report, we submit the following:—

1. Borden's Condensed Milk Co., New York.
2. C. F. Sauer Co., Richmond, Va.
3. Freihofer Baking Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
4. Corn Products Co., New York (Karo, Kingsford and Argo starch).
5. Angus Watson & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
6. James S. Mason Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
7. Franeo-American Food Co., Jersey City, N. J.
8. Armour & Co., Chicago, Ill. (Veribest Canned Meats and Specialties, Armour's Bouillon Cubes, Armour's Grape Juice, Armour's Simon Pure Leaf Lard, Armour's Vegetole, Armour's White Cloud Compound, Armour's Shield Lard, Armour's Extract of Beef).
9. P. F. Brown & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
10. Franklin Sugar Refining Co., Philadelphia, Pa. (Carton Sugar only).
11. C. W. Young & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
12. H. O. Wilbur & Son, Philadelphia and Pittsburg, Pa.
13. P. C. Tomson & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

14. Diamond Gelatine Co., New York.

15. National Starch Co., New York.

16. Wrigley, Jr., Co., Chicago (Spearmint Chewing Gum).

17. Stollwerck Brothers, Inc.

18. Miller & England.

19. L. H. Parke & Co., Philadelphia, Pa. (Coffee, Tea and Spices).

Not all of these firms were in the plan all of the year, but records of their goods sold between August 1913, and July 31, 1914, will constitute conclusive evidence to the satisfaction of the judges is required, such as voices of retailers' purchases from the jobber, or jobbers' statements of purchases from the manufacturer, either but not both, within the territory covered by each local association.

The Enormous Apple Crop by State

An apple crop of 210,000,000 bushels was forecast during the week by the Department of Agriculture, which bas its estimate upon the latest report. That is about 65,000,000 bushels more than last year, but 25,000,000 bushels less than in 1912 and about 4,000,000 bushels less than in 1911. The market price to producers in the three months of heavy marketing—September, October and November—last year was 85.5 cents a bushel. In 1912 it was 62 cents and in 1911 it was 69.7 cents. Forecast of production by States (in thousands of bushels) follows: Maine, 5,500; New Hampshire, 1,700; Vermont, 2,500; Massachusetts, 3,000; Rhode Island, 300; Connecticut, 1,800.

Here Is a Good Suggestion From New York Commissioner of Weights and Measures.

He Says Most Retailers Will Adopt Test Weights When They See the Advantage. Plan is to Periodically Test Their Own Scales.

Mr. John F. Farrell, Superintendent of Weights and Measures of the State of New York, has sent this paper a suggestion which is well worth reproducing. It is that retailers who are subject to weights and measures laws keep a set of test weights on hand and test their own scales from time to time. The New York Superintendent's suggestion is as follows:—

Some of the larger users of scales have adopted the plan of keeping on hand test weights of their own. These, certified by the State Department of Weights and Measures, the dealers employ periodically in making tests of the scales used in their business.

Undoubtedly this practice will spread enormously when the dealers at large awake to its advantages. Its value in advertising alone would speedily repay the initial cost of the test weights. The mere sight of a set of these, properly certified, is bound to make a good impression on customers, and in the case of any dispute as to the amounts sold, a test made in the presence of the customer will not only convince him of the dealer's honesty, but will also have a lasting effect on his good opinion of the merchant as a wideawake business man.

It must also be of some value to the reputable dealer to be able to avoid ever having the ugly red "Condemned" tag showing around his store.

Different types of scales would have to be tested in different manners, of course, but with a little instruction from the manufacturer the person using them could soon become expert in ascertaining the accuracy of his weighing devices, and knowing at once when repairs or adjustments were necessary.

Weights can be procured in various size sets to meet the individual needs, and the cost is not great.

Any department of weights and measures would inspect and approve a set of weights, which in the beginning would of course have to be bought by the dealer.

Boots—Shoes—Findings

Expected Increases in Cost of Shoes, Both Wholesale and Retail.

Since the breaking out of hostilities in Europe, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," in this department, has foreshadowed an advance in shoes by the manufacturers as almost inevitable unless current conditions would change. The public and the average general storekeeper have a faint conception only of the dependence of the American shoe manufacturer upon foreign sources of supply for essential material entering into his products. These goods are not produced here and it would take a long time to reach that stage of perfection in many items, if ever. Not only is the raw material lacking, but also the skill in handling it in order to reach the desired results. All these factors are affecting the shoe trade. Whether shoes are to be advanced and the general outlook is set forth succinctly in the "Journal of Commerce," as follows:—

Advances in the cost of shoes to consumers are inevitable, according to the sober opinion of leading wholesalers in New York City and information from New England shoe and leather manufacturing centers, unless the radical disturbances to the production of leather caused by the war are eliminated, which is not looked for just now. But no flurry, incident to the war's effect on business could be found among large wholesalers who were seen. They were viewing the situation in a rational manner, meeting conditions as they arise and not anticipating, or "speculating," as it was expressed by one of them on the unusual state of affairs.

Prices so far have not been advanced, this wholesaler claimed, and would not be, only under compulsion. A great many shoes are coming through from the factories which were contracted for before the trouble began; and the usual stocks at least are held by wholesalers. The wholesalers, as a rule, start out their men in September to the more distant points for the next spring's business. The jobber, in question, stated that it was their present intention at least to send out their men as usual, and prices would depend on the circumstances existing at that time.

Among manufacturers there is said to exist no uniformity of decision, as to whether to send out their salesmen for next spring, or not. It is believed that the salesmen will go out as usual, but a limit may be put on the goods they can sell at a price.

When the war news first came a number of retailers became nervous and cancelled orders with the manufacturers; but the advice from larger retailers and heads of the retailers' organizations has been to the effect that this was extremely unwise, the impression being given that any retailer who had goods on order from manufacturers at the old price should consider himself fortunate, for the prices were to advance. The secretary of the National Shoe Retailers' Association, A. H. Geuting, sent out a notice to members when he heard retailers were cancelling orders. He said he had heard of a number of cancellations of early orders by retailers, based on the idea that the war would prevent the absorption of a good deal of the regular production of this country. "I am strongly inclined to disagree with this thought, and from present indications, I would say that the retail man who has contracted for his shoes at the prices offered through the selling season has for once made money on his shoes. I would not be surprised to see shoes advance anywhere from 25 cents to 50 cents a pair, especially in the calf stocks, the bulk of which hides are imported from Europe."

The secretary of the retailers' organization also counseled against undue alarm and tendency to sacrifice goods. Even though these these stocks should not move as quickly as under ordinary circumstances, and if they are not sold at the time for which they were bought to sell, the investment is a good one, since they will sell eventually, as even the most pessimistically inclined must admit. The large wholesalers and manufacturers admit the possibility of their future business being affected as other lines will be, if business at large is disturbed and men thrown out of work.

The advance in shoe prices will be the result, if it does come, of the increased cost of material, chiefly leather, the hides or skins for which come in such large part from foreign countries, many of which are actually in the war or influenced by it. Likewise dyestuffs are essential materials for the makers of leather, and the position of the tanner is exactly the same as the manufacturers of textiles in this respect, Germany having been depended upon for such a large part of these supplies.

Leather prices have unquestionably gone up already. Reports from the leading market, Boston, show that in general upper leathers, such as calfskins, have been advanced 3 cents to 5 cents foot, sole leather 1 cent to 2 cents a pound, and side leathers about 10 per cent. Orders are being taken cautiously.

General storekeepers, in placing their orders for next spring and summer, should exercise their judgment. The manufacturers have not disclosed their intentions formally as yet, but their position for several weeks has been one of uncertainty and doubt as to the future, and an announcement may be looked for most any time in the near future.

Dry Goods Notions Knit Wear

With Advancing Market Merchants Are Buying.

Perhaps the general merchant in the East, bordering on or contiguous to the Atlantic seaboard, may express some trepidation as to future business; but in the Middle West trade is moving right along at a vigorous gait. The Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co., St. Louis, say they have had letters from a number of customers asking about the situation. After reviewing market conditions as existing, and stating that 90 per cent. of the dyestuffs used in this country are from Germany, with a 60-day visible supply on hand, they conclude by saying: "Our sales for the past two weeks were as large as for the same period last year, which was the banner year in the history of our business. This means that there are thousands of merchants who share our confidence in the future, and who believe that it is good business to buy now when stocks are complete rather than delay their purchases with the uncertainty as to the supply of goods to be had later."

"Merchants from sections where grain is the leading agricultural product are buying more freely than are those from the cotton districts, who, though buying their wants, are conservative. Cotton goods are in splendid demand, developed partly by curtailments by merchants of their stocks in the past and partially by shortage in many lines of goods gradually becoming more apparent. This is especially true of many lines of colored goods, the dyestuff for which must be imported and of which a great shortage is predicted. Dress and wash goods trade has been wonderfully active. No change in prices have thus far taken place."

"Indications are the standard of the silk business for fall will be the satin finished article, goods of the character of messalines, charmeuse, crepe meteor, crepe de chine and satin duchesse. Pile fabrics are gaining favor, particularly erect pile velvets, with blacks and navies leading. The call for plain and fancy velvets continues exceptionally strong. A lively demand also exists for printed warps, Roman stripes, tinted effects and plaids in all classes of silk fabrics. Up to this writing advances have not been made on any of the standard goods excepting velvets, necessitated by the lack of dyestuffs. The lace business has increased considerably. Desirable merchandise is selling fast, particularly the kind of goods which cannot be replaced in the near future, such as German laces. Net tops will be the prevailing favorite for fall. Ribbon business continues good, with a tendency toward the higher priced. Roman stripes are the most popular in fancies, but not to the exclusion of other patterns. Velvet ribbons are developing very strong, and getting exceedingly scarce, owing to the source of supply having been cut off."

Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say: "Wholesale buying has been lively during the week. More than double the number of buyers have visited the market than during the corresponding week a year ago, and in some departments, such as toys, gloves, handkerchiefs, crochet cotton and fancy goods, it has been difficult for the regular sales force to take care of the customers. The shipping department has been taxed to the utmost in handling the outgoing merchandise. Buyers are covering their wants pretty generally for the coming few weeks, and although retailers are not inclined to speculate, wholesalers are conserving their stocks and not accepting orders that appear at all speculative. Prices have remained firm during the week."

Domestic Silks to be a Factor.

American silk manufacturers who have become favorably known in the primary market and among merchants of all grades from the high character of their product, are recognizing their opportunity under the present disrupted conditions of the foreign trade. That is to say, they are making preparations for the next spring silk season, and will specialize in fancies on a comprehensive scale to meet the market, as the firms of Lyons, France, have had to suspend operations because of the war. At present, with the raw material market in an unsettled condition, it is almost impossible to fix prices for the spring.

Merchants Absorbing Spot Stocks.

Owing to pressure of public opinion, as much as any single influence, wholesalers are not advancing their spot stocks in the various dry goods lines. When these are exhausted, however, an increase will be made, as leading firms aver, to cover only the extra cost of bringing the merchandise into this country. Imported goods are being rapidly taken up by merchants everywhere, and consequently unusual activity prevails. Some wholesalers have been fortunate enough to have received the greater part, and a few the whole of next spring's engagements, and in such instances the distribution is reported to be of a lively order.

Threatened Scarcity of Fasteners and Hair Pins.

Regarding the threatened curtailment in the supply of notions, such as dress or snap fasteners, hooks and eyes, hair pins, etc., the subjoined letter from a well-known New York manufacturer and importer says:—

New York, August 21, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—From the standpoint of a foreign manufacturer, I may say that snap fasteners, of which the largest proportion come from Germany, have more than doubled in price, and the imported ones will shortly be out of the market altogether. Of the higher priced ones, there are some made in this country, but it is a question of whether enough can be made to supply the increased demand.

This will render a larger supply of hooks and eyes necessary, and there is no doubt that these can be supplied at practically the old price, or at such a slight advance as will not be burdensome to any one, as there are many good hook and eye factories in this country and we have not advanced our price on imported brands.

On hairpins, the very cheap grades are imported from Germany and the very best grades from England; on the latter, which is the only one we make, no advance has been made. There are a number of medium priced grades made in this country which will supply the shortage of the cheap lines. These should not advance in price, but as they have to be purchased to take the place of cheaper goods, it will naturally lead to the idea that there was an advance in price.

Glass-headed pins, which, in cube form, have been imported from Germany, can be taken care of by the English importation in tube form; and we, for one, have not raised the price on them, nor do we expect to, and I think we can supply the demand for some time to come, at any rate.

The uncertainty of being able to receive shipments and the prospect of carrying on expensive organizations for some time to come on a restricted output, has caused more of the advance than any real shortage of goods or increased cost of production.

Yours truly,
C. H. CROWLEY.

A Run on Sweaters Just Now.

A sharp demand is now on for the smart new sweaters for wear during the next few weeks. Golden rod, yellow silk "Jerseys" made with sashes, which knot and dangle at the back or at the sides, will be most popular. Angora Jerseys, in heretofore unheard of delicacy of weave, are blossoming in a variety of geranium red and pink shades. Mauve and Italian shaded Italian silk Jerseys are being shown, together with a multitude of brown, green, copper, gray and taupe shades, also black and the always desirable and good-looking white sweaters.

Muslins Selling Freely in a Stiff Market.

Sheets and pillow cases are in demand for immediate delivery, and the supplies in first hands are reported as short. Some popular numbers are sold so far ahead that additional contracts cannot be accepted for delivery for the next few months. Jobbers' stocks of staple cotton goods are reported light. Retailers are placing orders freely on women's muslin underwear for October-November delivery. All orders on even the best known bleached goods are of relatively small proportion besides the lines mentioned. Inquiries are noted for cotton goods from merchants and factors in the West Indies and South American countries, the first evidence of the new business that is expected to develop on account of the European cataclysm.

Hosiery Prices Hardening. Dyestuff Situation in Deliveries.

Though the market is firm no advances in prices on general lines of staple hosiery have so far been heard of; but merchants and jobbers foresee the probability of a higher schedule if conditions continue as now indicated. Makers of full fashioned hosiery are doing a much more active business of late, partly due at least to the decline in the import trade. Foreign stocks of stockings are either about ordered for retail distribution or are contracted for on the basis of a later delivery. A number of wholesalers are also of the opinion that besides the shutting off of foreign made hosiery, which has, in certain grades, become a serious competitor with domestic merchandise, especially under the existing tariff, should the European war continue for any length of time, the factories abroad cannot be sufficiently manned, on account of the terrible loss of life, for a long time. Therefore the American product will have the advantage in its own market for an indefinite period.

Recently the hosiery mills have been informed more fully of the acute situation in regard to dyestuffs available for their use, and have been compelled to take action to protect themselves in a reasonable way on their deliveries. A number of manufacturers have now decided to adopt a clause, to be stamped on orders, reading in effect that such orders are taken subject to unavoidable conditions brought about in the dyestuffs situation. This is the exact wording on one order blank: "This order booked subject to war risks. We confidently expect to deliver these goods as stipulated, but are not to be held accountable for delay caused by shortage of dyestuffs or other materials." This action, reports say, has been forced on the manufacturers for their self-protection. Merchants may not be directly affected by this step so much as the wholesalers, but its application will be felt in the retail trade just as forcefully when placing an order.

Kansas Will Survey Mail Order Business.

An effort to reach the real essence of the mail order business in Kansas is to be conducted by the State Board of Health. It has laid plans for a survey, and four college men have been employed to make a list of the orders given by people in the State to the big mail order houses of Chicago principally. The results will be compiled for the information of the business men of the State, principally hardware dealers following up the plan, who are interested in the extent to which Kansas citizenry do shopping of this character. It is an original method of keeping the question alive, but what practical benefits are to be conferred on merchants only such a State as Kansas will attempt to show—if it is possible. Why the Board of Health should conduct the inquiry is a professional mystery.

How to Figure Profits in Hardware.

It is held by experts that profits in the hardware line—that is the merchant's end—should be 25 to 33 1/3 per cent. for general stores. A great many elements enter into the success of a business, says a recognized authority; and also into the question of what profit can be made and what expense is necessary to handle the trade. While it may not materially differ, there are points where exceptions might be made and where the average of profit and the average of expense would be very much higher in both instances than with the average business, and where the opposite may be true.

A business of ordinary volume and location should make a profit of 25 to 33 1/3 per cent. of the sales, and that the expense should not run more than 12 to 16 per cent. of the sales. Where the expense runs over 16 to 18 per cent. under ordinary circumstances it is an indication that sooner or later a failure will be made; and where the profits average less than 25 per cent. the same result is usually true. The great difficulty with many storekeepers seems to be that they figure the profit they make on the cost of the goods instead of figuring what percentage of sales will be profit, and then compute the expense of the sales. This naturally gives the wrong impression.

Not for a long time have peaches been as plenty and as cheap as they are now. The range is 20 to 75 cents per basket, with a very few bringing 90 cents. A year ago peaches worth 90 cents to-day were worth $1.50 and those worth 50 cents to-day were worth $1.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is losing the war advance and prices are probably a cent lower than the highest point reached. Shipping conditions are improving steadily, but foreign exchange, on the basis of which tea is sold, is not yet on a fixed basis, and this is still one of the most unsettling elements. The demand for tea is fair.

Coffee.

The coffee market is much weaker, and all ordinary grades of Rio and Santos have declined to pretty nearly where they were before the war opened. The better grades, which are scarcer, have not declined so much, but are still much lower than the high point. Mild coffees are a shade easier in sympathy. Bogotas have fluctuated both up and down during the week. Mocha is off several cents from the highest point, probably 3 to 4 cents. Java unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

Sugar is easier, mainly because England, which has been a very active buyer, temporarily retired from the market. When she comes back and the demand from other countries opens, it is hard to escape the conclusion that the market will go higher. Refined sugar has declined $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ cent during the week, some refiners going the whole length and others only half. It is possible, however, to get all the sugar one wants at 7 cents. Raws have also declined about $\frac{1}{2}$ a cent. The consumptive demand for refined sugar is at present rather dull.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. Compound syrup is dull and unchanged, as is sugar syrup and molasses. There will be very little demand in these lines for several weeks, though compound tinned syrup is in steady demand the year round.

Fish.

The fish situation is about unchanged. Shore mackerel is exceedingly high, with the situation as to Norways still uncertain. Unless conditions radically change, however, there will be no fall-caught Norways to speak of. Cod, hake and haddock steady to firm and unchanged. Salmon on spot are firm at the advance reported last week. Prices on new Alaska salmon should be named at any time, probably on a basis 10 to 15 cents above last year's price. Domestic sardines are scarce and firm, the run of fish still being very light. No improvement has developed in the foreign sardine situation, though there have been some receipts of Norwegian smoked during the week.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are firm, and some packers are holding for 85 cents, f. o. b., for Maryland 3s in a large way, though there have been no sales at such a price as yet. There is nothing below 77½ cents, however. Crop conditions are not very encouraging. Corn is firm at the recent advance, but without change for the week. The demand is good. Peas are unchanged and dull. New pack apples are available, including New York State, but nobody would pay the New York packers' first asking price of $3 in a large way, and the market is easier on that account. The trade are not at the moment interested. California canned goods are unchanged and dull, as futures are now coming in. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are about $\frac{1}{4}$ cent higher, owing to better demand. This refers to futures. Spot prunes are quiet and unchanged. Apricots are no firmer, though England will take her orders after all. Peaches dull and unchanged on the former low basis. New prices on seedless Sultana and Thompson seedless raisins have been named during the week, on a slightly lower basis than the trade expected, owing to the prospective scarcity of currants. The currant situation is not yet straightened out, it appears. Greece has guaranteed the war risks, but Greece's own credit is none too good and American bankers are not willing to give letters of credit with no other security. It is therefore not absolutely certain that we will be able to get currants from Greece, although probably we will, as all of the shipping difficulties are being straightened out.

Butter.

There is an active demand for all grades of butter, and the market is firm at an advance of 1 cent on all grades. The make is reported lighter than usual all over the country and the consumptive demand is good. No large change seems in sight. This time last year butter was being imported.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm and unchanged, with a good consumptive demand and moderate supply. Stocks are ported considerably less than a year ago and the market is healthy throughout.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm and unchanged, with a moderate consumptive demand reported. Stocks are very short. The quality arriving is fully as good as usual, and the market is healthy and strong.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are firm and unchanged, with a good seasonable demand. Pure lard is firm at $\frac{1}{2}$ cent advance, and compound lard at $\frac{1}{4}$ cent advance. Increased consumptive demand for both, with a shorter supply, particularly for pure, is responsible.

Barrel pork is firm at the recent advance and fair consumptive demand. Canned meats are also firm with fair demand. Dried beef unchanged.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans have declined to about $3 per bushel, in a large way. This because the former price was inflated without legitimate reason. Marrows are unchanged and steady. California limas, both spot and future, are where they were a week ago; demand light. Green and Scotch peas unchanged, but steady to firm at recent advance.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

Trading in evaporated apples continues at a standstill, with no prospects of an improvement in the near future, or until it is possible to trade with Europe.

The evaporators do not know whether to start up or not, although a good many will do so simply to save the fresh fruit they have bought.

The market is nominally 5¼ to 6 cents for prime apples, new crop in 50-pound boxes, any shipment up to January. Choice, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound higher.

Raspberries continue dull, with prices somewhat in buyers' favor. Twenty cents, f. o. b. in barrels, is generally asked.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The trade in general seems to have gotten used to the higher prices now prevailing in our line, and a regular steady business, in fact larger than usual, has been going on during the last week.

There has been just a few small rivals of new Holland herrings, quality of which proved to be satisfactory. There does not seem to be a possibility of shipping more new Holland herrings here, because the fishing in Holland has been stopped, owing to the difficulty to carry on fishing operations during the war. Consequently the few Holland herrings that have arrived will be easily demanded at very high prices.

Norway Mackerel.—We have had cable from our friends in Norway that the fishing had stopped. Whether this is on account of the fish having disappeared, or whether it has been stopped because the fisherman thought it too dangerous to go out under present circumstances, we do not know, but the fact remains that we have been unable to get any firm prices as yet for Norway mackerel. A few lots have been bought at exorbitant prices, but the quality of the lots that have been bought so far was not at all satisfactory, and not real fine fat fish.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s
Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

What have I done to-day to help make this business grow.

You got around on time this morning. You dusted off your shelves, straightened out the counter, placed goods in stock, kept an eye on customers, answered the phone calls politely. Was attentive to the trade as it came along. Those, your ordinary duties, helped of course to keep the business at normal.

But—what did you do to get it above par? The United States Government is neutral in the present European crisis, and a blessing for our beloved country that it is.

But we can't afford to remain neutral in our work, such a case of neutrality would simply mean standing still. Duty well done is commendable, to be sure, but thought, well executed, in addition to duty, is doubly commendable.

"In what way," you may ask, "can I, as a clerk, help make this business bigger?"

There are so many "ways" that were they all printed it would take you many evenings to read them through. We will, however, mention a few of the ordinary "ways."

Getting a customer to use your tea and coffee who never bought a pound of either in the place. We all know of excellent people who have their week order, but cut out the above article preferring to wait for the wagon with the tin pan checks.

Getting in a word on the street with a friend who "really has no excuse for not dealing with you." Incidentally mentioning the fact to an eligible party that their account would be very acceptable. Taking one of your specialties to the car for demonstration when you hand them the articles already sold.

Telling your buyer you can sell certain thing if he will only put it in stock. Landing somebody at the merchandise department for the first time and making a sale.

Getting a woman to buy a cake "made in our own bakery," but something that doesn't taste like "baker's cake."

Getting a new address and telling her that you make four deliveries out there every day.

Offering a butter sample to a "delicquent."

Calling up a few people on business.

These are a few of the things that help build business. The more you do it the better you like it. Such work lifts you out of the ordinary and to the success that you will experience giving you the feeling that you are somebody—not a machine, not a fellow that does just what he is told, but a man that has the satisfaction of knowing that he has "done something to-day to make the business bigger."

There has been quite a little business in sardines, but very little remains now in first hands. Of French, there is practically nothing in first hands, and of Portuguese, hardly anything remains in first hands, and second hands who have bought on speculation are now asking high prices. The demand for Norwegian sardines has not been as large as anticipated, and prices for these goods are practically normal yet. They are also quite normal yet for sprats, although there is no possibility of getting further supplies for the present. Trade is buying rather sparingly in these lines, and has not been inclined to speculate, which is a very good idea, and very sensible on their part.

MARKET NOTES.

Eastern grapes are now around 60 cents per basket—they did drop to 30 cents a few days. They are chiefly Concord's Early and Concord's. California grapes range from 90 cents to $1.25.

Tomatoes have moved up, owing to competition among packers, who are bringing up to 20 cents per basket. The best fruit in a jobbing way is worth 10 to 60 cents.

Jersey cantaloupes are bringing from 10 cents up to 25 cents. The quality is fair. Colorado Rocky Fords made their appearance in Eastern markets during the week and brought from 50 cents to $2 per crate.

Perfect potatoes are cheap—75 cents per basket for Jerseys and $1.50 to $2 per barrel for Southern.

charges for express, parcel postage and contract delivery service.

Note this is for outgoing transportation only, incoming being charged to Freight, Express and Postage on Purchases of Merchandise (6).

25. TOTAL DELIVERY EXPENSE is the sum of Items 23 and 24.

MANAGEMENT EXPENSE is the total of the group of expenses intended to show the general cost of running the business as a whole—or co-ordinating the various functions of buying, selling and delivery into a smoothly running whole.

26. MANAGEMENT AND OFFICE SALARIES is to be charged with salaries of bookkeepers, office clerks and stenographers, and with auditor's fees. It also includes the part of the salary of the proprietor, active partners or manager, proportionate to the time given to managing.

27. OFFICE SUPPLIES AND EXPENSE should be charged with purchases of stationery of all sorts, account books and forms (except selling and stock forms), typewriter supplies, printing and postage (not advertising—20, or parcel postage—24), and transportation charges on office supplies.

28. TOTAL MANAGEMENT EXPENSE is the sum of Items 26 and 27.

FIXED CHARGES AND UPKEEP EXPENSE is that part of the expense of the store which goes on steadily night and day whether business is increasing or decreasing, whether the weather is bad or good, and does not vary in any proportionate degree with the volume of business. One of the chief economies of a growing business, up to a certain point at least, is the reduction in the proportion of these fixed charges which each article sold must bear.

29. RENT should be charged with all net payments (see last paragraph of this section) for space of store and warehouse (except cold storage), but not for stable or garage (Other Delivery Expense—24). If heat or light or power, or all of them are included in the rental payment, an estimate of each or all should be deducted and charged to Heat, Light and Power (30). If care (janitor or cleaning) is included, it should likewise be estimated, deducted and charged to Other Miscellaneous Expense (38).

Where insurance upon the store building (not upon the stock) is also paid by the tenant, it is virtually a part of his rental payment and should be charged to this account rather than to Insurance on Stock and Store Equipment (31).

If the store building is owned in whole or in part by the concern, rent should be charged to the business in this account (29) equivalent to the amount it could be rented for to others. Just as the proprietor should receive a salary from his business for his time as if employed by another (see Section 16), so his store should receive a rent from the business as if rented to another. Such rent should be credited to Other Profits and Losses (43).

Sub-rentals should be deducted from the total rent, that is, if a concern rents or leases the whole of a building and sub-rents a portion, the net rent only is to be charged in this account to the grocery business.

30. HEAT, LIGHT AND POWER should be charged with all expense for:—

(a) Heat, including payments to power or heating companies, or to owner of store, if heat is furnished by others; or for fuel, for oil (machine) and waste, and for repairs to and depreciation of heating equipment, if heat is furnished by the grocery concern itself.

(b) Light, including all payments for lighting store, office and warehouse, by oil, gas, electricity or acetylene, and for the necessary chimneys, mantles, globes and repairs to lights, but not for light for outside electric signs if possible to separate it (see Advertising—20).

(c) Power, including all payments for power used for coffee grinders, fans, elevators, escalators and all payments for maintenance and running (wages, fuel, repairs, depreciation, etc.), of any power equipment owned by the grocery concern.

31. INSURANCE ON STOCK AND STORE EQUIPMENT should be charged with all expense of insurance on the business—fire, burglary, fidelity, plateglass, employers' liability and other. This account is not to be charged with insurance on store building or on the lives of partners, even when the policies are payable to the business (see Section 38). Insurance on delivery equipment is not to be charged here, but to Item 24.

When the store building is owned insurance paid upon it is virtually a deduction from rentals earned on the building and should be charged as an expense to Other Profits and Losses (43).

When insurance is paid for a longer time than the period of the Profit and Loss Statement, a proportionate part only of the premium should be charged on each statement. For example, if insurance is paid up for three years at a premium of $150, and this statement is for but one year, then one-third only of the premium, or $50, is to be charged here, the balance, or $100, being an asset on the balance sheet as "Prepaid Insurance." This asset should be reduced, of course, on the next balance sheet by $50, as a charge for the next year's insurance, and the $50 reported as an expense on the next Profit and Loss Statement.

32. TAXES is to be charged with taxes on stock and store equipment, but not with taxes on the store building or on delivery equipment. Taxes on the building, like insurance on the building as indicated in Section 31, are to be charged to Other Profits and Losses (43) when the building is owned. Taxes on delivery equipment, including stable or garage, are to be charged to Other Delivery Expense (24).

33. REPAIRS AND RENEWALS OF STORE EQUIPMENT should be charged with all repairs and upkeep of fixtures, furniture or other general equipment, such as showcases, refrigerators, coffee grinders, scales and overhead carriers. It should also be charged with all purchases of new equipment to take the place of old, and with transportation charges on such equipment. It should not be charged with repairs and upkeep for delivery, which should be charged to Item 24, or with repairs and upkeep of equipment for heating, lighting and power, which should be charged to Item 30.

34. DEPRECIATION OF STORE EQUIPMENT should be charged with a fair estimate for depreciation of fixtures, furniture or other general store equipment. This should not include depreciation of equipment for delivery, heating, lighting or power. These depreciations should be carried to Items 24 and 30, respectively.

Just what is a "fair estimate" must be determined by experience. A simple method is to estimate the business life of each article of equipment and depreciate in proportion. For example, if the life of a fixture for business purposes is estimated as ten years, charge off practically 10 per cent. per year. The Bureau would like the rate of depreciation in the space indicated on Publication GP.

35. TOTAL FIXED CHARGES AND UPKEEP EXPENSE is the sum of Items 29-34.

MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSE is that part of the expense not covered by Items 16-35. It does vary more or less in proportion to the amount of business, but cannot properly be charged to any of the other accounts.

36. TELEPHONE should be charged with all payments for telephone service. In many stores a considerable portion of this expense could properly be charged to selling, but it seems expedient to carry all telephone expense to this single account (36).

37. ICE AND COLD STORAGE is to be charged with all payments for ice and with cold storage expense.

38. OTHER MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSE is to be charged with payments for telegraph, water, care, (janitor, cleaning) and sundries that cannot properly be entered in any of the other accounts, such as freight or express charges borne by the store on merchandise returned by the store, and the expense of collecting slow and doubtful accounts.

If the business pays life insurance premiums on policies payable to the business, such premiums should be charged here, but reported as a sub-division of this account.

39. TOTAL MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSE is the sum of Items 36-38.

40. LOSSES FROM BAD DEBTS should be charged with all accounts receivable, which have run so long that hope of collection is abandoned. These should be written off the books at the end of each period.

This account should be credited, of course, with any collection on accounts receivable after they have been written off.

41. TOTAL OF EXPENSE STATEMENT is the sum of Items 16-38.

42. NET PROFIT (OR LOSS) FROM MERCHANDISE OPERATIONS results from subtracting Total of Expense Statement (41) from Gross Profit on Merchandise (15), and gives the net profits of the grocery business proper, to which is to be added, or from which is to be deducted, as the case may be, Other Profits and Losses (43), and Application of Total Operating Net Profit (45-49).

When Item 41 exceeds Item 15, this item (42) becomes, of course, Net Loss from Merchandise Operations.

43. OTHER PROFITS AND LOSSES comprises (a) Profits; (b) Losses, which may or may not be kept separate.

This account (43) should be credited with:—

(a) Incidental receipts, such as interest on bank balances, sales of packing cases and of waste paper, tolls from telephone pay station in store. If the store site and building, stable or garage is owned by the concern, the rent charged in Items 29 and 24 should be credited here as rentals earned, and reported as a separate sub-division of this item. (See also Items 31 and 32.)

This account should be charged with:—

(b) Incidental losses, such as those from missing merchandise, damages, theft and also with insurance and taxes on the store site and building when owned by the concern. The last two should be reported as separate items.

The net balance of (a) and (b) is to be entered on the Profit and Loss Statement under this item (43).

44. TOTAL OPERATING NET PROFIT (OR LOSS) OF THE PERIOD results from adding Other Profits and Losses (43) to, or subtracting it from, as the case may be, Net Profit (or Loss) from Merchandise Operations (42) to secure the total net profit or loss which under Items 45-49 is to be applied to interest, dividends and surplus (or deficit).

APPLICATION OF TOTAL OPERATING NET PROFIT is the final main division of the Profit and Loss Statement where proper application of Item 44 is made to interest, or to dividends, and the final surplus (or deficit) is determined.

This permits full and accurate comparisons to be made between different businesses, whether the proprietors furnish all the capital needed and expect interest on that capital, or borrowing is largely resorted to (either directly on notes, or indirectly through time purchases), or profits are distributed in the form of corporation dividends.

45. INTEREST ON CAPITAL—BORROWED is to be charged with all payments for interest whether made to manufacturers, wholesalers, bankers, or others on debts incurred for the business—whether on accounts payable or on notes payable.

46. INTEREST ON CAPITAL—OWNED is never figured for corporation and joint stock companies, for it is included in dividends. This account should be charged with interest at the current rate (taking reasonably secure local investments as a basis), on capital invested in the business. This capital is the total amount standing to the credit of the proprietor or partners on the books. Such credits should, of course, represent the sum of all the assets of the business, less the sum of all debts—in other words, the present worth of the business. If the store site and building is owned, the value must be included in these assets, for the rental is credited as an earning (see Section 43).

Just as the proprietor should charge salary for his own time, as if he were employed by another (see Buying Expense, Section 16), and rent for his own store, as if it were rented to another (see Section 29), so he should charge interest for his own capital, as if it were borrowed by another. No one questions the charging of Interest on Capital—Borrowed (45), but the dollar borrowed does no more work in the business than the dollar owned. Concerns, not joint stock companies or corporations, with partners inactive, but still drawing "salaries" in lieu of compensation for the use of their capital, should not charge these "salaries" as expenses of buying, selling or managing, but should charge to this account (46) interest on capital which such inactive partners may have in the business, or to Rent (29) the equivalent of store rent on the building owned by such partners, and include in Final Surplus (or Deficit) for the Period (49) any balance of such "salaries."

47. DIVIDENDS ON CAPITAL STOCK will be entered, by corporations and joint stock companies only, for dividends on capital stock declared out of the earnings of the period.

48. TOTAL INTEREST AND DIVIDENDS is the sum of Items 45-47.

49. FINAL SURPLUS (OR DEFICIT) FOR THE PERIOD results from subtracting Item 48 from, or adding to, as the case may be, Total Operating Net Profit (or Loss) of the Period (44), and is, for individual proprietorships or partnerships, the final true gain or loss from doing business for the period, after all expenses have been paid, and proper charges have been made for depreciation and for the proprietor's time and capital, and for the store, if owned by the concern. For corporations and joint stock companies it is the surplus (or deficit) of the period after provision for whatever dividends have been declared. For treatment of the "salaries" of inactive partners see the last paragraph of Section 46.

When Your Wife Owns Your Business.

When I was just coming into whiskers and first knew I was going to be a beauty, I made up my mind I'd sell myself to some peach with lots of coin. It's a cinch, I thought, that somebody's want to buy me, and I'd just stick around until some queen came by and did it. Then I'd settle down and wear silk socks till I died. But somehow there didn't seem to be any big bidders and by and by I had to go to work and I've been at work ever since. And maybe I ain't glad I didn't sell myself for money. Just maybe I ain't glad. I've seen some sights since that, that make me think that the fellow who's wife has all the money ain't got any cinch. Especially if she's put her money into a business and he's running it.

That's the case with a certain pair I know. He was a clerk when he married her and had a pretty good job. It would have been sure till he died, too, though there wouldn't have been much money in it.

She didn't have a cent when he married her, but she had hopes that her grandfather would die some time—he had some money. After a while he did die, and left her about $3,000. Nothing would do but that she should put it into a store and of course her husband was willing and they bought out a place in the home town. The thing was in his name, but that was all. She had ideas about business, and as they hadn't any children to keep her home, she went right in the store and started to put her ideas to work.

Of course he knew the business—he had been in it all his life and was a good bright fellow. She hadn't been in it at all, but that didn't make any difference. She had ideas, and then it was her money. Oh joy, oh gladness!

Whenever he thought something was right that she thought was wrong, she'd remind him if was her business. She'd do it before anybody—she's done it before me, the first time I ever went in the store.

"Little girl," I said when she did that, "if you were my wife I'd take you down cellar, and I'd rip the top off an orange box and paddle your little behind until you forgot all about it was your business."

I didn't say it out loud—I said it to myself.

Gee whiz, but it must be fine to have your wife shove that down your throat before strangers! Believe me, there's worse things than being poor. One of 'em's having a wife with money. Of course if you've got the kind of wife that'll stick her money in your pocket and say "here, honey, you do what you want with it, I never want to hear about it again"—that's all right. That's fine. That was the kind that I hoped would buy me. But I've decided there ain't any such animals. If there ever was any, they're all dead. I've seen quite a bunch of married couples where the wife had the money, and with every one of 'em, if you got very close to 'em, it come out sooner or later. She couldn't forget it for a second.

Sometimes, like this pair with the store, it comes out right away and comes out hard.

The way it come out before me that day—they were talking to a cash register salesman. The husband thought they ought to have a register. The only thing they had was a dinky little thing like a money drawer and a register combined. He was all in for it. She wasn't, and they had quite a fuss right before the salesman and before me. I was waiting for 'em to get through.

She was a peppery little piece and after she found that none of her arguments got under his skin—he had a come back for everything she said and a good one, too—she come plump out with it.

"Very well," she said, "I'll let you remember it's my money, and I won't spend $150 of it for a cash register we don't need!"

Gee, it was quiet in there for a minute. The husband had no come back for that, and the register salesman tried to laugh it off, but it was pretty punk all right. Know what I did? I picked up my grip and walked out. Gad, but it must have been a magnificent sight—me going out looking like a king. I had opened up yet either—that's how I showed what I thought of a fellow that would put that over on his own husband. I'll never go back either—think what they miss that.

I never could do business with an outfit like that. I'm terrible with I'm worked up—I dreamed I killed a tiger once with one hand tied behind me. And if she so much let out anything about it being my money, I'm afraid I'd do something that mamma wouldn't like her to do.

I wonder how they'll get along. If he's a man he can't stand that kind of thing much more. Chances is it'll spoil 'em as husband and wife, where otherwise they might have got along as fine as a couple of doves.

I ain't against marrying a woman with money, understand. But what us fellows ought to do when we do that, is to take care right after the wedding and clip her until she spits it all out in her hand. Then it wouldn't be coming up in her throat all the time.

Did You Ever Hear of Coffee Insurance?

¶ We are really handling insurance—Coffee Insurance. Our standardized blends offer you absolute insurance that any blend you select from us as a standard will always be here, precisely the same, even if you don't order it again—though you will—for ten years.

¶ The Standardized Blends also offer you absolute insurance that no customer of yours will ever justly complain to you that "after we find coffee that just suits us, you suddenly send us something different," this being a common result of irregularity in shipments to you.

¶ Our Standardized Blends are blends of coffee that, by infinite pains, we keep absolutely the same. This avoids the lack of uniformity which has spoiled so much coffee business.

Everybody Knows Them

Knight's Flavoring Extracts have been pleasing epicures throughout the United States for fifty-nine years. The name Knight on an extract package is a stamp of excellence. Thousands of families can be induced to use nothing else. Most grocers sell them; if you don't, do so now and you will find that the goods not only sell themselves, but that your extract trade will increase. You cannot make a better profit on any first-class brand.

Why We Can Guarantee Against Spoilage

The filthiest thing on earth is rennet if made carelessly and under unclean conditions.

If you could see some commercial rennets made you wouldn't let them enter your store.

We guarantee to the absolute limit the perfect cleanliness of James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet, but we have other proof that it's clean—we guarantee it not to spoil. We wouldn't dare guarantee an unclean rennet that way.

James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet will also coagulate milk in 2—5 minutes, and in every way will satisfy your most exacting customer.

Costs you $1.50, sells for $3.00. Order some now, before you forget it. All jobbers.

Bought Simply Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Goods That Are Being Advertised to Your Customers

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

Brushes Advance Because of War.

Because of the European war, by cutting off the present, at least, supplies of brushes and other brush materials, has had an advance of from 12 per cent. to 15 per cent. in all kinds of brushes, except those made of Tampico fiber. The manufacturers have announced that they have withdrawn all prices, discontinued taking stock orders for shipments. Such orders as are on hand will be at prices in force when the orders are received, and an advance of from 12 per cent. to 15 per cent. has been announced, subject to change without notice. Bristles and other brush materials are largely obtained from Russia, Poland and France. While the European war lasts none can come from those countries. Considerable quantities of black bristles come from China. The supply cannot be resumed until shipping and insurance is resumed. The Chinese bristle crop was this season reported to be less than previously.

CCLXXIV.—Something Interesting About the Law of Substantial Performance of Contracts.

The following letter on a subject which should be generally interesting, comes to me from western Pennsylvania:—

Pittsburg, Pa., August 20, 1914.
Elton J. Buckley, Esq.

Dear Sir:—We should like your views upon a problem which has just developed in our own business, and which involves about $2,000. We have just erected a new store and warehouse building. We prepared plans ourselves, instead of employing an architect, as we knew exactly what we wanted, and after advertising for bids, awarded the whole contract to a contracting firm, which, of course, let out its own sub-contracts.

Now that the building is practically completed, we find that through the general contractor's error, it is three inches shorter than it should be. The contract calls for a building of certain dimensions, and the contractor bound himself to furnish it. He has not complied with his agreement, and we have refused to pay him the final installment, which is about $2,000, until he does. He has no explanation for the mistake, but merely says he must have made a mistake. He is demanding the $2,000 on the ground that the building he has erected is practically as good for our use as one three inches longer, but as we see it, he cannot recover anything from us until he tears the building out and puts the extra three inches on it. As it would probably cost him more than $2,000 to do that, we see no chance of his doing it. Please let us have your opinion.

Respectfully yours,
MOORE & JARLEY.

The principle involved here is what is known as the law of substantial performance, and applying it to this case I am compelled to tell these correspondents that they will probably be obliged to pay their contractor. Not all of the $2,000, perhaps, but most of it.

The law of substantial performance comes into cases where it is necessary to decide whether a man who contracts with another to do something has complied with that contract. As a rule it does not arise in contracts for the sale of merchandise, but in contracts for the doing of work. In substance it is this: that where a man has tried to perform his contract in good faith, and has failed in one or more minor points, the other party cannot refuse to pay him until he has literally complied with the contract at every point. He must pay the balance due, but he can deduct any fair damages which he suffered through the contractor's failure to literally comply with the contract throughout.

For instance, not long ago, an elevator company contracted to put an elevator which would lift 1,800 pounds, into a business building. When installed the elevator would only lift 1,730 pounds. There was about $2,000 balance due, and the owners of the building refused to pay any of it until the elevator was made to lift 1,800 pounds. This would have necessitated tearing the whole thing out. The elevator company sued and got its money. The court applied the doctrine of substantial performance, and said that the elevator company had delivered an elevator which would do its work and was in every way satisfactory—its only shortcoming was the lifting deficiency of 70 pounds, which did not go to the heart of the contract. The court said, however, that the owners of the building could deduct from the $2,000 whatever damages they had suffered because of the loss of the 70 pounds' lifting capacity. As a matter of fact, they could not show any damage—their elevator answered the purpose just as well as if it had lifted 70 pounds more.

Here is a definition of the law of substantial performance from a leading case:—

The equitable doctrine of substantial performance is intended for the protection and relief of those who have faithfully and honestly endeavored to perform their contracts in all material and substantial particulars, so that their right to compensation may not be forfeited by reason of mere technical, inadvertent or unimportant omissions or defects. It is incumbent on him who invokes this protection to present a case in which there has been no willful omission or departure from the terms of his contract.

The contractor who arbitrarily refuses to perform his contract at some point, whether important or not, cannot invoke this principle. I remember one case in which a contractor agreed to line a building throughout with building paper. After the contract was under way he decided it was not necessary to line certain parts of it, and against the owner's protest, left it out. The owner refused to pay his bill, and the contractor sued, pleading substantial performance. The court said "no, you made no honest effort to perform your contract; you deliberately violated it. You cannot get your money until you put in the rest of the building paper."

These cases are exactly in point with the case submitted in the above letter. If a building three inches longer is absolutely necessary to the correspondent's business, and if the building which the contractor erected cannot be used at all, then you can refuse to pay him until he complies literally with his contract, because the omission is vital. This, however, is almost certainly not the case. The chance is that the building is just as suitable as if it were three inches longer, and if that is so the mistake is one of the "technical, inadvertent or unimportant omissions or defects," spoken of in the above definition, and you cannot hold up the contractor on account of it. You must pay him, but you are entitled to an allowance to cover the damage you have suffered through his fault. That damage would probably be the difference between the value of the building the contractor should have built, and that of the building three inches shorter.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office no later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The Pottsville association showed a 45 per cent. increase in membership since the Warren convention. This association will send a large delegation to the Philadelphia convention. The Pennsylvania plan has no warmer supporters in the State than the Pottsville association.

The Retail Merchants' Association of Hazleton has decided not to hold a picnic this year. All stores in Hazleton will close on Tuesday, August 27th, which will be the day of the parade of the Elks, who meet in annual convention at that time.

The Merchants' Association of Jersey Shore has put on a membership campaign which up to this time has resulted in 11 new members. Plans are being made for an association picnic limited to members, their families and clerks. Mr. Edward Toner, the efficient secretary of the association, will represent Jersey Shore at the annual convention.

The annual picnic of the Pottsville association was held on August 20th at Tumbling Run. About 15,000 persons attended the outing. All stores were closed. There was a big programme of athletic sports, dancing, baseball, pony races and vaudeville entertainment. The celebration started with a street parade composed of merchants and guests of the day, a band of brass pieces heading the procession.

During the afternoon a large balloon was sent up; attached to it was an order for a case of carton sugar (120 pounds), donated by Franklin Sugar Refining Co., Philadelphia. Whoever secured the order on the descent of the balloon got the sugar. When we left the grounds the balloon was still sailing. The day was under the direction of the following committee: C. Hoffman, chairman; H. C. M. k, H. R. Knapp, Simon Gedin, Geo. Zeh, Oscar Hummel and William Higgins.

A large delegation of Brooklyn merchants will attend the State convention. They will be welcomed and taken good care of.

All the secretaries who attend the annual meeting on September 7th will be the guests of Reno Schoch, secretary of the Philadelphia Retail Merchants' Association at a dinner to be given at the Bourse.

The Pittston association had a splendid outing on August 18th at Lake Erie. It was a big event.
Pittston will be well represented at the Philadelphia convention.

Merchants of Muncy have started a newspaper called "The Progressor," which is featuring the merchants' Day. This paper carries an advertisement of the Muncy merchants and will be widely circulated.

On August 19th Mr. Smedley addressed the merchants of St.
Louis. He was accompanied by H.
R. Knapp, secretary of the Pottsville association, William Higgins and Mr. Donaldson. Mr. Knapp made a splendid talk, illustrating the good that Pottsville had secured through organization. At the conclusion of the addresses the association voted to secure a charter and affiliate with the State association. This is a newly formed organization and bids fair to be a useful one. Mr. Edward Boon is present and G. H. Bausum, secretary.
Clair will be well represented at the State convention.

Pottstown, one of the latest additions to the membership of the State association, will be well represented at the convention. In addition to the delegates a large party of merchants will visit the convention, traveling by automobile.

The convention is only two weeks away. Practically all the arrangements have been made. The programme is a good one and the entertainment features are par excellence. Every merchant in the State invited whether connected with the association or not. It will be a great event.

The Pottsville association is making a strenuous effort to secure the

Sell Her a Whole Container of Franklin Carton Sugar

When you sell a woman a whole CONTAINER of 24 or 30 CARTONS of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR, instead of selling her one CARTON, you prevent her buying the other 23 or 29 CARTONS from a competitor. She's your customer; nobody else can sell her any sugar for some time. She has a supply instead of a sample. You have only one delivery to make, instead of perhaps dozens. You make the profit on every carton in one sale without even having to open the container, although you can do that in five seconds with a pocket knife. You can see that this is the right way to sell sugar because your customers expect to go on eating it all their lives and don't have to "try" it to "see what it's like."

CAPACITIES OF CONTAINERS

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 pounds, according to the grade. CUBE, GRANULATED, and DESSERT & TABLE are packed in CONTAINERS that do not hold too much for a family to buy at one time. POWDERED and CONFECTIONERS' XXXX are also packed in CONTAINERS of small capacity to suit your convenience in buying. Full information on weights of both CARTONS and CONTAINERS can be had from your jobber.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"Let us send you a Container of Franklin Carton Sugar. Sugar is something that you always need, and it's a big convenience to know that you have a supply of it in the house instead of having to buy it every time you need it."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants membership of every business man in the city. A special campaign circular calling attention to the things accomplished has been issued and a list of names of those not members has been printed. This accompanies the circular. The following committee has charge of the campaign: S. Gedinsky, A. L. Eckert, J. E. Gregory, H. Foster, D. G. Smith and W. Guy Payne. President Bausum and Secretary Knapp are lending splendid assistance. Keep your eye on Pottsville.

We had the pleasure of a brief visit with that prince of good fellows and successful business man, Mr. Royal, of the Royal Wholesale Grocery Co., at Pottsville.

F. N. Barrett, editor of the "American Grocer," and Charles Thorpe, editor of "Retail Grocers' Advocate," of New York, will attend the convention.

Japanese Tea Exports to United States Fall Off Radically in 1913-1914.

According to the Yokohama Board of Trade, exports of Japan tea to the United States and Canada during the season from May, 1913, to April, 1914, amounted to 29,533,455 pounds, against considerably more than that in the two previous years. The following table shows the shipments during the last three seasons to New York and the East, Chicago and the West, San Francisco and the Pacific coast, and Canada:—

I heartily agree with everything in the following letter:—

Penn Yan, N. Y., August 7, 1914.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Don't you think it is a good idea for a grocer to adopt one certain style of border and type for his newspaper ads, so that people may readily find his announcement?

And I think it is an equally good plan for him to choose some distinctive sort of lettering and arrangement for his display store cards. The public will soon learn to associate the card and its message with the firm or store using it.

Where the dealer has some special signature or emblem which he uses in his newspaper advertising he can have a photo engraving made of this design and printed in one corner of the card, preferably the lower left-hand corner, leaving the balance of the card for the advertising matter.

Usually last, but not least, on the cards and tickets is the price mark. This should be plain at a distance, and yet of attractive outline.

The figures which I send you under separate cover have been used by me with success, and may be of interest and help to those dealers who would like something a little out of the ordinary, and yet not difficult to make with a little practice and a No. 5 red sable brush. They can be made either in outline, as on the chart, or in solid color.

Yours truly,
OLIVER SHEPPARD.

Mr. Sheppard sends with this a sketch of such figures as he has in mind for price tickets. His sketch is about a foot long, so that I shall have to reduce it considerably:—

One of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World's" subscription solicitors sends in a circular from the Mullison Cash Grocery Co., Wilkes-Barre, Pa., which he says he would like to have discussed in this department. According to the letter, the circular is getting results. In the original it measures 10 x 13 inches, and is fairly well printed on cheap white paper. The quality of this paper ought to be improved. For 25 or 50 cents more a thousand you could get paper so much better that it would give quite a different tone to the advertising. Here is the circular reduced and reproduced:—

and the prices on such articles as I am familiar with are low. This is a bargain circular, and it does not pretend to be anything else. It will get business, but the old question arises—is it good business? Personally, I don't believe it is, but all the chain stores are fighting hard to get it, which makes it seem as if I must be wrong. The kind of business this circular will get is transient business mostly—business from women who will slip in for a dollar's worth of sugar, on which I judge this store makes absolutely nothing, a pound of Wilbur's cocoa for 17 cents, six bars of Fels soap for a quarter and a few other things

WE GIVE S. & H. GREEN TRADING STAMPS

This is live advertising, and I can understand how it would get results. It is price advertising almost entirely, on which there is no profit. You say what you please—if customers continue to buy only such things as there is nothing in their trade, the eternal hope of selling them something else on which there will be profit that leads stores to angle constantly for their trade. And sometimes you can sell them other things—practical things. They are very wary, however, these women that pore over store circulars and then go out seeking what they may devour. They know the lay of the land pretty well, and you start with the proposition that they are not going to pay anybody a profit they can save.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken in strict rotation.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

The Only Kind of National Advertising That Results in Positive Demand Upon the Grocer is That Accompanied by Sampling

New Jersey Grocer Says This is His Experience. Cites a Number of Advertised Brands and Tells What Happened With Them. Heinz Spaghetti or Van Camp's. Sniders' Baked Beans or Heinz Beans. All are Nationally Advertised Brands, But Their Experiences in the Retail Store Are Vastly Different.

In answer to your question, "How determined, as a rule, are customers who ask for Nationally advertised articles? Do they appear to have made up their mind to get them, or are they simply 'thinking of trying'?" I would say that they are only simply thinking of trying. This answer would apply to Nationally advertised articles which they just saw advertised, and when they come and ask me about them they simply are thinking of trying them. In other words a customer would simply say to me, "Mr. Mann, do you have Snider's Baked Beans; I just saw them advertised in a certain magazine, and I would like to try them." If I have no Snider's Baked Beans, or if I have and don't care to push them I would say, "Why we had some Snider's Baked Beans, but our sale was so small on them that I don't think much of them myself. We use Heinz's Baked Beans and they are fine." Why you can see the customer say, "Give me Heinz's, we use them too, and I know they are good."

Now this is simply an illustration of my experience through life time in the grocery business. When the consumer sees something advertised in a new way, 99 times out of 100 she is thinking only of trying it, and if you want her to try it why she takes your word at all times, but if you don't care for the article in question you would have no trouble in selling her something else that she has already got. Now I have illustrated you when they have seen an article advertised and how you can kill her thought right away. You are her doctor. In you she has confidence, and confidence is next to success.

Now I will prove to you that there is an Nationally advertised article that people will insist on having. It has been tried already, and they like it very much, and it is up to you to give them it or they will get it somewhere else, and here it is: When Van Camp's Spaghetti came in the market some time ago they were Nationally advertised through newspapers, magazines, billboards and street cars (but I never saw their advertisement in a trade paper—they did not think the grocers have to know something about their goods, and that is where they are making the mistake). When I began to get some inquiries on Van Camp's Spaghetti I ordered a case and sold a can to-day and a can in three days after. I sold altogether a very few cases, then (God bless our 57 varieties) H. J. Heinz & Co. put a can of spaghetti on the market. They were not stingy about their National advertising and they did not forget about the trade papers to inform the grocers. Their representative called on me and I gave him an order for something like 10 or 15 cases. They gave me a demonstration in my store consisting of warmed spaghetti and cheese, and everybody that came in my store received a sample of this delicious Heinz Spaghetti with a National Biscuit Company fresh biscuit. Every sample they gave away started a new customer for me, and that kind are determined as a rule. They ask for the Nationally advertised article that they have just tasted and it was fine. Not what they read about in the magazines, but what they tasted at Mann's store, and it was delicious. This kind of advertising I find persisting on this particular article. That demonstration built up a nice spaghetti business for me, and I have it yet. I sell about 5 to 10 cases every month, where Van Camp's I sold about a dozen in two months. At present you will not find a can of Van Camp's Spaghetti in my store, only Heinz. Nobody calls for Van Camp's. Why? They are both Nationally advertised, but Heinz has the business in my store.

So it goes with everything else that you do right. Not very long ago samples of Puffed Rice and Puffed Wheat were distributed in our neighborhood, and as soon as a sample came in the house the next day they came to buy a package of Quaker Puffed Wheat or Rice. Why she had a sample and they tried it, and they liked it, and she came to me to buy it. In this case, as stated above, she is not thinking any more of trying, but came to my store and expected me to give her what she asked for.

Not very long ago my neighborhood was sampled with Kellogg's Wheat Biscuit, and they tried them at their homes; they liked it, and they were determined at home to send to my store and buy it. When a customer comes to my store does not ask me, "Mr. Mann, do you any Kellogg's Wheat Biscuit? How are they? Do you use yourself?" No, they don't put question to you at all, they are persistently determined to have Kellogg's Wheat Biscuit, and it is to me to give it to her without question whatsoever. If I refuse she is bound to get it somewhere else.

Now before closing I will say to all the manufacturers and National advertisers, especially the big ones like the Kaffee Hag Corporation with their $500,000 National advertising campaign through the magazines, newspapers, street cars, that my sale of the Kaffee Coffee to date from June is one can, a very nice showing of National advertising of $500,000 spent through the country, and have their goods displayed in front of my store. American Preserve Manufacturer Will Gain by War the Elimination of Foreign Competition He Could Not Meet Temporary Disappearance of English Jams and Marmalades Will be Godsend to American Manufacturers. For Brands Can be Delivered in This Country, Duty Free, Cheaper Than American Manufacturer Can Produce Similar Goods.

[Some days ago, basing the request upon the fact that English jams and marmalades promised to be unavailable in this country during the coming season, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" requested one of the leading packers of American jams to demonstrate to the readers of this paper that our own jams and marmalades were fully the equal of the imported, and that no American grocer need feel any special lack or loss by being unable to sell the foreign brands. The manufacturer in question wrote the article, but it proved to be along a different line than was expected. It seems to make it plain that the war may be even more of a Godsend to the American manufacturer than it was expected to be, in that it has temporarily eliminated foreign competition, which the reduced tariff has made it impossible for him to meet.—ED.]

Answering the closing paragraph of your letter, American jams and marmalades of quality cannot be sold at lower prices than imported.

You may not be aware that it is a fact that all fruits are procurable abroad at much lower figures than obtain here, that is, particularly in our section of the country. We seldom, if ever, get strawberries at a lower price than 7 to 8 cents per quart, and red raspberries never below 9 and 10 cents, and yet invariably these fruits can be and are secured in the English and German markets at about one-third of the prices.

Sugar abroad ordinarily costs about the same price that we pay to pay. Labor, however, is markedly less. Because labor is not well paid abroad as here the tainers—glass and other packing—can be and are produced at a lower figure than we need pay.

When you combine all of the necessary units for the production have the confidence of consumers everywhere because of their purity, quality, wholesomeness and years of liberal advertising.

To sell these pure, grape cream of tartar powders, instead of cheap powders containing alum and such chemicals, shows your customers that you believe in pure foods, makes them trust you and rely on the purity and quality of your entire stock.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER and DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER not only please consumers best, but they also pay you more profit in real money pound for pound, and year for year, than any others you can sell.

These powders sell fastest and easiest because of quality backed by advertising; don't forget that the man who offers you a baking powder that is not advertised and tells you there is more profit in it is asking YOU to DO THE ADVERTISING by recommending it to your customers. Why should you do that and risk complaints when you can sell PURE baking powder so easily?

For your information, would say at there is a very small manufac- ing profit to us in our No. 1 jar n, listing at about $1.65 per zen, from which is to be taken a de discount of 10 per cent. and allowance for freight, and yet ce the reduction in tariff above rred to imported jams—said to of quality—have been brought t and sold in large quantities in s country at a price laid down in w York City of about $1 per zen.

In an Inspection of All the Stores in an Average Town, Only One (a Candy Store) Received 100 Per Cent

Scores For Sanitary Condition Ran all the Way From One Hundred Per Cent. Down to Forty-five Per Cent. Average Grocery Store Rating was 80.3 Per Cent. Meat Markets and Restaurants and Confectioners Were Higher. Slaughter Houses, Bakeries, Creameries Were Lower.

[Touching the almost universal movement to improve the sanitary condition of retail grocery stores, which movement, it may be said, is comparatively a recent one, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has come into possession of a report rendered by two sanitary inspectors of the retail food stores of Jamestown, N. D. The inspection covered only the sanitary features of grocery stores, meat markets, slaughter houses, bakeries, confectioneries, creameries, cafés and restaurants, ice cream factories, drug stores and dairies. We reproduce only the report as to food stores.—ED.]

The following is a report of inspection of the city of Jamestown with respect to compliance of its purveyors of foods and drugs as required under the State Pure Food and Drugs Act, also as to the sanitation of the buildings and places where food is sold, stored or manufactured, as provided for in the State Sanitary law:—

| | Number Inspected | Average Grade |
|---------------------------------|------------------|---------------|
| Grocery stores | 8 | 80.3 |
| Meat markets | 4 | 83 |
| Slaughter houses | 3 | 45 |
| Bakeries | 3 | 70.1 |
| Confectioneries | 5 | 84.7 |
| Creamery | 1 | 72.5 |
| Cafés and restaurants | 5 | 90.4 |

The above rating given these places inspected is low. The poor sanitation of a few places lowers the general average and therefore reflects unjustly upon the merchant who keeps a clean store. It is not fair competition to allow one man to sell his wares from a cheap, old shack with poor sanitation when his competitor beside him has a heavy investment in a clean, sanitary plant. Many merchants will say "I cannot afford to rebuild or make suggested repairs." Well, as a matter of fact, if a man cannot afford to keep up his building and equipment he should not feel himself obligated to the community to sell his wares to them. What we need is better stores. The number of stores does not make the town. Towns are largely judged by the traveling public by the general sanitation of the town. When I say the towns are judged, I mean the people of that town are judged, for the sanitation of a town reflects directly back upon the people of that town. It is very common among travelers to hear the expression, "This town or that is a good town or that is a 'rotten' town," and then to go on and name some of the dirty hotels and restaurants or stores in it, and to be sure he will think of an name the dirtiest place in town first. Grocery Stores and Grocer

An examination of the scores given for the several grocery stores shows a wide range. A score of 85 is not creditable; in fact, a store with a score below 85 kept store will show a grade of 90. A score below 70 is not acceptable, and below 60 the store should be condemned. Often the back room will be found in poor shape for it is here that the health judge of the character of the store. The back rooms, cellar or basement, the back yard, and above all the toilet and washroom often show very different condition, and in these places that the health officer finds reason for complaint.

The scores for three of the stores were low, and to show why they failed to meet the requirements most fully I have summarized the scores as follows:—

| | Perfect Score | 1 | 2 |
|---------------------------|---------------|------|------|
| Front shop | 32 | 22.5 | 29 |
| Back room | 36 | 14.5 | 24.5 |

Meat Markets.—The meat markets are not kept in good condition. There is not one of the food stores in town that is what can reasonably be expected of it. Two of the shops keep hides in the basement and the odor of an old hide permeating a meat market is not desirable:—

WITH THE EDITOR

Here is a letter from a New England subscriber which is worthy of editorial answer:—

Ansonia, Conn., Aug. 28, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I herewith send you a statement taken from cover of your publication August 17, 1914. I would like to ask you some questions in regard to same. I am a small dealer, but happened to have about 30 barrels of flour and 5 barrels of sugar on hand before the advance of prices took place. Do you mean to argue that because I was getting a reasonable price before that I had no earthly right to raise my price and get an extra profit as long as my stock held out? I do not hesitate to say that I did raise my price promptly, and I do not feel like an outcast, but feel bad because my stock is fast disappearing, and when I buy again my profits will be materially smaller than they have been for some time on that line of goods.

A SUBSCRIBER.

The statement to which this subscriber takes exception appeared on the cover and was as follows:—

The Merchant who is making enough profit before, and who raises food prices in war times unnecessarily—merely to take advantage of a situation and make more money for himself, is a traitor to every generous instinct and ought to be made an outcast of society

The writer does not hesitate to reiterate this opinion, and he regrets that this subscriber does not agree with him. If a retailer was already selling flour at a satisfactory profit, we repeat that we can see no fair reason for advancing his prices on stock in hand until the profit became exorbitant, for if the profit was fair before the advance it was exorbitant afterward. What good reason could there possibly be for an advance under such conditions?

Of course if circumstances beyond a retailer's control had forced him to sell flour for years at cost or below, as we know some retailers have been forced to do, then we believe the situation would be different. In that case a retailer could legitimately use the war, or anything else, as a means of getting prices where they would not only pay him a profit on present sales, but help him get back the profit he had lost on former sales.

Let us ask this subscriber a fair question: If he had had his thirty barrels of flour, and the market had declined as much as the war has recently advanced it, would he—unless forced to do so by competition—consider that he was under obligation to reduce his price before the thirty barrels were gone?

The brief reference in another column to a resolution presented in Congress by a Philadelphia member, preventing dealing in futures until the war situation has cleared, will be an interesting addition to the collection of absurdities which have been bred by the European war. A resolution of Congress authorizing the President to stop a form of trading which is carried on under State laws, as well as Federal laws, and which is carried on, as is well established, with perfect legality, is rank foolishness. Not even the President of the United States can make law in that way. With or without the resolution, the President cannot stop future trading; only a new law can do that, and there would always be a question whether such law was constitutional.

Although we do not believe in the buying and selling of futures, considering the practice to be of benefit to packers only, there is no question that it is absolutely legal, and probably, under present State and Federal constitutions, could never be made illegal. Only when the trade voluntarily stop it will it cease.

Not long ago a representative farmer in a district where the mail-order houses sell lots of goods was asked to frankly state why he and other farmers of his acquaintance preferred to buy goods of the mail-order house rather than of his local merchants. This was his answer:

Few, if any, farmers prefer to send off orders, but do so because of the fact that if they want some small article they pick up mail order catalogue, find price and write (send by parcel post) and soon have what they want delivered at the door. It is an easy way—no trouble—whereas if the same order was bought at the local merchant's, one has to go to town and make inquiries at the different stores to find such things as wanted. Sometimes the price may be almost the same, which means that in those cases it would not pay the farmers to send for such things. But many times there is a difference in price of 30 to 60 per cent. that makes the mail order patron think the merchant wants to hold him up.

Now the mail order farmers are willing to trade at home if they think they are getting a square deal. They also expect the merchant to make a profit and expenses.

Without doubt most articles sold both by general merchants and by mail-order houses are sold as cheap by the former as by the latter. A few articles cost more at the local store, and some cost less. So that the question of prices is not troublesome when we try to meet this farmer's objections. What he really buys on in our opinion is the mail-order catalogue, as to which we fear that the mail-order concern will always have it on the country storekeeper. It is quite impossible for the average storekeeper to publish an illustrated catalogue of his stock, and if the consumer is demanding that as the price of his patronage, he will continue to give it to the mail-order house.

Is it not remarkable that the sanitary inspectors who examined every store in Jamestown, N. D., gave no grocery store more than 94.5 per cent., and found it necessary to give one store 53.5 per cent. Only one store, a candy store, got 100 per cent. The average of all the grocery stores examined, for cleanliness and sanitation, was only 80.3 per cent. The average of the slaughter houses was only 45—less than half as good as they ought to be.

Is it impossible to conduct a grocery store perfectly? We have seen the results of a number of sanitary inspections, and in not one case that we have seen has a grocery store been given a rating of 100 per cent. It seems incredible that nobody is doing as well as he could do.

The probability is that most of these stores were clean enough in the parts seen by customers. The Jamestown report says: "Of three grocery stores which did pass, the condition of the toilet basement and back room is responsible." The parts that customers do not see, and which proprietors therefore do not think it necessary to give as much care to. This is directly opposed to the whole sanitation movement, for it is the secret places which are always the filthiest, and which consequently need cleaning up the first.

Grocers have troubles of their own, they have gotten along well enough, they think, by conducting their stores as they conduct them now, and it seems an imposition to add the considerable burden of making their stores sanitary every part. But there is the public to think of, and besides that, it pays from every standpoint, to make a store as nearly chemically clean as can be done. To-day the great advertisement a food store can have is absolute cleanliness.

Push Home Packed Peas Now That French and Belgium Peas are Unavailable.

Well Known Western Factor Emphasizes Fact That We Can be Whole Independent of Imported Peas. No Retailer Need Carry Imported Peas in Stock any Longer.

It is to be hoped that the retailers of the United States will take advantage of the stoppage of imports to push the sale of domestic canned peas. The sale of imported peas has been growing less each succeeding year as the number of pea canning factories in the country increased and as improvements have been made in methods of growing and handling this article.

In the production of domestic peas extreme care is taken to produce strains which have a high sugar content and give a large percentage of small peas. These strains are bred up through succeeding generations and in many instances seed experts have worked for ten years on a single variety.

before giving it to the canners for use.

The principal demand for imported peas has been in the smaller sizes, principally the Petit Pois and American packers have succeeded in producing Petit Pois and Extra Sifted Early June and sugar peas which in style, appearance and flavor are far superior to the imported article and at a much lower price.

The dealer who will push high-grade domestic peas under brands backed by responsible canners and distributors will be surprised and delighted with the response from the trade and will very soon find no necessity for carrying imported peas in stock. RALPH W. CRARY, Waukesha, Wis.,

Congressional Resolution Introduced Forbidding Future Business.

Representative Edmonds, of Philadelphia, on Tuesday last introduced in the House a resolution to prevent "future" sales and all forms of gambling in food-stuffs. He believes the adoption of his resolution will reduce prices. The resolution authorizes the President to direct that all "future" sales be discontinued if he finds it will benefit the general condition regarding food prices.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Is the Boss Away?—Nine times out of ten there isn't a man around the place that needs a vacation worse than he does.

He works double.

And his end—the end that you are not up against, is the tiresome one.

At any rate, he's away, and strange as it may seem, the whole pleasure of his trip rests with you fellows who run things in his absence.

This is the time to brace up. This is the time to show what you are made of.

The best reception you can give him on his return is for you all to prove that you have been on the job and that you have faithfully carried out his instructions.

I can assure you it is most discouraging when an official returns to his place of business and finds that things have been running in a loose way, and finding further that the general appearance of the store suggests deadness.

The time to break loose and do things is this very time. Clean up. Fix up. Make new displays; but above all, give the trade your best attention and act so you can fearlessly put a few sound replies to the question: "What have I done to-day to advance this business?"

You know, gentlemen, service, heart service, is really at the bottom of all success.

Bluff is silly. It's silly because there is no anchor to it. If you are assuming "what you are not," sharp judgment soon detects it.

An ounce of fidelity—is worth a pound of smartness.

So the boss' vacation will do him the most good when most of you are a party to it.

Vacation is purely a mental relax.

Inefficiency in his absence will simply mar that relax so that it cannot again be looked forward to with the proper degree of pleasure.

The fellows that have the best time are the ones that do the true things. Besides, doing right is easier. There's no scheming to it. And there's no come-backs.

Last year this time the first Florida grapefruit had come North, but this year there is no sign of it.

45—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because the manufacturers of all of them are willing to give you other selling helps in addition to their national advertising.

¶ This probably has no exception. Outside of spending thousands of dollars every year to create a demand, probably every manufacturer of a nationally advertised product will send you expensive advertising matter to distribute or display, and sometimes will even send you men, with the object of creating more demand. Granting that the manufacturer is a beneficiary from this extra work, are you not also a beneficiary?

¶ How many manufacturers or packers of non-advertised brands will do all this? As a matter of cold business policy, which class of products will it pay you best to tie to?

Four Public Markets Opened by City For Direct Dealings Between Producers and Consumers. Committee on High Food Prices Makes its Report. Thinks Overbuying by Merchants and Public Largely Responsible. Three Recommendations to Prevent Further Advance. Inquiry Into War Prices Continues. District Attorney's Conclusions. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, Sept. 4, 1914.

The trade have been considerably interested during the week by the experiment of the Mayor's Citizens' Committee of opening public markets for the purpose, as they announce, of reducing the cost of living to consumers. The first of these public markets were opened last Tuesday and amounted all told to four. Farmers from the surrounding country, including many from northern New Jersey and Long Island, pushcart men, commission men and representatives of one department store, came in and occupied the market, rent free, under the consent of the city.

The committee had inspectors present who examined everything and supervised the sales. Undoubtedly very low prices were made on some articles. Bread was sold at 4 cents a loaf and many pounds of sugar at 7 cents, and potatoes and corn were sold much under the regular retailer's price, and so were peaches and apples. There seemed to be no fixed price on anything; the seller got as much as he could, considering the grade of his wares. The markets are now open every morning at 6 o'clock, and it appears to be expected that they will do considerable business so long as they undersell the prices prevailing among the retail trade.

During the week the Municipal Committee, which has been investigating the local food supply and the effect of the European war upon it, has made its first preliminary report. It is very lengthy and can only be referred to here. The committee finds that the increase in prices has been almost wholly brought about by the following four factors:—

First.—The present and anticipated foreign demand for our domestic foodstuffs for future shipment.

Second.—The heavy buying of household supplies by housewives against future needs.

Third.—The holding back by the producer.

Fourth.—The stocking up by local storekeepers and village storekeepers—the latter class having made unusually heavy demands on the producers and wholesalers throughout the country.

Another fact is that both merchants and consumers have overbought, expecting prices were going even higher. The committee believes that there has been some collusion to raise prices in some places and on some articles, but does not believe that these instances can be reached by the law. The committee also finds that another factor in the advance is that a considerable quantity of food products has been engaged for export just as soon as there are ships to carry it.

The committee considers the proposition that an embargo on exports should be made at this time in order to prevent holders from reaping an unwarranted profit by squeezing not only the consumers of Europe but those of this country. It does not believe that the plan is wise, for the reason that this country owes Europe a considerable sum of money. It believes that the debt might better be paid in foodstuffs than in gold.

The committee believes that if the war continues prices will get steadily higher but that the war, in spite of this, will be beneficial to us by opening up new markets for our manufacturers and new ways of manufacturing goods in this country.

Macaroni is mentioned as an illustration. Last year Italy exported 50,000 tons of macaroni to the United States, notwithstanding the fact that we make an excellent macaroni ourselves. The committee does not believe that the opening of city markets will permanently solve the problem of high prices, but agrees that they probably will do so temporarily.

If the war is to continue the committee makes three important recommendations, as follows:—

First.—Substitute foods, by which we do not mean adulterated foods, but foods that are nutritious and strengthening that heretofore have not been generally used by our people.

Second.—Through our public schools, churches and public meetings, educate ourselves as to the relative nutritious value of foods, how to buy them, how to cook them and how to conserve their use.

Third.—Immediately set about to try to increase the railway and other facilities by which foodstuffs are brought into this city, that the supply may be increased and, as speedily as possible, the method of distribution improved and cheapened.

The report is signed by George W. Perkins, chairman of the committee.

The inquiry into the high prices of food continued before Magistrate McAdoo during the week. The principal witness was Edwin F. Atkins, chairman of the Board of Directors of the American Sugar Refining Co. He explained the present high prices of sugar without, however, making any revelations which have not already been made. Speculation in England and Cuba, according to Mr. Atkins, was the main reason for the advance, both in raw and refined sugar. He said that the cost of refining a hundred pounds of sugar had been cents but that unusual conditions had now increased that to 75 cents which means that the refiner makes no money until the margin between raw and refined exceeds $\frac{3}{4}$ cent. He denied the existence of a combination to fix prices and that refiners were not storing plus stock. The whole cause of advance was the extraordinary demand from England, both in this country and in Cuba, owing to the fact that England could not get sugar from her usual European sources.

Another witness before the magistrate was John H. Sims, of the Hecker-Jones-Jewell Co., who testified about flour. He said that his company's product had risen to $5.90 per barrel on July 25th to $7.20 on August 28th; for a time during that interval the market was $7.50. He said that of it was the high price of wheat which, in turn, was due to the speculators and farmers. The farmers, he said, were the prime movers; they would not sell their wheat.

A number of wholesale and grocery grocers were also called, and timony along the lines of previous witnesses.

After the week's testimony was in District Attorney Whitman ve out a statement in which he de certain deductions from the timony as given. The substance this statement was that the increase in the prices of meats to nsumers was due to the increased ices made to the retailers, the late of which was due, according to e packers, to the decrease in the pply of cattle, hogs, sheep, lambs, e., offered for sale in the great e stock markets. The testimony ven by the packers attributed this ficiency in receipts to the follow- g factors:—

(a) To a gradual decrease, during the past two or three years, in the gross domestic production of cattle;

(b) To a steady increase in the domestic demand for fresh meats, due to a constantly increasing population;

(c) To the fact (stated as a matter of opinion) that large numbers of farmers are not shipping their live stock to the market because of their being engaged in the harvesting of crops;

(d) To the fact (stated as a matter of opinion) that a large number of farmers are withholding their cattle from the market in the belief that the existence of a state of war in Europe will enable them, later in the year, to obtain higher prices than those prevailing now;

(e) That the Department of Agriculture of the Federal Government has advised the farmers to hold their wheat, etc., and that the farmers have concluded that if it were advisable for them to hold their wheat, etc., it would also be to their advantage to hold their cattle.

The District Attorney laid great stress upon the fact that the packers had also increased the price of Argentine beef, which they export and which is not affected by the shortage in this country, to the same extent to which they have increased the price of their own beef. The District Attorney intimates that the consumers of the country are being robbed of the effect of the tariff, which allowed large quantities of South American beef to come in, by the fact that the packers obtained control of this and have therefore prevented the price from declining.

The District Attorney does not announce any conclusion as to whether the advance in the price of meats is legitimate or not. He merely decides that further evidence is necessary as to whether there is competition among the packing companies as to buying live stock; as to whether the schedules of receipts and sales of beef, lamb, etc., as given by the packers, are true, and whether there is any com-

Sell FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR Instead of Bothering with Bags

One of our machines can fill 127 CARTONS with FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the time it takes to fill, fold and tie a paper bag. There are 127 more sensible things to do in a grocery store than put up sugar; it's not only a foolish waste of time, even if the boy does it, but besides the cost of the labor you must also take the cost of the bags and the twine and the loss from overweight out of the slender margin of profit.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is ready to sell when you get it; it's as handy as cans of tomatoes or bottles of pickles. It's a tight, neat, clean, convenient, sanitary package that will please your customers as much as yourself. The CARTON does not burst on the way to a customer's home and let the sugar get over everything in the basket or box, it does not burst or fall over and spill when customers handle it. Women like its cleanliness; they like the sparkling white purity of the sugar. Once you start them buying it, they will always buy it.

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs.

SUMMARY OF THE MARKETS.

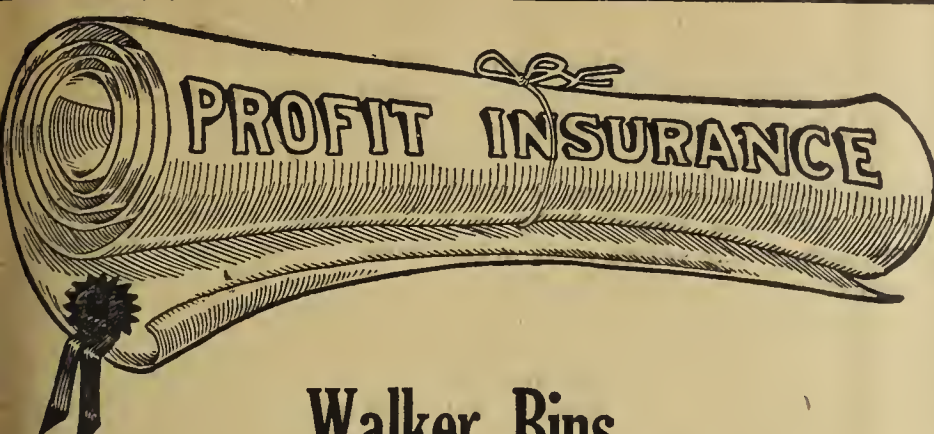

The coffee market is heavy with very little interest being taken by buyers. Values are easy. News from Brazil indicates fair supply of coffee.—Tea: buyers holding on account of uncertainties of situation. No radical change in the week. Prices fairly steady though easier in primary markets.—Rice steady and considerably quieter.—Spices unchanged. Pepper and cloves steady. Business light.—Syrup and molasses unchanged and firm.—Tapioca quiet and steady.—Sugar unchanged on last week's basis.—California almonds firm on news from the coast of opening prices 2 cents above year.—Raisins unchanged from week ago. Currants uncertain and unsettled. No definite arrangements to ship have been made yet. Prunes very quiet. Prices unchanged. Apricots quiet and unchanged, although peaches are shade firmer.—Sicily lemons unchanged and demand equal to supply.—Canned tomatoes easier cause of larger offerings. Corn slow but strong. Peas generally firmer but quiet.—Alaska salmon strong with moderate demand and high opening prices.—Wheat shows further advances and is very strong on buying for foreign account. Flour very firm and high.—Provisions lower on account of liberal receipts. Demand active.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is gradually steadying itself, although the week does not show any remarkable decline in values. The feeling, however, is undoubtedly a shade easier, and unless something interferes with the pending plans for straightening the difficulties out, the market will probably settle still further as time goes on. The consumptive demand for tea is fair.

Coffee.

The coffee market is practically at a standstill, and the trade during the past week has been exceedingly light. Everybody is afraid of the market on ordinary grades of Rio and Santos, although there has been no quotable decline in these since a week ago. Coffee is gradually being arranged for to come forward from Brazil, and there is a fair quantity in the country, especially of Rio. The available supply of Brazils, including the better grades, is not heavy, but is much better than it promised to be a short time ago. The better grades of Santos are still commanding a premium and rule relatively considerably higher than ordinary grades. Mocha has eased off still further and sales of green Mocha, in a large way, have been made during the week as low as 25 cents. Even this is high compared with former prices, but is about 4 cents below the highest price reached during the war disturbance. Java is unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market is unchanged on last week's basis. Refiners are now quoting $7\frac{1}{4}$ cents for granulated and raws are generally quoted at 6.2 cents. In both cases this is a substantial fraction below the highest price ruling since the war opened. England is making contracts for Cuban sugar for January and February shipment at very high prices and no radical relief from the present high market is in sight. The consumptive demand for sugar is good.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose has shown no change during the week nor has compound syrup. Tinned syrups have advanced probably 20 cents altogether from the lowest point, due to the increasing prices for all corn products. Sugar syrups have partaken of the advance in sugars and are quoted at 7 cents per gallon higher than before the war. The demand is very light. Molasses unchanged and quiet.

Fish.

There has been no special change in mackerel during the week. Shore mackerel are still firmly held on a basis of a total advance of about $7 per barrel. Irish mackerel have been and are scarce at an advance of perhaps $4 per barrel. Some new Norways have come over on a basis of about $5 above last year. The catch already exceeds last year and the only difficulty seems to be getting them over. If this difficulty is solved, prices will be lower. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and quiet, but the future market is very firm, due to poor catch. Prices will be higher than last year. Domestic sardines are working up, and foreign are unchanged from last week. None are coming over, but Norwegian, which rule at moderate prices. Prices on new pack Alaska salmon have been made during the week on a basis about 30 cents above last year. Red Alaska talls in a large way is $1.45, f. o. b., against $1.15 last year, and pink 90 cents, as against 65 cents last year. Sockeye talls are $1.95, as against $1.50 last year, and halves are $1.35, as against $1.05 last year. Spot salmon is higher in consequence.

Canned Goods.

There has been a slackening of interest on the part of the jobbers, who have all more or less supplied their early requirements in tomatoes. The packers of Maryland and Delaware are pretty well into the height of their pack and indications are pointing toward an early closing, most of the tomatoes coming in at one time. Where packers have not sold a good many for future delivery, they are apt to need some money to finance their operations, and there is a slightly weaker tendency in the situation. Quotations range to-day from 75 to $77\frac{1}{2}$ cents, f. o. b. factory, in a large way, according to the packers. Indications point to a higher market later on, but for the time being it is possible to pick up some good trades. Packers of corn report that the yield is not turning out as well as expected, and in consequence the quantity of their pack will be more or less curtailed. This has created a very strong feeling, and the market is ruling very strong, prices ranging from $67\frac{1}{2}$ to 70 cents, f. o. b. factory, for Maryland stock. There is no indication of weakness in other sections of the country on corn prices, and the general belief is that the market will be sustained. There is very little business doing at the present time, owing to reluctance on the part of the sellers to part with any of their prospective holdings. They prefer to await the outcome of their pack before offering any further lots. The situation on peas is unchanged. Most of the Southern holdings of packers have been cleaned up, and the New York State packers are not quite through, in consequence of which they are not offering any of their surplus stocks to any extent. What quotations are coming forward do not show any sign of weakness, and a steady market is expected on ordinary grades, with a good strong market on fancy grades, as there is very rarely a surplus of the higher grades. All other lines of vegetables are more or less quiet and buyers are awaiting deliveries of their earlier purchases. The question of delivery in the future is causing quite some anxiety, particularly on string beans and wax beans, as all indications point to only an ordinary crop as to quantity. No change in small Baltimore stock, fruits or vegetables. California canned fruits are quiet; deliveries are getting ready to be started from the coast. Buyers have all anticipated their requirements earlier in the season, and sales have been comparatively heavy. There is no pressure to sell fruit from first hands. The market generally is in very good shape and not likely to be any lower.

Beans and Peas.

The market is practically unchanged in beans and peas. Pea beans are ruling in a jobbing way at $3 per bushel. Marrow beans $4.25 per bushel; red kidney beans $4. California lima beans 9 cents per pound. A carload of new crop California lima beans is now in transit from California to New York, shipped on August 22d by J. M. Waterman Selling Agency. This is the first car that has been shipped this season of the 1914 crop. There has been no change in the future situation on dried limas, and reports from the coast indicate that a very large percentage of this year's crop has been sold by the growers. It is generally expected that prices will be maintained for a few months on account of heavy sales and the necessity of getting shipments out on time. It is barely possible that after the early shipments are completed that there might be a slightly lower range of values.

Dried Fruits.

There is nothing doing in peaches or apricots and prices are unchanged from quotations of last week. Prunes have shown considerable activity, and the market has advanced from $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound above last week's quotations. The general impression of this advance is that same has been caused almost entirely by speculative efforts on the part of large operators on the coast, who have been buying more or less heavy all season at comparatively high prices, and they naturally desire to protect these purchases. This buying has been carried on to such an extent that reports indicate fully 75 per cent. of the crop has been sold by the growers. What the outcome will be is surely guess work, as sales to jobbers throughout the East have been rather light.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line is steady at unchanged prices, with a seasonable consumptive demand. Pure lard is firm at $\frac{1}{4}$ cent advance, while compound is steady at the advance reported last week, with a good consumptive demand. No change is likely to with a fair consumptive demand at unchanged prices. Dried beef is firm at 1 cent per pound advance. Canned meats are firm, with a good consumptive demand. No change is likely to occur in provisions in the near future.

Butter.

The receipts of butter are about normal for the season. The quality arriving is good, considering the hot weather we have been having. The consumptive demand is very good. The market is in a healthy condition on the present basis of quotations. All grades are moving out satisfactorily. No change is likely to occur in the immediate future.

Eggs.

The receipts of eggs are normal. The market is in a healthy condition, with a good consumptive demand. No change from the present quotations is expected in the coming week.

Cheese.

The receipts of cheese are good. The quality arriving is fully up to standard for the season. The market is steady on the present basis of quotations. The consumptive demand is normal for the season. No immediate change in prices is expected.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS

Standard Canned Goods.

A change for the better occurred last week in the weather conditions which stayed, at least, the damage that was being done to the tomato crop by excessively hot and dry weather during the previous ten days. A slow, drizzly rain fell on Tuesday, lasting about 20 hours, followed next day by a day of heavy atmosphere which gave it a chance to soak in. Toward the last of the week the temperature was normal with more showers. This favorable change in the weather will, or should be of much benefit to the tomato vine and to the fruit that is now in sight. How much good will be done by it, and how far it will extend, depends largely upon the weather during the next two weeks. The "crown" tomatoes, that is, the fruit that grows at the top of the vines, had well-nigh been ruined. If the roots of the vines are still in a healthy condition, and the weather proves to be favorable throughout the remainder of the season, there is still a chance for a good-sized crop, but the most optimistic do not expect output to equal that of last year.

The activity in tomatoes continues throughout the week up to the close of business, with indications that the market in the coming week will also be active. As usual, there are strong arguments presented on each side as to whether the market prices ought to advance during the canning season opens up, or whether they should decline to a lower range of figures than the closing prices of the day, when the present buying movement runs its course. The jobber cannot do business without canned tomatoes; the canner cannot do business unless the jobbers buy his wares. Will the buying in September be large than the buying in August? The law of supply and demand, as usual, govern the course of prices.

It is conceded that the corn crop is decidedly worse off than the tomato crop, as a result of the long drought and it is too late now for favorable weather conditions to be of any benefit to it. Spot corn advanced rapidly last week, it is nearly sold out, and the growers do not want to book any more for the 1914 pack unless at very high prices. The advance in baked beans is sustained. Spot sweet potatoes are a shade higher, and for future delivery they are stronger. The new crop of pole variety in green lima beans is arriving and reports indicate a steady crop. Spinach was active in small quantities during the week, and so were string beans. The other vegetables are quiet and unchanged.

The crop of Maryland peaches is larger and of better quality than it has been in a long time, and the demand has been of fair size this month. The buying, so far is of unpeeled pie peaches, seconds peaches in water, and also syrup, and of the standard grade peaches in syrup. These peaches are in attention. New apples are ready for prompt shipment, and the quality is satisfactory. A few pears are being packed in water, and they are in demand for prompt shipment, because last year's pack has been sold out for several months. The stocks of pineapples are remarkably small for this time of the season and prices are stronger. There will be the usual demand for berries this fall, the prices will improve. The other fruits are unchanged. The oysters are almost at a standstill this week, and no changes in the quotations.

Imported Fish Specialties.

With regard to Holland herring, our correspondent in Holland reports that owing to dangers connected with the fishing in the North Sea, practically the entire herring fleet has returned home. Those vessels remaining outside that are not acquainted with the serious situation and condition of the North Sea, are practically mined, and therefore dangerous to navigation. For the time being, consequently, the Holland herring may be considered closed. No herring can be obtained for Holland herefrom our friends abroad.

That will make business more difficult hereafter is the serious question of foreign exchange, because our goods abroad will sell only in their own foreign currency, and request that they be paid before shipment of the goods at the present enormously high rate of exchange. In fact, the shippers of various countries with whom we have all come together and formal negotiations agreeing not to sell any of their goods except in foreign currency. Unless bills are covered by cash gold payments before shipments are made, of course, cannot blame them, but at the same time it makes conducting business with Europe to-day a most difficult matter.

Scotch herrings, shipments are still coming, but how long this will continue we do not know. At one time the English Government prohibited export of salt herrings, but has rescinded the order, so some vessels bearing salt herrings have come forward; in fact, one arrived yesterday. Prices for salt herrings in this market are very high, but the high prices are well justified.

The sardine situation presents the same aspect as reported last week. Of course, if sardines there is practically no stock here, and naturally, no stocks can be forthcoming from France, fishing has entirely stopped there. In Portugal, according to cables received, the fishing has stopped altogether for the time being. Of course, there are a few boats on the way which have been sent before the war started, and being shipped via various ports are now here on the high seas, or in some foreign ports. We ourselves have some goods now at the port of Antwerp, confiscated by the enemy, and we have recourse to the courts to obtain possession of our goods, if such recovery is possible.

Belgian sprats, of course there is no stock obtainable. The factory that was present, and the only one in Belgium that is packing sprats, is located in Germany, and Heaven only knows if the factory is still standing and if any managers of the factory are still there because we are quite sure that they have all gone to the front.

In Norway it is most difficult to obtain shipments, but even if those friends who wanted to ship they have practically nothing to sell and there is no stock of sardines, or very little. It is interesting that prices for Norway sardines have not advanced more than they have. The advance is merely trifling. As far as we can see, the present

The Quaker City extends to you a warm and generous welcome. We have a big city and many interesting and instructive relics and busy plants for you to see: The State House, containing the old cracked Liberty Bell, at Fifth and Chestnut streets; Christ Church, Second above Market, where many of our illustrious citizens worshipped one hundred years ago—and around the corner at 232-234 Market street you will find the building and plant of Parke's Unmatchable Coffee—the largest in the State—it's worth seeing. You will feel at home and enjoy a visit which will repay you. The merchants of the country are always welcome, and they come to visit us from all parts of the United States.

MARKET NOTES.

Peaches are still draggy. Despite the fact that New York State will have practically no crop, the market is of peaches and the price ranges from 15 to 80 cents per basket. They are nearby. New York's disaster comes from early frost.

Tomatoes are fairly high considering the season—60 cents for the best. Others are paying 20 cents.

Apples are selling at fair prices to $2.50 per barrel, 50 to 60 cents per basket. There is a good demand for large apples, which are scarce. Last year the market was almost twice what it is now.

Florida is shipping alligator pumpkins North, but they are scarce and not wanted. They average $1.50 per dozen.

There are plenty of imported lemons on the market, but they are bringing high prices—up to $7, and from $1 down to $1. This is much higher than last year.

Nearby grapes average 50 cents a case, or 8 to 9 cents a basket. California Tokays are $1 to $1.40.

There are plenty of Colorado Colorado loupes coming forward, but they are poor and sell at low prices—75 cents $1 per crate.

Government Agents Find Very Little Evidence of Conspiracy to Raise Food Prices.

Only in Boston have the agents of the Department of Commerce, according to the inquiry into the price of foodstuffs, found evidence, it is reported, of a nature sufficient to warrant further probing into the charges of conspiracy to boost food prices. Reports from New York, Washington and other Eastern cities show a general decline in food prices from various causes, but do not indicate their belief that it warrants a Federal prosecution. Reports from New Orleans, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, St. Louis, Seattle and other cities from the Department of Commerce have been turned into the Department of Justice, but no announcement as to their general tenor has been made. Officials of the Department of Justice are now busy comparing reports with those made by District attorneys and other officials throughout the country, and it is understood some additional evidence of great value in possible prosecutions has been obtained. Attorney-General McRee has had called to his attention an alleged "fish trust," which is now said to be operating in Maine, Massachusetts and New Jersey. Newspaper information and reports from private sources regarding this trust have come to

Dry Goods—Notions—Knit Wear

Prices and Conditions With Ribbons.

Possibly domestic manufacturers of ribbons can—in a pinch—cope with the demand; but there is a steady call for imported goods which is insistent and will be satisfied, advancing prices without having any great cooling tendency. Naturally the American manufacturer is not to reap all the benefit possible which is legitimate and proper under the circumstances. On this score an authority in the primary market expressed the following opinion: "Several of the large manufacturers of plain ribbons are reported to have already started selling for next spring. As a rule, however, manufacturers are not inclined to be in a hurry for advances with conditions more unsettled than usual. The lines already out are expected to be priced for spring at the same rates that prevail to-day.

The present demand continues along lines previously reported; that is, very narrow goods, such as an inch and an inch and a quarter, and very wide goods, up to 108 lignes, being wanted. Black silks, wide black satins and stripes are the leaders. The millinery trade favors dark colors, like blues, browns and blacks, but the dry goods trade is taking a longer range of colors.

The situation in black velvets is a disturbed one, because of imports being cut off. Large buyers who have been holding back on their spring orders with domestic mills, believing there was no hurry, are now covering themselves and are paying, it is said, about 1 cent a yard advance. A policy of moderation is being maintained by some of the largest manufacturers of these ribbons, heads of such companies not being favorable to the idea of taking undue advantage of present unusual conditions."

Spool Cotton Advanced to Prevent Speculation.

Quite a batch of voluntary testimony reached the Department of Justice when the Federal Government set on foot an investigation of the increased price of various articles due to the current European cataclysm. A wholesaler of notions complained that the Spool Cotton had advanced their line 20 percent., and, in his correspondence with the department, "that, in the face of a large cotton crop, and the lack of ocean transportation, he is unable to appreciate the necessity of an advance in price." The matter was brought to the attention of this company by the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," eliciting the following reply:—

New York, August 28, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Upon the subject of the recent increase in the price of certain of our goods, the facts are as follows: The goods referred to in your editorial are all imported, are articles of luxury used only in fancy work, crocheting and embroidery, and constitute a very small part of our business. In fact, these imported goods represented only 1.36 per cent. of our total sales during the year 1913. There has been no other increase in our products, except that the price of the Chadwick brand, which had been abnormally low, was increased 4 cents per dozen, or about 10 per cent., which took effect August 15th. This increase was determined upon at the time of the entry of the decrease in the Government suit, under advice of counsel, it having been charged that the Chadwick brand was being sold at an unreasonably low figure and ought to be increased in order to approximate the price of other brands of substantially the same quality.

We should add that the increase of price in imported goods referred to in your editorial was in pursuance of cable instructions from the manufacturers abroad, and that such manufacturers advised us that the increase was necessary in view of the war and in order to prevent speculators from buying up these goods and then putting up the prices. Immediately following the declaration of war we were flooded with orders for these imported goods, obviously not to meet legitimate trade demands, but for speculative purposes; and the increase was intended, among other things, to prevent this. Thus the shipments of the principal article imported, namely, J. & P. Coats' six-cord mercerized crochet cotton, quadrupled; and, in addition to these shipments, numerous orders for thousands of boxes in the aggregate were received, but refused by us on the ground that they were not bona fide trade orders, but solely for the purpose of speculation. If some step had not been taken to stem the abnormal sudden increase of orders we would shortly have had all our imported stock taken and our customers, whom we could not then supply, would have been at the mercy of speculators. It is difficult, if not impracticable, in business to refuse to sell goods which you have on hand, and the ordinary way to stop speculative purchases is to increase the price.

Yours very truly,

THE SPOOL COTTON CO.

B. F. Ilsley, Comptroller.

No doubt speculators in this and other lines handled by general merchants were about snapping up "unconsidered trifles," as it were, in the primary markets, especially. How much of a check an advanced price proved remains to be seen. In any event the storekeeper is the ultimate victim.

Western Merchants Brisk Buyers of Staples.

Advices from the West indicate the general merchant in that favored section is losing no time ordering in his stock for the coming and succeeding seasons. In their weekly review of the dry goods trade the John V. Farwell Co., Chicago, say: "Many items dependent upon Europe for supply are fast being sold up and withdrawn from lines until this country can arrange to produce suitable substitutes. Conditions are unusually favorable for bringing out

Increase Your Business

Intensive retailing presupposes the elimination of waste sales-effort. It does away with the lost time and lost sales resulting from old-time erroneous ideas of selling something that customers do not want.

The modern idea—the efficiency selling-plan—is to sell customers just what they ask for. The public knows, has confidence in, asks for and buys advertised goods.

National Biscuit Company products have become the standard the country over. People have confidence in them—know them, like them, buy them by the millions of packages.

N. B. C. products increase retail-sales-efficiency—they simplify sales-effort—they make business good for every grocer who sells them.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

American manufacturing ideas to meet present exigencies. There is a decided boom in the demand for wool dress goods. Retail stocks are low, and a majority of storekeepers bought lightly early in the season. Now, as goods are being received, they find that purchases were insufficient to meet present demand, and are covering their wants by buying very freely in anticipation of scarcity of desirable wool dress fabrics, which is already beginning to be felt. Another cause for this large demand is scarcity of foreign goods and sharp advances being made by domestic manufacturers—legitimate advances caused by scarcity of dyestuffs and certain grades of wool.

"Merchants in market last week increased sales of wool dress goods over 50 per cent. This increase was especially noticeable in black wool dress fabrics. Active sellers are broadcloths, serges, shepherd checks, Roman stripes, worsted and plaids. The future of the glove business depends greatly upon the duration of the war. At present it looks as if the demand will be far greater than the available supply. Printed draperies are selling well for immediate delivery, with a strong demand for scrims and silkolines. Fur trimmings are very active sellers at present."

Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly summary, say: "Buyers continue in the market in great numbers and orders from salesmen on the road are in much better volume than is usual at this season. Merchants are buying liberally, but not speculatively, of lines that may be affected by the cessation of industry in Europe. While there is certain to be a scarcity of imported goods there will be plenty of merchandise of domestic production for both immediate and spring delivery. Merchants in the agricultural districts are optimistic, looking forward to good prices for grains and all foodstuffs, which will tend to keep up their business during the coming months."

In their latest review of trade conditions the Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co., St. Louis, say: "The most noteworthy characteristic of the market continues to be the steady advance in the cost of all imported merchandise. Every day brings new developments in this situation. Particularly is this true of linens, the prices of which manufacturers are constantly advancing, and this past week has brought forth refusal to quote on certain lines on account of the component parts being unprocurable.

"The dress goods business has developed on broad lines. Plaids of all descriptions have sold within the past two weeks in very large quantities. Shepherd checks, storm, costume and French serges also sell freely, and broadcloths have come forward and probably show greater strength than almost any other item, due to gradual advances by manufacturers and merchants realizing prices at this time are low.

"Buying of all kinds of imported notions is very brisk. Prices have advanced from 10 to 33 per cent., and the supply of German and Austrian goods is absolutely cut off. Hair nets have advanced 75 to 100 per cent. Replenishment of stocks later will be exceedingly difficult, if not impossible."

New Combination Sweaters For Women.

No one is rushing to place orders on a large scale in the sweater line. Authorities in the primary market emphasize the statement that retailers should cover ahead with confidence, particularly that the prospect of advancing wool is affecting alike wool, worsted and zephyr yarns. The summer has proven a successful sweater season for retailing, and therefore the fall trade should be active, which it is not. The typical duplicate order is for a few dozen garments, and in some instances the dozens have been split—a sort of piking business with which everyone is dissatisfied. New styles are being announced and the samples shown, consisting principally of a combination of vests and capes for women. They are offered in a variety of fabrics, and are smart and fetching. As usual, merchants are regarding them gingerly, but it is predicted they will prove big sellers for the fall and winter.

Fine Dress Goods Favored.

Manufacturers of fine and fancy cottons have not been so upset by the current war troubles abroad as are other branches of the dress goods trade. Merchants have bought with considerable freedom, even at advancing prices, and now appear to have covered their needs temporarily, and in view of the unsettled state of trade in many directions, show a disposition to wait for further developments. Prices are holding very steady. Colors which can no longer be supplied have been withdrawn, chiefly the darker shades, including dark blue.

Goods mostly in demand include lawns and India linons. Organdies are being taken, with voiles also in the favored list. Lace and rice cloths, piques, corded and striped voiles and organdies constitute the bulk of the fancy business. Merchants usually want goods for immediate shipment, indicating stocks on hand are kept low and are frequently replenished. The extension of credits may have something to do with this hand-to-mouth buying, although it has obtained among storekeepers of all classes for a year or more. Fashion changes have also their influence, and no general store is anxious to accumulate slow selling lines by overstocking.

A Pointer On Buying Silks Now.

On the desirable silks the present buying for fall is generally satisfactory. Any buyer who can secure desirable silks for delivery within 60 days at present prices should take advantage of the opportunity. This is the opinion of the best posted men in the market. People who keep in close touch with the trade currents in every branch of the dry goods lines. There has been some sacrifices in prices, but they are not on the most desired goods, either as to weave or worth. Many fancies, for example, that were prepared for early and which the actual demand of this season did not favor, were in the lots pressed for sale. Merchants should be on the lookout for "snaps" of this kind, as they make fine special sales in these piping times.

Looking For Lower Prices in Underwear.

With jobbers going over the underwear lines of unknown makers for better prices, merchants have not been slow in following their example, excepting where they are tied hard and fast to take what is handed them at any old price. Merchants in this classification are not much good either to themselves or anybody else, and what they do, say or sell is of the least importance. Some success has followed this hunt for shaded quotations. One important line of men's 11-pound ribbed goods, for example, has made concessions variously stated as being from 12½ to 25 cents a dozen on shirts. Their union suits were similarly reduced 50 cents a dozen.

Women's 25-cent vests for the fall season are slow sellers. A line which opened at $2 to $2.05 per dozen for two-piece garments are now selling for $1.75. Union suits were correspondingly cut. On women's goods for next spring in regard to imported lace trimmings, domestic trimmings will be substituted, as the former have been advanced 25 to 30 per cent. within the last few weeks. Merchandise of other description calling for imported anything in finishing will be subjected to the same changes.

The Dyestuff Scare and Hosiery. Action of Manufacturers Who Impose Conditions.

Just how serious the dyestuff situation is it is difficult to say in view of the contrary reports current. Whatever its status may actually be, it is evident a pretty big scare has been thrown into every line of dry goods and allied merchandise dependent upon colorings. The latest is that the acute, so-called, situation is about to be relieved by the arrival of a cargo of dyestuffs from Germany via Rotterdam. A jobber of note, who was asked by the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" for an expression of opinion as to the real truth, frankly said that inside of two months there would be in the market enough dyestuffs to relieve all anxiety on this score, if there ever had been any in the minds of those who had positive knowledge to the contrary, though unwilling to make any statement, for obvious reasons, to check a bull market.

At any rate, the hosiery men have been seized with the fever, and one Southern mill urges the making of a "strong presentation to Washington devising a method of securing dyestuff via Holland, even as far as using idle (Government) transports at Galveston." As the street phrase runs, that is going some; but it is not likely the administration will favor the "brilliant" idea. It is true, however, that fast dyes, which were a rarity some years ago, are, at the present time, the general thing; and for the greater part such dyestuffs are imported from Germany. The difficulty is chiefly with blacks; and it is conceded that this product cannot be secured from any other source than the German chemists.

Vegetable dyes, which come readily to hand, bleed and turn green. From this merchants may glean that a great quantity of low-price hosiery sold over their counters, and which possibly may have been "guaranteed" to them as "fast black and warranted not to crock," had been colored by the vegetable dye aforesaid. Some mills which are not at all easy in their judgment as to the dyestuff market, are taking orders on the contingent basis that if goods are delivered dyed other than according to sample, there will be no "come back." Others are urging buyers to take more whites and tans and push these in anticipation of a scarcity of blacks.

At a meeting of the officers, directors and Advisory Board of the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers, in Philadelphia Wednesday it was found that no immediate relief could be expected in the dyestuff situation. Domestic manufacturers stated it would take a year to start any plants for their manufacture. It was therefore resolved that the hosiery manufacturers take no orders for dyed hosiery for delivery beyond January 1st, or beyond such time as their stock of dyestuffs of the individual manufacturers will last. Further orders are to be taken subject to delay in delivery, and also, to a reduction in quantity if circumstances compel. Owing to these conditions white or unbleached will be the prevailing color in all hosiery for next spring and summer.

Boots Shoes Findings

Sell From Factory Only.

As a rule, wholesalers carry only certain lines that sell in a particular territory, and seldom stock the brands traditionally known. A case in point is of the "Walk-Over" shoes, for which a subscriber recently made inquiry, and in respect to which the manufacturer of the attached reply:—

Campello, Mass., August 11, 1914
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Concerning something in your paper to the effect that shoes could be obtained of a wholesale dealer, would state that that is incorrect. We sell only to retailers and practically in every case we have but one retail agency in a town. Yours respectfully, Points on the New Lines.

A new Cuban heel, 2¼ inches high, has appeared to supersede the plain the Louis heel.

An announcement has been sent by the factories that on all new orders an advance of 25 cents a pair will be made on all kinds of shoes. This means a higher price for leather goods of every description.

The stock of colt's patent leather made from Russian pony skin, has been taken up and the supply cut off. This means a higher price for leather goods of every description.

Strap pumps are plentiful in the lines for next spring. The straps number from one to five and some of them are quite complex. Quite a run of white shoes is counted upon in the season.

While it is a common notion among makers of women's shoes in Massachusetts, change their lasts once a year or thereabouts, yet one firm knows its stylish models for street wear have been using one last for thirty years. It has changed the patterns and leathers a number of times, as in Legitimate Profit in Shoes.

Since the appearance of the address by A. H. Geuting, secretary of the National Shoe Retailers' Association, at Boston, last month, concerning cost of doing business, profit and fixed prices, which was published in this department of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," he has received a number of inquiries from merchants who doubtless have misunderstood the points made in his argument. In a special bulletin issued by the association, Secretary Geuting wishes to explain that in the first place no matter what specific percentages were used, the idea was to get into the minds of shoe retailers at first, last and always they must know what it costs them to do business. That cost should include interest on money, rent, salary, as well as depreciation, whether the merchant owns his building or not. These items together give the annual expense, which could be divided by the total annual sales to obtain the per cent. of expense, and in order to be really successful, he should add at least 10 per cent. to this percentage, figured as his legitimate profit.

In the address a 25 per cent. cost of doing business was illustrated, but was intended to be arbitrary. In fact, it is mentioned that there are four classes of stores, some in which the cost is 30 per cent. or more, and some in which it is considerably under 25 per cent., but ought he would take as an example 25 per cent. store as being most typical of the average retail shoe store.

Six stores in the same city may each have a different percentage of cost of doing business. Yet each store may be successful, providing its owner or manager forgets the other fellow's expense and makes sure he knows his own, and adds a legitimate profit to it.

General Advance in Prices Imminent. Shortage in Supplies and Findings.

Possibly the public, as yet, are not specially concerned about the advance in the price of footwear of every description. The dealer, on the contrary, keeping close tabs on the market and the attitude of the manufacturer on future deliveries is the occasion of considerable anxiety. In certain quarters, the fact of being obliged to raise prices is a matter of no consequence—an announcement to that effect being sufficient to satisfy the ultimate buyer at retail. As every merchant knows it is not so easy as it looks when the volume of business is taken into consideration the basic foundation for profits. When prices in necessities are increased there is always a tendency on the part of the public to curtail either their average purchase of shoes, or else prefer cheaper and cheaper grades. Neither course is to the liking of the merchant, particularly when he has taken years and capital to build up a trade along certain lines at recognized figures which guarantee quality, style and general satisfaction.

When circumstances are such that prices must be marked up on shoes, as is held to be necessary at the present time, the retailer figures how much his regular trade will be disturbed. The dealer is convinced in advance that if the prices are radically changed upward, the demand will naturally decline. The problem before him is to maintain his standard of sales at such a level that the same profit will accrue as he has been accustomed to entering up in his books. A loss is occasion for more or less perturbation, according as the shoe annex of a general merchant's stock is skilfully managed or otherwise. Apropos of this is the reported uneasiness in shoe manufacturing circles. Advices from producing centers like Brockton, Lynn, Marlborough, Boston and other New England points; Rochester, N. Y.; St. Louis, Mo.; Philadelphia; Portsmouth, Columbus, Cincinnati and Dayton, Ohio; Lynchburg and Richmond, Va.; New York and Brooklyn, say that "despite the fact that the production of leather in this country is only 50 per cent. of the amount used every year, there will probably be no advance in the price of shoes this winter." Now, as a matter of fact, all orders booked in the spring for fall delivery will be filled at the prices then quoted; but on subsequent business an advance of 25 cents a pair has already been announced by nearly every manufacturer of any prominence.

It is further stated that "if the European war continues the pinch will come next spring, when practically all the available stocks of leather will have been consumed, at which time it may be expected that the retail price of shoes to American consumers will advance about $1 per pair. Many orders for shoes are being placed now for spring delivery, but the price is not being mentioned." It is declared that whatever the merchandise is worth this next spring the retailers will have to pay, and this price, if higher than at present prevails, will, of course, be passed on to the consumer. At the present time the manufacturers state it is almost impossible for them to buy a piece of patent or shiny leather of any kind in this country. Furthermore, the cloth tops on many shoes are imported from Germany and no more can be obtained from that source. Slipper ornaments of cut steel and rhinestones, which are also produced in Germany, have already advanced in price about 20 per cent. wholesale.

While the manufacturers above referred to have already made the advance quoted, there are other concerns who, in interviews with the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," say they are about to take the same step. They declare "everything is up in the air, and we hardly know where we stand as to the future. The European disturbance bids fair to cause an increase in the cost of shoes owing to the scarcity of several kinds of leather; and to the absolute shortage of chemicals and other agents used in the tanning industry. Much rubber, felt and fiber will be used for shoe soles, it is expected. Buttons, eyelets and other findings come from Germany, so there will be a shortage of these also. Other items used in shoe manufacturing, such as bristles, shellac, wax, etc., are also rising in price. There is no desire to advance prices, but as necessity compels."

Popularity of Shoes With Wood Peg Heels.

Polished floors for dancing are bringing about a strong demand for wooden pegged heels and their popularity is already a factor with dealers who watch passing preferences in their shoe stock. With wooden pegs they wear with the leather, which when nails are used the leather will wear away much faster than the metal, which scratches and mars the floor and annoys and disconcerts the dancer. Another excellent run this season has been on low-cut turn shoes with wood and leather Louis heels. It is believed, however, that a bigger seller in another season will be the flexible McKay shoes.

Hardware Tools Specialties

Advertising Fakirs vs. Reliable Houses.

In a broadside statement, published in the "Public Ledger," the Curtis Publishing Co., referring to National advertising, says: "A few manufacturers, with more shrewdness than wisdom, have taken advantage of the merchants' enthusiasm for advertising. They have announced that they are about to inaugurate a campaign, and have induced the retailers to stock the goods in order to supply the expected demand. Then they have let their promised advertising fade away into a mere whisper or absolute silence; and the dealer has found himself under the necessity of selling the goods by his own efforts or not at all. This petty swindling is not so common now "as once upon a time." As evidence of their good faith and intentions, the story runs, "for years the salesmen of the Simmons Hardware Co., for example, have carried with them a complete set of forthcoming Simmons' advertisements, in addition to their regular 3,000-page catalogue."

Ready Mixed Paints on a Rising Market.

With the market for raw material steadily advancing, the manufacturers of ready-to-use paints, such as are usually carried in stock by general merchants with a hardware department, may also be called upon to schedule a higher list for their goods. No intimation of this step has as yet been made, but the conditions of the primary market for the essentials needed would seem to warrant such a move. The European turnover is having its effect upon many products used by paint manufacturers, and advances have been general in all imported products, owing to the impossibility of replenishing supplies.

Importers of colors will be unable to fulfill their contracts, and American color manufacturers are seriously handicapped because of the impossibility of procuring imported raw materials. It is reported, authoritative advices say, there is practically no dry color market at present, and this will obtain for quite a period. This condition prevails apparently right through the entire line of paint fundamentals. Further, varnish makers show considerable anxiety, and if this raw material advances still further, as now seems likely, because of the curtailment of shipping, varnishes of certain grades will undoubtedly be advanced. With these facts before them the merchants should not be dilatory in ordering in their fall stock. The selling season is at hand.

How Much "Guaranteed" Hardware is Faked.

When is a guarantee not a guarantee? Or is it simply a fake statement to catch the unwary general merchant who often carries a representative stock of hardware? It is known all sorts and kinds of guarantees are vouchsafed the buyer, and to one not skilled in his line the consequences are not always what are desired when the goods pass into and are given the "acid test" by the ultimate consumer. Among a lot being considered as to their literal truthfulness and sincerity, the appended has the right sound. Probably the manufacturer, who claims to be the world's largest maker of mechanics' hand tools—pliers, bits, screw drivers, glass cutters, etc.—means what he says, as follows:

Few words have been more abused than "guarantee." Owing to its flexibility the trade has insisted on something more definite—more substantial. The bond packed with these goods eliminates all guesswork. — & — Co. two-year bond certify that the — bonded tool packed with this bond carries with it the following distinct assurances: First.—That there is no flaw or defect in the material. Second.—That the workmanship is of the highest grade attainable. Third.—That it is free from any inaccuracy in adjustment. Fourth.—That it will give absolute satisfaction to the purchaser for two years.

Whereas, — & — Co., making the foregoing representations, bind themselves to wit: Warranty. If the said — bonded tool covered by this bond, at any time within two years fails to meet the above stipulation in any particular, — & — Co. agree unconditionally to replace with a new tool or adjust the same so as to give two years' service.

The bond is gotten up and printed in the regulation style, and to which the firm's signature in fac simile is attached. The concern conclude this effective statement by "Are you going to be satisfied with simply 'guaranteed' tools?" The quotation marks are significant and carry a world of meaning.

Hardware Exhibition Next Month.

Plans for a hardware and house furnishing exhibition, to be held October 12th to 17th, on the first floor of the Parkway Building, were formulated at a meeting of the Philadelphia Hardware Association Wednesday evening last. It is expected that at least 59 firms—wholesalers, jobbers and manufacturers—will make adequate displays of their respective lines. Participation in the exposition will be restricted to local concerns.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A New York Real Estate Speculative Scheme.

Adamstown, Pa., August 26, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Please find inclosed some cards of the American Real Estate Co., New York, and I desire to ask you what you know and think about the company as a safe and good investment. I have not yet any connections with the firm and have long ago concluded not to be hasty and get caught by the smooth talk of agents or representatives. I concluded to give you or send you for your inspection as to their claims and see what you know about same. Thanking you for a reply in your paper, I remain, Yours truly, H. F. SNADER.

The scheme referred to is selling the 6 per cent. gold bonds of the American Real Estate Co., 527 Fifth avenue, New York. The concern is not rated in the mercantile agency books, and nobody connected with this paper ever heard of it. The bond scheme in a nutshell is the offer of $100-$1,000 bonds, maturing in ten years, which are supposed to be secured by New York City real estate. The bonds are paid for in monthly installments and very alluring figures are furnished as to what the maturity value of the bond will be. Of course, the bond buyer has no say as to the character of the real estate which the concern buys, if it buys any, and it would probably be rather difficult to find out definitely whether it had bought any and where it was.

This correspondent is advised not to invest his money with this company. The scheme is typical of a number of other schemes in New York City, which are pursuing the same business and which are generally regarded as very doubtful investments. It is a kind of investment to let alone.

One concern, which was apparently doing precisely the same sort of business as this, went completely to pieces only a few weeks ago, and most of the investors will not get a dollar of their money back. Both criminal and receivership proceedings are now pending in this case.

From all of our investigations on this subject there is no real security behind many of these real estate schemes. They say they own real estate, but very often it is of such doubtful and problematical value that even if they own it, it does not represent real security.

Topeka (Kansas) Retail Grocers Association Exonerated From Conspiracy to Raise Prices.

The Topeka (Kan.) Retail Grocers Association and the Topeka Wholesale Grocers have been "on trial" during the past few days before the United States District Attorney, Fred. Robertson, who acting under instructions from Washington, has conducted an investigation for the purpose set forth in the official order from Attorney-General McReynolds, as follows:—

With the view to investigating the marked increase in the price of foodstuffs since the outbreak of the European war, to ascertain whether the increases are due to any combination or combinations in restraint of trade or other unlawful action. Please co-operate by communicating to the Department any information which you can obtain on the subject together with your opinion in respect to the appropriate action to be taken.

The District Attorney, after a thorough investigation, made the following announcement: "I shall report to Washington that nothing has developed the course of this hearing to indicate that the Topeka retail grocers or the Topeka Wholesale Grocers' Association are in the least responsible for the increase in prices or that they have entered into agreements or combinations to influence prices."

War Prices Halted

Many items in our line have advanced. The cost of living will average higher; still there are a few bright spots for those with a limited purse. Here is an opportunity

BLUE DOT EXTRA SIFTED PEAS—With most everything in the food line advancing, here is an opportunity to buy a line of Canned Peas, at extremely low prices, in fact as low in price as similar goods have been sold for several years. We believe, in a short time, these prices will look cheap. Extra Sifted, Maryland grown, small and tender, per doz., at 85c.

BLUE DOT SIFTED PEAS—This is the same quality as noted above, only a size larger, free from yellows, tender and excellent value, to be retailed at 10c.; per doz., at 75c.

ALASKA EARLY JUNE PEAS—Here is a lot of Maryland-grown Peas, free from yellows, good full cans. There are some hard Peas in this lot, but we consider them very good value. Price, 65c. per doz.

BURK'S Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

¶ The European war will not prevent customers of Butler Brothers from enjoying a full measure of Christmas prosperity.

¶ This is so because WE HAVE THE GOODS. Our holiday buying force is always mobilized. We had most of our European imports contracted for before others started.

¶ And now, with the continent shaking in the greatest of conflicts, ours apparently is the only complete stock of holiday goods in America. More than 90 per cent of our holiday importations was IN STOCK before the crash came. The remaining 10 per cent had reached safe waters when the pall of battles settled down.

¶ Our first duty, in this extraordinary situation, is to take care of our regular customers in their normal requirements.

CCLXXV.—A Case Showing When An Order For Merchandise is a Binding Contract.

I have taken occasion from time to time in these articles to emphasize that an order for goods, given by the buyer and accepted by the seller, was a legal contract from which neither party could withdraw without the other's consent. A man who has given an order for merchandise has no more right to cancel it, without the seller's consent, than the seller would have, after he had accepted it, to refuse to deliver. The transaction is as much a contract as can be. It embodies all the legal elements of a binding agreement, and if either party violates it, he can be made to answer in damages to the other.

Last week I happened to run across the report of a recently decided case which is so directly in point that I am going to refer to it. The plaintiff was a producer of grass seed and the defendant a general merchant who sold grass seed among other things. The origin of the transaction was the following letter, sent to the buyer by the seller:—

The last few days we have sold several cars new crop Kentucky blue grass seed, price $2 per bushel of 14 pounds, f. o. b. cars here, for 19 pounds test, average quality of the season, August, September or October delivery. If you are interested, wire us upon receipt of this letter and we will try to confirm. We think the outlook is favorable for a good yield, but of course the crop could be largely ruined by weather conditions from now on.

The buyer's answer was a straight order, on a regular order blank, as follows:—

For stock, description of material wanted, 50 sacks, 1912 crop, Kentucky blue grass seed, 19 pounds test for first quality, at $2 per bushel, f. o. b. Paris, Kentucky. This is as per your letter of May 4th. Do not make shipment later than August 15, 1912.

This the seller acknowledged as follows:—

We acknowledge receipt of your letter of 10th and order for 50 bags Kentucky blue grass as per our quotation May 4th, $2 per bushel of 14 pounds f. o. b. Paris, guaranteed to be pure Kentucky of the new crop, and test 19 pounds to the measured bushel. Am pleased to have your order.

When this letter was sent and received, a legal, binding contract existed between the parties, but no more binding than any order for merchandise which is given and accepted.

Later the buyer sent another order which was also accepted. The letters covering this are reproduced:—

THE ORDER.

Deliver or ship next August, to our store, 100 sacks of 1912 crop Kentucky blue grass seed, 19 pounds first quality as per your letter of May 4th. Make shipment not later than August 15, 1912. This is in addition to our order No. 31,471, of May 10th—$2 per bushel, Paris, Kentucky. Please acknowledge this additional order.

THE ACCEPTANCE.

We are pleased to have your additional order for 100 bags 1912 crop Fancy Kentucky blue grass seed, testing 19 pounds to the measured bushel first quality at $2 per bushel, f. o. b. cars here, shipment first half of August. We thank you very much for the business and will do our best to see that you get nice quality.

This was another complete contract for the additional amount.

About a week after the last of the above letters were written, the buyer attempted to cancel both orders in the following letter:—

Please cancel our orders No. 32,162, May 16th, for 100 sacks blue grass, and No. 31,471, May 10th, for 50 sacks blue grass. Mr. Richter placed these orders with you by mistake, not knowing that they had already been placed elsewhere by the writer, and the error was discovered only this morning in checking up our purchase files. Please acknowledge receipt of this cancellation.

Between the giving of the order and its attempted cancellation the market for grass seed had sharply declined, which may or may not have been the reason for the cancellation. However, the seller refused to cancel, writing: "We cannot see our way clear to accept cancellation of this order. We accepted the order in good faith and have purchased the seed to fill it at from 30 to 35 cents per bushel higher than the present market. We would of course expect to fill the order if there had been an advance instead of decline."

Later the seller asked for shipping directions, they were refused, and he entered suit against the buyer for the difference between the purchase price of the seed and the then market price. This amounted to about $840.

The defense which the buyer put up was ingenious, but it lasted but a very short time. In substance it was that the orders were not contracts at all, but simply "invitations to do business." Of course this was nonsense. They were offers, acceptances and acknowledgments, and the court so held. Nothing could be a more binding contract, and the buyer, after twisting and turning in every way that offered escape, was compelled to pay the amount claimed, together with interest and all the costs on both sides. The court said: "By the correspondence between these parties it is made clearly to appear that a definite point was reached where there was an unqualified proposal by one party and an unconditional acceptance by the other. And the affidavits of defense are insufficient to prevent judgment."

The moral is to sign no order without first reflecting that you are executing your part of a contract which the seller can surely enforce as soon as he accepts it. No man who is not sure that he wants an order enforced should sign it.

There is one exception to this rule, and only one. Let us say that A and B have been doing business together for many years. A is a jobber, B a retailer. B has been accustomed to give A orders, some of which he would cancel at will, A always accepting the cancellation and never enforcing. Here A has put himself in a position where he can never refuse to accept B's cancellations, without first giving B notice that he would do so as to all future dealings. This is because by a "course of dealing" he had led B to believe that every order given could be cancelled at will.

This is the only exception to the rule that a definite order for merchandise, accepted by the seller, can be enforced if the seller wants to do it.

Lorain (Ohio) Retail Grocers' Association Charged Before City Councils With Being a Trust.

Councilman Hazzard, of Lorain, Ohio City Councils, has filed charges before that body that the Lorain Retail Grocers' and Butchers' Association is a trust and is illegally inflating flour prices. A committee was appointed to hear evidence. The evidence which will be submitted by Hazzard is in a nutshell as follows: That a local price taker told him that when they tried to sell flour at 25 cents a sack less than other grocers were charging, they were notified that unless they sold it at the same price as other dealers they would not be furnished with any more flour of this particular brand; that a trader grower had stated that when he approached grocers in Lorain to find out what price they would pay for flour produce, they had referred him to President Ayres, or told him to wait until they could get him on the telephone; that the grocers had formed a combination to rent all of the stalls in the municipal market and sold produce at the same or higher prices than their stores. He asserted that this monopoly on the part of the grocers was the cause of the failure of the city market. He said further that a former member of the association had told him that the grocers had agreed among themselves to charge a profit of 25 per cent. on staples and 33⅓ per cent. on green stuff.

Stock Corn Puffs Now

The Third Puffed Grain

Prof. A. P. Anderson some years ago created Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice and millions have found them the most delightful cereals ever served. For eight years he has worked to apply his process to corn. He failed again and again, but at last he succeeded. Now we offer this grain, steam exploded, in the fascinating form of Corn Puffs.

You have never known any product of corn anywhere near so delightful. The toasted corn flavor is brought to its fullness by an hour of terrific heat. And it comes in fragile, porous globules ready to crush at a touch.

Advertised price 15c per pkg.

Corn Puffs will be widely advertised, beginning at once. The same advertising methods which have made Puffed Rice and Puffed Wheat so well known will be used.

You may not be able to get Corn Puffs immediately. However, jobbers will be supplied just as fast as we can make the goods. We hope you will put the goods in stock as soon as your jobber has them.

Free Talk About the War.

Did you read what the President said about not talking a lot about the war? Blamed good advice, if you ask me. Of course nobody'll take it, but that don't make any difference—it was good all right.

Specially to the man with a store who has to sell goods to all sorts of people. There's an awful lot of business been spoiled by pushing people's faces in where they didn't belong. If I was running a college, seems to me I'd cut out Greek and Latin and run a course in how to keep the mouth shut when there ain't a call to open it.

My wife gets her groceries from an old fellow that this war has just been nuts to. He ain't been so stirred up for years. I believe he was Irish away back, and of course he has more put to talk about it than we have that were born over here. But all the same, he hadn't ought to keep clacking about it to everybody all day along.

When there ain't any customers in the store to talk to about it he gabbles to his clerks and gets them all fussed up. My wife says she went in there the other day and found the old man and the delivery boy at it hammer and tongs. The boy thought China had declared war on the United States, or was going to, and he and the old man told each other what they thought. The boy's trouble was, he'd been reading the papers. You can find any old thing you hunt for in them.

"I'm getting so I hate to go in there," my wife said to me, "I don't want to hear about the old war all the time. It's bad enough not finding anything else in the papers, but when you have to have him going at you all the time, it's sickening."

"Why don't you tell him to shut up?" I asked.

Oh, she couldn't do that! Why not? Oh, it wouldn't be nice. I'll bet I'd do it, in a minute, if he pushed his clack on me, but it wouldn't do any good. Nothing but a gag would do for him.

"He made one woman mad the other day," she said. "There's a Mrs. Brensen over here on Main street—her parents are Germans. He was going on about the Kaiser starting it, and being a murderer, and a lot of stuff to Mrs. Brensen and she got mad right away and they had a furious argument. In the end she went out as mad as could be."

Oh luscious! Great for business! Great!

I said a few well chosen words at that, and my wife came back.

"I suppose the man really has a right to have his ideas," she said.

"Just because he has a store isn't any reason why he should have to be a coward all the time. Other men express themselves."

"He can have all the blamed ideas he wants," I said, "but he don't have to shove 'em down people's throats, does he? Specially people that he ought to know won't like the taste of 'em. He ought to pay some attention to his customers' feelings."

"Well, I'll bet Mrs. Brensen never goes there again," she said.

No more she will, I'll bet. If she don't, he simply took her business and choked it to death. And what did he get out of it—nothing but the satisfaction of hearing himself shoot off. Seems to me if I couldn't have both, I'd rather have the business. You can buy pants with it.

Between you and me, I'm getting so plumb sick about this damn war that I don't know what I'll do if it keeps up. Why you don't do anything else! Instead of ten to their own business, a hundred thousand fellows this very minute are gabbling about it, half of them people that don't want to go. And a whole lot of times to go that get mad over some things are said.

Gee, if I only had a cent every minute that's been wasted since this war broke out, and every grouch that's been made saying the wrong things to wrong people! Holy codfish, I have more money than John Rottonfeller.

The trouble is that there's all sorts of feet to tread on and can't tell 'em by their shoes a German feet and Russian feet, Italian feet and English feet, the feet of people whose fathers' grandfathers came from all places. You ain't ever safe to say anything, and the only thing is not to say anything, except to your wife. Hand it all to her. Ain't that right?

ADDRESS AD-WRITING CONTEST

MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD

927 ARCH STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

During the past week Mr. Smedley visited Freeport, Pittsburg, Uniontown, Connells-Latrobe and Greensburg.

On August 25th the merchants of Freeport met and listened to an address by the organizer. President Stark and Secretary Spotts, of Uniontown, also made interesting remarks. For some years there has been a retail grocers' association in Freeport but it was thought best to enlarge the scope of the association so as to take in all the merchants. The organization starts off with about 12 members. A membership committee will work to secure the approval of every merchant. President Sweeney and Secretary McLaughlin are the right men in the right place. The association will be reported at the State convention. Freeport is a good business town and the merchants are a live, hustling lot of business men.

Pittsburg will send a big delegation to the convention. Special arrangements have been provided. President Durbin and others will travel by automobile.

Union Castle grocers will be well represented at Philadelphia by a delegation of about 12 members.

Nanticoke is the latest addition to the association family, the merchants of that splendid town having organized an organization on September 1st. They will affiliate with the State organization and will be represented by delegates at the convention. Mr. Smedley was assisted in the work of organization by Mr. C. Messick, secretary of the Uniontown association, and he made a simple and practical address. The organization will be known as the Merchants' Association of Nanticoke and Vicinity. Officers are as follows: President Daly, Vice-President Batman, Secretary M. G. Messick. Membership Committee to be elected. The organization consist practically of the entire membership. Messrs. Edmunds, Suchfield, Klausman and Batman will take charge of the committee. By-laws will be prepared by Henry Edmunds, Charles Davis, Delbert Craig.

Jersey Shore merchants and their families and clerks will picnic on September 16th. Mr. Smedley has been invited to deliver an address.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"Try a package of GOLD BRAND PREMIUM CHOCOLATE and you'll realize why its quality and flavor have made it famous all over the world."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

We had the pleasure of a brief visit with the executive committee of the Pittsburg Grocers' Association on the evening of August 26th. Later on we made a short talk at the meeting of the Pittsburg Butchers' Association.

We have planted the seed of organization at Uniontown and expect it to grow. Uniontown is one of the best business towns in the State and needs an organization very badly. It is a paradise for dead beats.

There is a good retail grocers' association at Scottdale which should join the State association. President Taylor and Secretary Graff are hustlers and will probably attend the State convention.

Latrobe has joined the State association and we hope it will be represented at the convention. The membership of this live organization is composed of about 80 per cent. of the merchants of the town. For a young association it has done a lot. Free street car ride days, dollar sale days, prize contest essays on "Why we should buy in Latrobe," all have helped to prove the efficiency of this association. A big and successful picnic was one of the events of the summer. President Lowe and Secretary Stader enjoy the confidence of the members.

We are planning a campaign at Connellsville. More about this later.

Greensburg will be represented at the convention.

The North Side Business Men's Association (Pittsburg) has elected a new secretary in the person of Charles Wolff, an active young business man who believes in doing things. He will attend the Philadelphia convention accompanied by several other members.

The East Liberty Wholesale Grocery Co. is erecting a three-story and basement reinforced concrete building on Lambert street, size 48 x 90 feet, and which it is estimated to cost $35,000. This has been found necessary owing to the rapidly developing business of the company. Manager Doble and his assistant, Mr. Catherwood, are certainly making things hum, as is attested by the constantly increasing sales.

Franklin and Oil City have sent in applications for membership in the State association.

Percy F. Smith, Pittsburg candidate for the office of Lieutenant-Governor of the State on the Washington Party ticket, has been invited to address the convention on September 10th. Mr. Smith is of the pioneers in organizing merchants of the State and what has to say will be worth listening.

Mr. Smedley will organize merchants of Nanticoke on September 1st.

Once more remember that the latch string is on the outside every merchant in the State at Philadelphia, September 7th, 8th, and 10th, whether a member of local association or not. Come share in the good things and part in the discussions. The convention will be a four days' graduate college course for merchants who have an ambition for greater success in business.

The Barnesboro association joined the State association and be represented at the convention. Richard Scollins.

Mr. C. Pomerantz, Fifty-second and Walnut streets, Philadelphia, sends in a batch of his advertising matter and asks, "What do you think of the inclosed folder for general publicity?" Mr. Pomerantz seems to be doing two kinds of advertising, one for direct results and the other for general publicity. For the former he has a very well printed card headed "Home-Made Good Eats," which I have reproduced in much smaller form. It is printed on gray card, 5½ x 9½ inches, by a printer who knows his business.

This is first-class advertising; it should certainly get results, if carefully circulated among the right people. Of course it would be easy to completely kill this advertising, or any other advertising, merely by failing to take enough care in getting it into people's hands. Mr. Pomerantz's card is addressed "To the Lady of the House," which is somewhat time-worn and stale. I should use something a little more catchy, like "Read the Other Side, Madam," or something like that.

The folder which Mr. Pomerantz is using for general publicity is a manila colored card, 6 x 8 inches, folded in the middle, making a four-page folder, 4 x 6. On the outside page, printed like a cover, is printed "This Should Interest You, Read It." In the inside appears some matter which is evidently intended to be epigrammatic. I have had the matter photographed and here present it:—

respect for the Pomerantz store. I know where Mr. Pomerantz got a little sayings, but if he wrote them himself, he can congratulate himself having ad-writing abilities of a high order. The difficulty as to this class of advertising is always as to getting people to read it. I have already said that if they do, it will do some good. As for general publicity I believe it to be good if people will read it. Some will undoubtedly read it, but I believe I would if there was less of it handed them at a time. I should have cut down the number of paragraphs on this card at least a third and set them in large type. If Mr. Pomerantz will have his printer do this, as an experiment,

WE want you to read over the following short notices of our method of doing business. We have no closed doors—nothing hidden away—no secrets. The truth—clean, honest dealings—is told here.

Read them through.

Our eggs were not laid in China. Each egg has its own past to answer for. We sell "STORAGE" eggs under their right name and FRESH, near-by eggs for just what they are. Egg confusion may be good business, but this store stands for TRUTH.

We don't sell "full cream cheese." Nobody does. There isn't any. Our cheese contains all the cream the cow gave, BUT NO MORE. It is honest, whole-milk cheese.

Small prunes contain twice as many pits and skins as large prunes. Do you want prune meat or prune pits? WHICH IS CHEAPER? THINK IT OVER.

If you want foods preserved with BENZOATE OF SODA we will have to sell them to you because they are legal—BUT you buy them with your eyes open.

All our "pounds" weigh sixteen ounces. We don't recommend short-weight packages with fancy labels. PUT US TO THE TEST.

OUR BREAD is wrapped in sanitary wrappers. It is not pawed over by dirty fingers. WHY EAT DIRT, ANYHOW?

This is a FOOD store, not a DRUG store. This is why we are not friendly to drugs in foods. This is why we are willing to tell you ALL WE KNOW.

Get down to plain business and look to us for FOOD—not for lamps, lace, shawls, china, ding-bats and other premiums that we would have to BUY with real MONEY and sell to you in the same way EVEN THOUGH YOU MIGHT THINK you are getting them for nothing.

We don't sell loose milk. When nobody does more babies will LIVE TO VOTE.

We have no ART DEPARTMENT. That is why we don't believe in painting our foods with coal tar dyes or other "harmless" color schemes. Read the label. THIS IS YOUR STORE.

PLEASE NOTE that our foods are COVERED. We believe in sanitary protection just as much as the health department does and for the SAME good reasons.

Pure FOOD cranks? YES! Why make a test-tube of your stomach, then put the blame on God for sickness?

FUNNY! All the jugglers are not in the circus. The same bag of coffee is often dumped into three different bins and comes out at three different prices—BUT NOT AT THIS STORE!

DR. WILEY. We honor him because he turned the light on the grocery business and showed the grocer the tremendous responsibility he assumes when he undertakes to feed the people.

SUN-DRIED FRUITS are better than fruits bleached with acids, but they don't look as pretty. You are satisfied with BRUNETTE raisins, currants and prunes. Why do you want your apples, apricots and peaches bleached BLONDE?

WHOLE WHEAT BREAD. From all of the wheat just the way God made it. Pale children often need FOODS, not drugs. Let them have honest bread and note the change.

MILK SPOILS, so do eggs, meat, fish, tomatoes. Why? Because they obey nature's laws. Don't expect catsup to be an exception. It won't be unless you put dope in it. Then it defies nature's laws. What it does in the stomach we don't know.

GOD put twelve vitalizing mineral salts into the wheat. MAN takes eight of them out to make white flour and wonders why there are so many FALSE TEETH.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

How to be Sure of Good Ham

Just see that it is SWIFT'S PREMIUM HAM. That is all you need to watch. We guarantee every ham that bears SWIFT'S PREMIUM brand.

That is mighty important to you, BECAUSE if a woman gets a good ham from you one time, and a poor one next time, she thinks you don't know your business, or you don't care whether you please her or not.

We get good hogs, selecting them carefully, cure our hams, so as to make them uniformly satisfactory, and then advertise them to make people's mouths water for them. You can be sure a PREMIUM HAM is tender, delicious and appetizing.

Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association Holds Largest Convention in History

Nearly 700 Delegates and Visitors From All Points in State Meet in Hotel Adelphia, Philadelphia. Lock Haven Gets Capital Prize of $500 in Pennsylvania Plan Awards. Wessels Gets Watch. Notable Address and Sound Discussion Leads to Weighty Plans For Future Benefits. Meadville Next Convention City. Old Officers Re-elected.

The eighteenth annual convention of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association convened at the Hotel Adelphia, Philadelphia, last Tuesday morning, September 8th, at 10 o'clock, though there was a meeting of all local secretaries and a grocers meeting at The Bourse the day before. The convention was the largest we ever held in Pennsylvania, nearly 700 persons being present. There were a large number outside of the registrations, and all told, 68 ladies registered. A strong New York delegation, led by Henry Lohman, secretary of the Brooklyn Association, came over on Wednesday morning. To any one who has attended other Pennsylvania State conventions, this one was noticeable for the increased number of stronger men. No one could look into the faces of the several hundred delegates without realizing that there was real bone and sinew there.

One of the most striking features of the entire convention was an exhibit of the newspaper clippings which represented the press notices given to the meetings held by William Smedley in different sections of the State. There was a small mountain of these, filling several large volumes. Every line meant help for the cause of organization.

At the preliminary meetings at The Bourse on Monday, E. O. Spotts, of Tarentum, conducted the meeting of secretaries.

The following secretaries were present: George L. Dobie, Bradford, Pa.; E. O'Brien, New Castle Grocers' Association; H. S. Delp, Girard Grocery Co., Philadelphia; E. P. Henwood, Merchants' Union Protective Association, Bradford; E. T. Messick, Merchants' Protective Association, Pittston; Stephen McArdle, Chester; R. J. Aschenbanner, Retail Grocers' Association of Reading; Alfred A. Wood, Butler; M. Edward Toner, Jersey Shore; F. J. McCaffrey, Philadelphia; E. R. Armstrong, Carbondale Business Men's Association; H. W. Fisher, Philadelphia; R. G. Bates, Williamsport Retail Grocers' Association; W. K. Cuddy, Business Men's Association, Muncy; H. N. Kimmel, Mt. Carmel; T. J. Burkey, Lebanon Business Men's Association.

Slangenhoupt, DuBois Business Men's Association; Robert A. Kerr, Titusville Merchants' Protective Association; J. W. Rittenhouse, Scranton Business Men's Association; E. O. Spotts, Business Men's Association of Tarentum and vicinity; A. G. Kuhl, Erie Retail Grocers' Association.

William Smedley, Philadelphia; A. M. Howes, Erie Business Men's Exchange; Reno Schoch, Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association; T. J. Penman, Manor Business Men's Association; F. E. Heasley, Manor; D. J. Crawford, Homestead Business Men's Association; C. A. Bell, Pittsburg Retail Grocers' Protective Association; H. F. Donnelly, W. G. Barthell, Bernard Buesker, Pittsburg; A. M. Latshaw, New Brighton Business Men's Association; George H. Bausum, St. Clair Merchants' Association; J. R. Grey, Easton; F. B. Farley, Philadelphia; Raymond Stuart, Hanover Merchants' Association.

A number of the members, notably Mr. A. A. Wood, Butler; G. L. Dobie, Bradford, and R. A. Curr, Titusville, related their experiences in the collection of bad debts. The most elaborate address was made by Mr. Dobie, and was in part as follows:—

The most essential thing for the successful operation of a collection bureau is knowledge. Learn all you can about the subject. Spend a little money if necessary for a collection course. There are many such available at small cost and the ideas that you will gain through them will be money well invested. When I first engaged in secretarial work I knew as little about the science of collecting as any inexperienced person could and get by with it. It didn't take very long for it to soak into me that I would have to learn something about the collection business to make that feature of association activity of any real value to the membership, consequently I invested in a number of courses on the subject. While I never used any of these systems in their entirety, I got many helpful suggestions which have been of invaluable aid to me in turning bad accounts into money. I have also found that one can obtain many good ideas and valuable information on collection methods and laws by reading the trade papers. Most all of them maintain a legal department and correspondence column, one of the best in this respect being the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," published every week. Every secretary ought to read this periodical, not only for the reasons already mentioned, but for general information that all of us need in our association work.

As the class of claims that the collection bureau of a retail merchants' association is called upon to handle are almost always against debtors that are not possessed of assets to any extent, my experience so far has convinced me that constant and persistent dunning at regular intervals is the secret of collecting bad bills. I have found that letters constructed along friendly lines are more effective and produce quicker results than notices calculated to frighten the debtor into a settlement.

In the collection of accounts for your association members it is well to keep in mind that all debtors are neither dishonest nor what are commonly termed dead beats and that by doing business with them on a friendship basis wherever possible it will prove to be a profitable policy, not only as regards the percentage of collections as a whole, but in other respects. It frequently happens though that appeals of that character fail in their purpose and means of a somewhat drastic nature must of necessity be resorted to before the conviction of obligation is awakened in a debtor's mind. In such instances where the debtor is a wage earner, or one holding a salaried position, it is often a good plan to make a draft on his employer, the draft to be accompanied by a letter requesting that it be presented to the debtor for collection. The draft is seldom paid, but such a course usually incites the debtor to take up and arrange a settlement of the claim at once. Printed forms containing notice of impending legal proceedings are also very effective, since many debtors fear the law and dislike the inconvenience and publicity connected with a lawsuit. It is a practical impossibility, however, to collect every account, no matter how persistent and systematic your efforts may be. Many bills are dead as soon as contracted, because the creditor either wouldn't or couldn't get a credit report on the risk and took a chance. A good credit rating bureau, if used by the members, not only lessens the number of accounts to be handled by the collection bureau, but its influence is an important factor in the collection of slow pay accounts. It expedites settlement in many cases that otherwise would be delayed almost indefinitely. The results obtained by the Bradford association's collection bureau, in my opinion, are due in a large measure to the influence of organization behind it. This is a distinct advantage, one that the ordinary collecting agency does not possess, and should be made the most of by every association, particularly in the small cities and towns. Our collections now average between 60 and 70 per cent., but it is safe to say that without the association's credit bureau to back up the collecting department that the average would run less than half the present figure. We make only a nominal charge for the service, which is a postal fee of 10 cents on each account and 5 per cent. commission on whatever monies are collected. These charges, of course, do not anywhere near cover the actual expense of collecting department; the difference taken care of out of the revenues from dues, etc. We have never resorted to reducing claims to judgments and advertising the latter as for sale as done by some collecting agencies. I believe, a few associations. Such a procedure is rather expensive and I have never been able to satisfy myself it would pay. On the other hand, a question whether that method would not result in more injury than good to the interests of the association membership as a whole. Every person, matter what his reputation and standing in life may be, has friends and such course might be regarded by many as persecution, thereby arousing public sentiment to the detriment of the entire mercantile business of that particular locality. There is one collecting agency now operating in this State with offices in a number of the large cities, that does not bother to reduce claims to judgments, but through the medium of the newspapers and by bills offers the open accounts as sale to the highest bidder. An opinion on this method by Mr. Elton Buckley, editor of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," which appeared in a recent issue of that journal states that this scheme is a danger one for the creditor and gives the sons thereof.

Many of you, no doubt, are frequently asked for an opinion on the reliability or the methods of outside collecting agencies. On such occasions and at times when the opportunity presents itself, it is well to impress on your members that there is nothing such concerns can legally do that your association cannot do equally as well or better, and for less expense to individual creditor, with the added satisfaction that when a collection is made he can always get his money promptly and that his accounts are never re-out of his possession, which is not always the case when the claims are placed in the hands of these outside agencies.

In closing I want to offer a suggestion or two for the benefit of those who have had little or no experience in operating a Collection Bureau, if there are any present.

Have all your printed matter of good quality of paper and prepared in neat manner.

See to it that all letters are neatly and correctly written. A sloppy looking letter doesn't make a favorable impression on the recipient.

If you use form letters, have them done by a facsimile typewritten process and fill in with type and ribbon to make them look like real letters. They cost a little more than ordinary printed forms, but they are worth it.

Your association's name and address should appear on your envelopes. This can deepen the effect by adopting always using a uniform color of envelope. We use the Government blue stamped envelope, a color not much used by business houses. Debtors will be under the sight of a blue envelope. They recognize your duns as far away as they can see them. That fact will make your notices all the more effective. They soon realize that the only way to escape the stream of blue envelopes is to settle their accounts.

Never make any threats in a letter that you can't legally carry out.

Never write a debtor: "If you don't pay this bill we will take the matter with your employer;" you may get wrong. The better way is to tell him that you have no desire to bring indebtedness to the attention of his employer, and in that way, without saying that you will, leave the impression that you may do so. Then if he fails to settle, draw on the employer. The result will often be the same as if you had entered a written complaint against him, but without giving him any chance to come back at you for intimidation.

and don't forget that all debtors can maintain an attitude of absolute indifference in the face of repeated suggestion through constant and persistent urging. Keep eternally after them.

All of the speakers emphasized the need of an organized system of collecting together with perseverance in applying that system.

Mr. A. F. Ewing, secretary of the Reading Chamber of Commerce and president of the Secretaries' Organization, also spoke upon the general plans of the association.

The present officers were re-elected. Those who followed: E. O. Spotts, Tarentum, president; D. J. Crawford, Homestead; A. Bell, Pittsburg; David H. Raney, Penn Station; M. H. Longwill, Scranton; J. W. Rittenhouse, Scranton; A. Kerr, Titusville, and A. A. Wood, Butler, vice-presidents; A. M. Jones, Erie, secretary, and Reno Schoch, of Philadelphia, assistant secretary.

The grocers' meeting was held in the evening, presided over by John W. Jones, of Easton.

Addresses were made by Mr. Smedley, Bert Kaiser, D. E. Durbin, J. W. Rittenhouse, J. A. Edgar and Reno Schoch. The delegates at these meetings were entertained by Mr. Schoch at dinner.

The convention proper opened at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning. After the introduction of Mr. Edward T. Gallen, of the Frankford Association, spoke briefly of the benefits to be derived from the discussions of trade topics to be given at this convention by gentlemen who are experts in their line. He cordially offered the services of the Convention Committee to help further the success of every one attending in every way possible, and then introduced Dr. J. F. Cattell, Philadelphia City Statistician, special representative of the Mayor, who gave an address of welcome in behalf of the city of Philadelphia.

Dr. Cattell spoke of the vast resources of Pennsylvania, which made it the most independent State in the Union, having done every industry necessary for supplying the needs of civilization.

He gave a number of interesting illustrations as he proceeded. Having spoken of the gathering before him as being one of the men who do things, he compared the merchants of other States (particularly New Jersey and Ohio) for doing things easy with the farmer who sowed alternate rows of onions and potatoes, in order that the onions would keep the potatoes' eyes water, thus doing away with worry in case there was lack of rain.

Dr. Cattell said that "we want to play the game, and hitting the ball doesn't mean hitting the umpire. There lies the difference between success and failure. Support your leaders. There never was a time when conditions required so much original thought and united effort as at the present, in order to rearrange our relations with the outside world. Gradual order is coming out of chaos, and in 18 months this country will enter the greatest era of prosperity ever known by any people in any previous period."

A Revelation in Soup Making

A Revolution in Soup Selling

THOMPSON'S SOUP FLOUR

BEAN PEA LENTIL BARLEY RICE

APPROVED AND ENDORSED BY UNITED STATES NAVY DEPARTMENT

Means NEW business, NEW customers, NEW profits for you, because it makes thick, rich, satisfying and appetizing soup.

MORE WHOLESOME than even home soup made from whole beans, peas or cereals, because all husks and indigestible matter have been carefully removed;

MORE DELICIOUS than ordinary home-made or canned soups, because by elimination of hulls from the finely divided flour, you get a highly developed, distinctive flour. Its quality appeals to the rich, its economy to the poor;

MORE ECONOMICAL than canned soups, because a 10c. can of ordinary soup serves FOUR people—while a 10c. can of Thompson's Soup Flour makes thick, rich soup for SIXTEEN people;

MORE USEFUL to the housewife, because it not only makes soup, but is the finest body for sauces, gravies, thickening, meat substitutes, etc.

some time past there has been a great deal of talk about eliminating the middleman; that the consumer and the producer were the only factors necessary for distribution. But this war in Europe has shown the necessity of distributing middlemen. We must have this splendid machinery of distribution and of financing things."

A telegram from Col. Sheldon Potter, of Philadelphia, who was to have spoken next on "Commercial Philadelphia," was read and stated that he was unable to be present and expressed his regret, wishing all success to the convention.

Elton J. Buckley, Esq., of Philadelphia, in behalf of the Philadelphia and Frankford Associations, expressed these associations' gratification in having the other associations with them, which gratification was particularly sincere, since the Philadelphia and Frankford Associations had something special to show the others. Mr. Buckley said that although this might be considered an exhibition of vanity, there was an element of unselfishness and generosity because of the sincere belief that "we have something to show you which will help you. We have in this city two of the largest retail grocers' associations in the United States. These associations have solved to a great degree the problem of giving service to members, and that is the great modern slogan, the giving of service to members. I don't say this boastfully, but I verily believe that the belief that the members of these associations get more for their money, get more for their interest than perhaps the members of any other anywhere. Much of this is entirely because of better facilities. The members of the other associations, try as they will, cannot do the things that the members of the association of a large city can do.

"Not for any lack of will to work, but entirely on account of the difference in opportunities.

"These Philadelphia organizations are not in any sense handing out benefits as a philanthropy or charity. These organizations have solved the problem of making members work for themselves. They are operated by themselves and through their chosen representatives, and everything done is done by them and not by any one else.

"We have something else here of which we are proud. We have the city of Philadelphia. You have heard a great deal about our being slow, also that we are corrupt and contented. You have heard a number of other things against us. We have political pulls here. So has every city and town. There is not, I thoroughly believe, in the United States a city which gets 100 cents of value for every dollar it spends. Nor is there a town or city which invariably selects the best available men for its public offices. Neither do we, but we are coming a great deal closer to it under the present administration. We are all bound by the delinquencies of human nature. As for being slow, not at all. We have a group of political contractors here who have gotten rich faster than has ever been done in the United States. We have an administration here,

The New York Letter

Retail Meat Dealer Says American Fresh Meat Packers Now Control Argentine Beef Supply. Cold Storage Man Says Storage Houses Are Not Sharing in Food Speculation. Talk of Prosecutions For Food Conspiracy. Tea Market Righting Itself.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, Sept. 11, 1914.

An interesting feature of the week was a statement before Magistrate McAdoo, who is conducting the District Attorney's investigation into high food prices, made by Jacob Bloch, member of the New York Retail Butchers' Association and owner of three stores. Mr. Bloch said that the Chicago fresh meat packers have prevented the public from getting any benefit from cheaper Argentine beef, by themselves acquiring control of it.

Not the retailers, but the wholesalers, Mr. Bloch said, are responsible for the prices of meats. Beef livers, for example, which are a food of the poor and for which there is a steady throughout-the-year demand, are always sold by all the packers at the same price. Sometimes, he declared, they hold the supply back so that prices may go up; he knew that because he had seen boxes of livers in the packers' storerooms on the very day he had been told none were in the market. The same was true, he said, of beef hearts and other special meats. The wholesale price of frozen liver (the only kind that New York now gets) is 12 to 13 cents a pound. So that the retail butcher pays $1.25 to $1.50 for what he used to get for a quarter.

The unanimity with which prices fluctuate was illustrated by Mr. Bloch with his experience and that of the buyers of the two of his three stores for which he does not do the buying personally. He cited pork loins, the prices of which sometimes change three times a day, and averred that when one packer changed them the others did likewise at the same time. If there is a heavy snowstorm in the early morning, he declared, the packers put prices up on all meats; he had never been told why, but supposed it was because they feared their supply might be interfered with. A threatened strike, such as that which menaced the railroads last year, acted the same way, and, he maintained, prices went up, no matter how big a supply of live stock there was or how much dressed beef was in transit or at terminals.

One great handicap the retailer suffers from, Mr. Bloch alleged, is encroachment on his trade field by the packers, who, through controlled companies, sell at retail to "the cream of the consumers' trade," such as hotels, boarding houses, clubs, restaurants and the like. These retail concerns, belonging to the packers and having large capital behind them, offer the big consumer long credit, while they hold the retail butcher up for weekly payments. The intention is, he said, that the retailer shall take all the risky end of the business and bear the heavy expense of supplying the average householder, practically as the packer's agent, being allowed a profit which amounts to "a week's pay."

The settlement of allowances for short weight, bad goods, etc., is very unsatisfactory, Mr. Bloch stated. He declared that all the stuff the packers sold in boxes and barrels would be found short weight if taken from the packer's warehouse and emptied from the containers onto the scales. If these evils could be remedied, he knew the public would get cheaper meat.

Seven measures Mr. Bloch recommended as means of putting both retailer and consumer in a better position were:—

1. Put an export duty on all meats.
2. Have the United States Government open its unoccupied lands for increasing the cattle supply.
3. No female calf to be killed in the next three to five years.
4. No calf weighing less than 150 pounds to be killed.
5. Congress to pass a law setting aside 10 per cent. of the income tax to cover the expense of opening land for cattle raising.
6. Packers to sell only to retail dealers and not to consumers direct.
7. Congress to pass a law establishing Government slaughterhouses.

H. C. Lewis, secretary of the Merchants' Refrigerating Co., 163 Chambers street, gave out a statement during the week denying that the cold storage houses had any part in the schemes of their customers to store food for a rise. The statement is in part as follows:—

Not a single cold storage man in this city is interested to the extent of one penny in goods in his warehouse. It would be working against the interests of our customers to have any financial interest in goods in storage. It would be as much as an employee's job is worth to put anything in storage on such a basis, no matter how attractive the proposition might seem.

Mr. Lewis also gave some interesting figures regarding the quantity of goods in storage this year:—

The figures of the associated warehouses, which include forty-six concerns all over the country, show a shortage of 9,000,000 pounds in butter in the United States now, as compared with last year. On September 1, 1913, there were 73,567,600 pounds of butter in the cold storage plants of the association. On the first of this month there were 63,270,608 pounds—and the past three months are those in which most butter is stored.

There are 180,000 more cases of eggs in storage this year than last, the reports show, but last year the quantity was abnormally small. Last year eggs were imported from Russia, Austria and Germany. The increased storage this year is just about equal to what was imported last year. The figures show that there is a decrease in the quantity of butter, cheese and poultry stored in our warehouses now, as compared with a year ago. There is a very slight increase in meats, and a somewhat greater increase in eggs.

The charge that there exists in New York State a "gigantic conspiracy" of owners of cold storage and refrigerating plants to increase the cost of food was made by Attorney-General James A. Parsons in a statement just issued. He declared that within a few weeks he would institute legal proceedings against the firms involved, and expressed the belief that the laws of the State would compel the dissolution of the alleged combination and the punishment of the parties to it. Although he admitted that several New York City plants were implicated in the alleged conspiracy, he refused to make public any names.

Mr. Parsons declared that investigators, who had begun their inquiry under the administration of Thomas Carmody, former Attorney-General, and were continuing it, had ascertained that when prices were highest it usually was found that the largest amount of food products were in storage. He said that if this food had been placed on sale prices would have been lower materially.

When eggs were selling for 45 cents a dozen in New York City, the statement continues, there were 335,000 cases in storage; when butter reached its highest price there were 8,000,000 pounds stored away; when poultry was selling at top prices there were 3,000,000 pounds in storage in New York alone, and when beef prices had risen there were 3,000,000 pounds on ice.

Since May 1st the increase in food stored in New York City, according to the statement, is: Eggs, 14,000,000 dozen; butter, 9,000,000 pounds; fresh meats, 4,000,000 pounds, and salt and smoked meats, 1,000,000 pounds.

Investigators from the Attorney General's office now are at work in Buffalo, Rochester and other up-State cities and towns.

Official information received during the week showed pretty nearly the condition of the tea market under war influence. The official monthly report of the quantities of tea received, delivered and kept in warehouses shows that there is only half the quantity of tea in storage there was at this time last year. In warehouses, according to the report, there is only a little more than 139,000 packages of tea, an amount reely able to hold out two months.

he association's report, comparing movements of tea in August of this r with those of last year, is as fol-s:—

| | 1914. Pkgs. | 1913. Pkgs. |
|-----------------------|----------------|----------------|
| Stock in warehouses | | |
| Aug. 1 | 197,258 | 267,614 |
| Receipts during Aug. | 40,938 | 68,351 |
| Totals | 238,196 | 335,965 |
| Shipments during Aug. | 99,056 | 56,919 |

| | | |
|---------------------|---------|---------|
| Stock in warehouses | | |
| Aug. 31 | 139,140 | 279,046 |

The stocks in hand are the smallest known in the tea trade, this following two years of short crops in the growing countries.

The war now handicaps the importation of tea because of the restriction on credits, the excessive rates of exchange prevailing and the inability to pay freight, as shipping bottoms are limited. In addition, the delay, and uncertainty in cabling interfere with the business.

Of the stocks now in warehouses only about one-third are available for the market, the balance awaiting delivery to their owners to supply the demand in different parts of the United States. What must be most emphatically taken into consideration is the fact that all tea producing countries are greatly affected by the war, the result of which no man can foresee. The best that can be hoped for by the buyers is a short supply for the remainder of the season and consequently a very tight market.

Another Government Oleo Prosecution.

Six officers and employees of the Capital City Dairy Co., of Columbus,
Ohio, were indicted last Tuesday by a Federal Grand Jury after an investigation on a charge that the company and its officers have been engaged in the unlawful manufacture and sale of artificially colored oleomargarine on which no stamp tax was paid. The Government charges that the company owes more than $2,000,000 in back taxes.
The indictments are for defrauding the Government and for conspiracy to defraud the Government. The men against whom they were returned are: Dennis Kelly, president of the company; William H. Eberst, vice-president and general manager; M. Lee Borbett, secretary; Cornelius A. Hayes, treasurer; Otto S.
Barkworth, a chemist for the State
Pure Food Department and employee of the company, and W. H. Kelly,
Pennsylvania agent of the company.
All of the indicted men, excepting W.
Kelly, reside in Columbus, where they are prominent in business and social circles. Kelly's home is in Pittsburg. The indicted men appeared in court, entered pleas of "not guilty" and were released on bond. R. H.
Childs, of Chicago, Assistant Attorney-General of the United States, had charge of the Grand Jury investigation.
Dennis Kelly is one of the wealthiest men in Columbus.

WITH THE EDITOR

Litigation has been started in New York against another match fake—the New Jersey Match Co.

Another Match Fake.

It is the same old match fake that has gobbled up so much money in its time—a patented machine, enormously increasing in output, reducing the manufacturing cost, and promising overwhelming disaster for the Diamond Match Co., the dominant factor in the match business. Reading the history of this scheme, published in another column, sounds like past history, so like is it unto other match schemes that have gone before it. One wonders how the same thing can succeed so often. When one investor is bitten and sues or arrests, and the papers print all about it, one would naturally expect other investors to refuse to patronize future schemes of the same kind. This would be a natural expectation if the thing only happened once, but when it happens twenty or thirty times, as it has done in the match business within the last twenty-five years, one is surely convinced that the number of suckers born every minute is somewhat understated.

The organized liquor dealers of the country, under the scandalously false name of Tainting Public Sentiment.

"Bureau of Cooperation," are sending to all kinds of periodicals, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" among the number, items for publication which are intended to counteract the irresistible movement toward total prohibition. The object is of course to taint public sentiment. One of these little books of items lies before the writer. Its contention—it has no real argument—is that a man should not be interfered with in his desire to drink—even to drink to excess, to the injury of himself and his family—and any attempt to interfere with him is wrong and can never be enforced. The fact is ignored that alcoholic liquors, from the time the devil first brewed them, have never done one iota of good to balance their worlds of harm.

Gentlemen, you can save yourselves the trouble of sending these items to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," or to any other periodical. You will save some money if you do not send them out at all. For as sure as you are living men, the wares you sell are marked for destruction. Whether through what is called total prohibition or not, no liquor will be legally sold in this country in ten years at most. It would not be sold today if the business interests could decide the question.

The editor of the business magazine, "System," begins a long article on "The European War and the Average Business Man" with the following:—

Good Times Coming.

While we all deplore the war and are reluctant to take profits from the misfortunes of other peoples, it is time for us to consider what is to be the result to American houses of this great European conflict. Expressed in terms of business activity the situation is this: There are four great competitors for the world's business—four mammoth industrial and commercial units striving for orders for merchandise from all the peoples of the earth. Three of them, temporarily at least, have shut down. One, the United States, is open and prepared to work overtime.

What the result will be seems self-evident, as self-evident as it would be if all of your competitors—all the other shoe manufacturers, for instance—should close their factories: A transference to you not alone of the demand for shoes formerly supplied by them, but for even the very shoes that must be supplied to them.

For that is the very situation that will follow in this country if the European war is prolonged. True, certain qualifications are necessary. Shipping will be interrupted, finance become more complex, and trade relations take on unusual complications. But underlying these apparent hindrances and difficulties, is this fundamental generalization—the nations of the world must turn to America to supply their wants.

The first question business men ask is: "Of what will this demand consist?" It splits into five sources: (1) the usual American call for American goods; (2) the necessity of supplying equivalents for many of the imports normally taken from Europe; (3) the need of offering satisfactory substitutes when it is impossible to absolutely duplicate European imports; (4) the requirements of the customers of the countries at war; and (5) the wants of the warring nations themselves.

This is well said, and its absolute truth is not debatable. There is certain to come to this country, now and later, an enormous demand for everything in the line of necessities. This will come from foreign countries who are too busy fighting to make for themselves, and who must therefore buy. Also it will come in increased measure from our own people who will be given work which they do not have now. Absolutely nothing can prevent this. If the war should stop to-night—which it unhappily will not do—the demand would still come. It will affect everybody all along the line and will effectually dissipate every one of the ev humors which have kept business back for eighteen months.

The writer has been told by unquestionable authority that illegal sales of oleomargarine are appearing again in Pennsylvania. Some of them take the form of selling oleo for butter, some of them the form of selling oleo honestly enough, but artificially colored. Artificially colored oleo cannot be sold in Pennsylvania even when sold as oleo.

The Housewives' League of New York, which is deeply interested in the present food situation, recently recommended its members, in order to reduce the high cost of living, to use oleomargarine instead of butter. Thus oleo, in a sense, comes into its own. It has always been a perfectly wholesome and legitimate product—just as good as butter any day—and it would have been considered legitimate long ago if these wildcat dealers had not besmirched its reputation by selling it illegally.

Now the thought that occurs to the writer is how foolish, and incidentally how outrageous, for the wild-catters to allow their fraudulent greed for profits to spoil the greatest chance oleomargarine has ever had in all its history. Butter is high—everything is high—and thousands of consumers will use oleomargarine as a substitute and an economizer if they can do so without feeling ashamed and apologetic. As long as oleo continues to be the tool of crooked people will not use it with the same freedom that they otherwise would

Safeguarding Against the Shiftless Account-Keeping of Married Women

I am convinced that a great deal of the trouble retail grocers and other dealers in the necessities of life have to collect their bills is fairly chargeable to the shiftlessness and sometimes the actual dishonesty of married women.

Not one man in a thousand has anything to do with buying groceries. He is away at his business when most of them are bought.

Usually he gives his wife a weekly allowance out of which she is supposed to pay all grocery bills. Most wives do this, but there is a surprising percentage who don't. They fumble up their household accounts, now and again robbing Peter to pay Paul, and suddenly awakening to the fact that they owe their grocer a large grocery bill, every cent of which had been paid to them by their husband, who of course expected the grocer had been paid also.

The wife dislikes to confess this to her husband and will try to get rid of it herself by whatever surreptitious means she can use. Sometimes she gets away with it, but more often than not she fails. The grocer appeals at last to the husband, and there is a stormy scene which not infrequently destroys a home.

Within a week two wives of wealthy husbands have sat in my office, seeking to explain the non-payment of very large delinquent grocery bills, and confessed that their husbands had given them the money, but in some way it had "gotten away."

Both also said that they had very unpleasant time with their husbands when the thing was found out. I told these wives, somewhat more diplomatically than I am stating it now, that in my judgment they had been guilty of theft from their husbands. They were very resentful at this, but it was true nevertheless.

If I were a grocer I should refuse to do the financial end of the business with a married woman just as soon as her bill got behind. Of course while it is being paid regularly there is no occasion to do that, but at the minute she left a balance of even a dollar I should send a statement to the husband at his business address. Of course the wife may not like this, but her resentment is the lesser of the two evils. The husband will appreciate being kept posted, and this will go far to neutralize any unpleasantness that the wife may feel.

Of course some husbands are head beats, and in these cases grocery bills remain unpaid, not because of the wife's delinquency, but because she isn't given the money by her husband. In these cases sending the husband the bill will do no good, but in the great majority of cases it will result in immediate payment, accompanied by the delivery of a lecture by the husband to the wife which will probably bring her up with a round turn.

E. J. B.

Another Match Fake Suit.

J. B. Francis Herreshoff has begun suit against the New Jersey Match Co., the Co-operative Syndicate, and some of the officers of the two concerns for $14,500, representing money invested in matches by himself and several others who have assigned their claims to him. This proceeding follows on the heels of the indictment by the Federal Grand Jury in New York of Warren B. Hutchinson, William B. Tucker, Morris San and the match company for using the mails to defraud. The inducement held out to persons with money to invest was a "secret process," by which as good a match, known as the "Salvation Match," it was said, could be made of irregular shaped cordwood at $9 a 1,000 feet as could be made by the trust of selected lumber at from $50 to $60. The promoter also claimed to have a patent machine for the making of matches that was so fast and sure that the net earning capacity of each machine was $500 a month. The company had a factory at Garfield, N. J., the promoters said, that would comfortably accommodate 40 of these machines, resulting in a net profit of $20,000 a month. The complaint says that in order to sell the bonds of the company the Co-operative Syndicate was organized and a glittering circular was prepared for general circulation for the purpose of "inducing persons to part with their money." Among the virtues the patent match was credited with was that it was non-phosphorus, that it would soon supplant the phosphorus match and that any investment in the company's stock would be amply secured. A prospectus was prepared that said the company had created a bond issue of $140,000, that with each bond a bonus of 50 per cent. in stock would be given, and that every penny taken in by the sale of bonds would be spent for equipment. A note of distress appeared in the prospectus when it said that 1,000 gross of matches were being sold each day and that the demand was so great that a much bigger plant was absolutely necessary. The complaint says that the machines used by the company intent to deceive and defraud the plaintiff and whosoever might get a copy of the prospectus." The complaint denies that the machines used by the company were patented machines intended for cutting the matches, and says that the machine "merely fills, dips and unloads, and is not a newly invented machine and is not protected by a patent." The complaint says the machines were bought second-hand, that prepared wood used in making matches costs only $45 a 1,000 feet, and that matches cannot be made from crooked or grained wood. It is also charged that the company has suspended business for some time and that the only security back of the issue of $140,000 of bonds is a first mortgage lien upon the property of the company and a small sinking fund which is not worth more than $14,000. The plaintiff says that no dividends were ever declared and that a default was made in the interest on bonds on July 15, 1913, and that nothing has been paid on them since that date.

46—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because nationally advertised goods are going to mean more and more as time goes on.

¶ Advertising has been purified and reconstructed. Honest advertising laws have been passed and are being enforced. Consumers think more of advertising—they believe in it more implicitly—than they ever did before, and this feeling is going to increase.

¶ The chance is that before very long consumers will cleave only to products that have come out in the open and advertised themselves to all the people. Why, indeed, should they not? They are the best products made or that can be made, and they are going to get better all the time. The manufacturers dare not leave a stone unturned to give the public the absolute utmost for their money.

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

represented by Dr. Cattell, which has cleaned up the shambles to an extent no one believed possible. There is graft in politics, and it will never be eliminated until we eliminate the necessary graft in human nature.

"In this morning's mail I received a very peculiar communication. I hesitated a little while before deciding to read it. I don't know the author, but I can imagine it was sent by a man who allows his enthusiasm to over-ride his discretion. The letter reads as follows:—

Mr. Buckley.

Dear Sir:—I see you are to deliver the address of welcome to the State retailers' convention. Why not ask them to abstain from all alcoholic liquors while in Philadelphia. Yours for a great cause,
J. B. WOODWARD.

"Now, gentlemen, I don't want to ask the impossible. I do not want to ask anything that would completely destroy your pleasure at this convention. So far as I am concerned, you can get in any condition you like. One thing I will ask: That you lie as close to the curb as you can in order to make way for the automobiles of our members.

"In conclusion, I want to say again, we are tickled to have you with us and we want to make you feel as tickled when you leave us as we have been to have you."

Mr. Theo. Landsberg, of Erie, expressed thanks in behalf of the retail merchants of Pennsylvania for the cordial welcome extended, and said that after hearing Mr. Cattell speak he had concluded that Philadelphia had been maligned, that it was the peer of New York City, that people of the Keystone State had as much right to be proud of Philadelphia as their metropolis as people of the Empire State of New York City. He spoke further in praise of Philadelphia, saying: "I have never yet found in all my travels in the sunny South, in the frozen North, in the boundless West, in the energetic East, a better place than Philadelphia in which a convention of any size or character can find better accommodation, greater conveniences, more pleasant and wholesome hospitality."

Mr. Landsberg assured Dr. Cattell and all the citizens of Philadelphia a hearty welcome if they should ever visit Erie.

Mr. Rittenhouse, of Scranton, expressed the appreciation of the outside associations to Philadelphia and Frankford Association. He called Philadelphia the cradle of progressive merchants' associations and mentioned Mr. William Smedley and Mr. Albert Kai or as having rocked the cradle. He closed with a promise that the members of the visiting associations would behave themselves in order to merit another invitation.

J. Denny O'Neill, the president, was introduced by Mr. Gallen, and spoke a word or two as to his gratification when elected president and his belief in the future of the association.

The convention call, signed by Mr. Howes, was read and the following committees were appointed:—

Resolutions—Chairman, W. H. Bratton, Frankford; D. E. Durbin, Pittsburgh; J. W. Rittenhouse, Scranton; Howard Monnell, New Castle; Theo. Landsberg, Erie.

Press—Chairman, Harry H. Lansing, Lock Haven; Geo. McGarry, Johnstown; C. W. Summerfield, Philadelphia.

Auditing—Chairman, W. C. K. Fisher, Reading; C. J. First, Oil City; W. K. Cuddy, Muncy.

Rules—Chairman, C. W. Dewees, Philadelphia; F. L. Lydell, Bradford; J. W. Kendall.

Mr. O'Neill then read his report, and in stating what had been done along legislative lines, he said they had not accomplished what they wanted; it might still be brought about by the co-operation of every member. "If you expect to be successful in Harrisburg next winter you want to do some work now among the candidates for Governor, the Senate and House. I believe that each association should interview the candidates to see how they stand upon the legislation vital to your associations. I believe that if that is done we can secure some legislation that we have worked so hard for in the past.

"I am willing to go down to Harrisburg and do the best I know how to secure what we want. I do hope that your officers will have the earnest support of members. If you want to get legislation you have got to be at it before election.

"We should look after our own interests, and the only way you can do that is by interviewing candidates before election."

The report of the secretary was then read, as follows:—

The report of the organizer, William Smedley, was then delivered. He said: "One year ago I started out at Warren with your consent and authority to get out and make the acquaintance of the merchants' associations throughout the State of Pennsylvania. How well I have performed that work I leave to you.

I want to say that in that time I have done my best to call on all of you. Some of you would not let me in, so that was not my fault. I have traveled over 50,000 miles, at a cost of nearly $10,000."

Mr. Smedley then told of some of the difficulties of the work placed on his shoulders.

The list of 110 associations handed to him at Warren were supposed to be in good standing and on the job.

"I found a good many of them like a man I asked about and was told, 'Well, he's alive; he sleeps, he eats and puts on his clothes.'

"I found associations that had not met for more than two years. I went into a town, met a merchant and said, 'We are going to have a meeting tonight.' He said, 'I believe they have called a meeting. I am the president, but I haven't attended a meeting for a year and a half.'

"Where's the secretary?"

"I believe if you take a street car and go out to the end of the line you will find some one who can tell you where he lives."

"I found the secretary, who said he would be unable to attend, as he had to plant a garden.

"Well, I found one good merchant, and he took me in his automobile to call on 50 merchants. We had a meeting of 45 that day and the president sat in a rocking chair. Then they began to discuss matters and wondered why they didn't succeed. Then I got mad. I said: 'You don't succeed because you have a president who sits in the rocking chair and a secretary too busy planting a garden to attend a meeting. Two resignations are in order to-night, and then we want to have an election, and then we want an association.' To my surprise the president laughed.

"We have 168 members there now, who are doing things for the town.

"I could take you from town to town, from hamlets to the large cities. I could show you that the men need organization, and that they only need to be shown how to organize.

"I shall be very much surprised when the reports for your membership are handed in if we haven't increased the membership by over 4,000.

"The convention to-day is the result of the missionary work all through this State for 12 months. The Pennsylvania merchants wants to be shown how to organize and how to keep organized."

Mr. Smedley was especially pleased with the results in Braddock, Titusville, Steelton, East Mauch Chunk, Danville, Muncy, etc. He said that the Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade were all very well, but that the merchants needed an association for themselves to take care of the merchants' particular problems.

The educated and intelligent merchant is going to help us eliminate the unintelligent man. We are going to have business profitable and permanent.

We need good secretaries. The secretary makes the association. Every merchant should be a member. You will find that every dollar you pay is an investment and you can bring back dividends from it all your life. Stand by your secretaries. The gospel that I have been trying to preach is greater usefulness of the association. There are so many evils in your trade that you will find at that you could wipe out by organization. We are going to read something on the catalogue house Thursday. Something that affects every merchant directly or indirectly. You will be shown the remedy for the catalogue house. If you heard only this one thing at the convention, your visit here would be worth while.

Mr. Smedley told of a visit to a large mail order house in Buffalo and of the immensity of the orders in one morning's mail.

He closed with: "Your calling is one of dignity, and great responsibility rests on your shoulders, and I tell you that when we begin to realize the importance of organization we are going to go forward this year. I will help you, with your permission, all I know how."

Mr. E. O. Spotts, of Tarentum, as one of the State organizers, was called on and he dwelt particularly on the value of the association as an uplift to the merchant, to the community and to the nation. He said: "We, as businessmen's organizations take care of mercantile problems. The fundamental problem is credits. Through the absence of adequate laws in Pennsylvania there is a premium put on dishonesty. We organizers are trying to wake you merchants to the fact that giving indiscriminate credit is bad, not only for yourselves, but it's bad for the public. The quicker you men get to realize that fact, the quicker you are going to make better the communities in which you live. Heaven help any community that hasn't got a credit system!"

"We have one in Tarentum and the work of credit reporting is doing much good that we are trying to breathe the idea into other associations of Pennsylvania, as it is the only thing for a live association."

Mr. Spotts earnestly advised the support of the secretaries by the members of each organization. Be sure to pay enough to your secretary to make it worth his while to devote sufficient time to make your association live and prosperous.

At this time a letter was read from Mr. E. C. Wolfe, of the Curtis Publishing Co., inviting the convention to inspect their building at Sixth and Walnut streets. Also one from John Wa-maker, offering guides to conduct visitors through his store.

Mr. Schoch announced a trip for the day on Thursday morning in a sightseeing car to the interesting points of the city. Also a visit to City Hall.

Mr. Smith, of New Castle, reported his work in the organizing of associations and expressed the wish that one-third of the retail merchants now in business be eliminated. In his opinion there ought to be a law passed to make a man pass an examination in order to become a merchant.

Mr. Smith also thinks that a law could be passed to prohibit a man moving from a town without registering with the city clerk where he is going.

Mr. Rittenhouse, as an organizer, said that he was tending his own back yard. For his part he has increased the membership in Scranton from 162 last year to 439; 250 of whom are grocers.

Mr. F. B. Farley, of the Philadelphia Association, announced that the Pennsylvania Plan Committee was ready to receive reports, which should be gotten in at the earliest moment that the work might get under way.

Mr. Durbin, from Pittsburg, expressed appreciation, etc.

Mr. Loch talked for a minute on the troubles of the merchants, listing them in part as the catalogue house, loose credit and fake advertising.

A letter read at this time from the Reading Chamber of Commerce cordially inviting the association to hold its 1915 convention at Reading.

The following resolutions were then offered:—

That our candidates for the Senate and House be earnestly interviewed and pleaded with to support our mercantile tax repeal at the coming session of the Legislature.

That after a careful consideration it be urged upon the members of the association the good business of standing loyally by popular high quality standard goods, with which the consumer is familiar, in preference to private brands of goods of unknown origin and at times of doubtful quality.

That the retail merchants of Pennsylvania have introduced at the next session of the Pennsylvania State Legislature a bill licensing and regulating the use, sale and giving of trading stamps, coupons and similar devices and imposing a penalty for the violation thereof, and that they use their utmost endeavors to have same passed and become a law of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The meeting was then adjourned.

The convention was entertained by an interesting programme at Keith's Tuesday evening. The theatre was tastefully decorated with flags in their honor, with a large banner, "Welcome to the Retail Merchants of Pennsylvania," at one side of the stage.

Mr. Howard, a clever ventriloquist, in his sketch as "Dr. McGregor," a Scotch doctor, with two automatons and with little practice, brought in several jokes playing on the names of members of the association.

The house gave a hearty laugh when he asked his patient for money and the patient replied that he had none and didn't know where to obtain any. "Why don't you write the Retail Grocers' Association of Pennsylvania?" said the doctor.

At the opening of Wednesday's session Mr. F. B. Reeves, Jr., president of the Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware Wholesale Grocers' Association, was called on for a few words.

Mr. Reeves said: "As I listened to the reading of the minutes and saw the work mapped out for your committee, it came to my mind that your association and ours was doing the same work along the same lines. We can economize time and money if we work together to attain our aims.

"You are very welcome at our association meetings. I hope you will attend our convention, to be held in March at Scranton.

"In behalf of the wholesalers I want to thank you for the small part you allowed us to take in entertaining you. I hope you will all be with us at Willow Grove this afternoon. We want you always to be part of ourselves, to be with us."

Another resolution was then presented upon the repeal of the mercantile tax.

Mr. Charles Thorpe, secretary of the New York Grocers' Association, was then called on. Mr. Thorpe, who attends many conventions, is very much interested in the getting together of merchants to see what can be done to help the trade at large. He named the important issues of the merchants of every State, as follows:—

1. Combination buying.
2. Maintenance of retail selling price.
3. Co-operation societies.
4. Legislation and other things, in addition to the keen competition.

Further on he regretted the large number of merchants who don't know what it costs them to do business. To illustrate, he said, that the man who buys "dollar-a-dozen" goods and sells them at $1.20 does as foolish an act as it would be to exchange a $5 bill for $4.50.

Mr. A. M. Graves, secretary of the Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware Wholesale Grocers' Association, reluctantly came to the front at the president's request. However, he soon warmed up to the subject of square dealing. He feels that the conventions bring about the discovery that one's competitor is a better man than had been supposed and inspire the merchant to go home and be a more intelligent merchant to leave off doing things because they are the custom, and begin to do business in a more honest spirit and along more legitimate lines.

"We must be willing that others should do whatever we do and be willing to do ourselves what we insist on others doing," he said.

A letter was read here from the U. S. Slicing Machine Co., Chas. Dapp, sales agent, inviting the visitors to inspect their place at 1024 Arch street.

Mr. J. A. Ritchie, secretary Cleveland Retail Credit Men's Co., spoke on Wednesday on the safeguarding of credits. He said this minimizes the need of putting accounts through the process of collection. "The basis of all credit is character. Character invites confidence, hence credit is a trust reposed in you and me by the grantor. It is wrong for a man to say, 'I pay cash; I don't want credit and I don't need it.' That man's very success depends upon credit if he were keen enough to realize the situation. Credit is one, if not the chiefest, of our assets. It denotes the ability to pay. Credit, however, is at once a convenience and a curse. As a convenience it facilitates shopping. It does away with delays and guarantees good will because of confidence. It promotes phone orders, of great importance to business men, to say nothing of the saving of the time of the housewife. Credit carries greater consideration to the user than is obtained if cash is paid. I realize that that is a strong analogy. However, all of you merchants, as much as you hate to admit it, know that the credit customer gets more courteous consideration than the man who pays cash.

"The buying beyond one's means or ability to pay is what I mean when I say that credit may be a curse. This is one of the greatest moral issues that this country has to face to-day. It is astonishing and shameful the number of notices we get from men who refuse to honor their wives' purchases, and tell us to notify all the merchants in our list to this effect.

"To persuade a person to buy beyond his means is unethical on the part of any merchant. There are firms who advertise that they will extend credit 15 days beyond the usual 30-day arrangement. This is placing a temptation for the customer to buy beyond his means.

"The merchant of any community owes a civic responsibility to the community where he does business and derives his sustenance, to help educate the people of his town or city against extravagance, just as much as it is up to him to back his Chamber of Commerce, etc.

"We believe in teaching the consumer to understand the meaning of credit. To understand that when a merchant's terms are 30 or 60 days, the purchaser at that store is just as much bound as though he had given his note for 60 or 30 days to that merchant.

"Our educative campaign is summed up in our slogan, 'Credit is a trust reposed in you. Safeguard it carefully.'

"The extension of credits should by all means be left to one individual who is more valuable in that capacity than any salesman you have, for he can make or turn away more customers than the best or worst salesman.

"Your credit department and your collection department should work hand in hand with your advertising and your sales organization. Tied up capital means that discounts will be lost. The loss of discounts curtails your buying ability. The credit man who is most successful will make it clear to the customer at the time an account is opened that his terms are 30 or 60 days. For example, the card on which the customer gives full name and address should plainly indicate the terms of the store. This gives a lever if the customer fails to pay within the proper time. He may then without offense write her that her account was taken on the basis of 30 days and she cannot be offended.

"Credit is very dangerous where unwisely granted. I am very firm in the conviction that that house which is most successful is the one which is most liberal in the granting of credits and which controls credits once granted.

"The consummation to be desired is to harmonize conservatism with aggressiveness. The essentials of the credit department is service to customers and the avoidance of delays.

"The credit man or credit office is the link that binds patrons to your house.

"Speaking of the value of organization to safeguard your credits, the best plan is when a body of merchants is banded together for their mutual good, and not for the profit of any outside concern.

"The success of any mutual credit organization is founded on confidence and co-operation. Your secretary, in asking me to address you, asked me to outline an organization that would fit a town of 10,000, 50,000 or 100,000. The same principles apply in all three cases.

"The first thing is to get as many merchants, in different lines as possible, together and then they should each turn over their ledger accounts, going back five years, to the organization. The measure of service to members depends upon the amount of information turned in by them.

"You may say, 'How may I be assured that my competitor does not know all my business?' As I said before, the foundation for the organization is confidence."

Mr. Ritchie's talk was suspended here for a short time on account of the arrival of the Potstown delegation, which was given permission to march around the room several times. The leader carried a banner and there were several musicians with horns in the line. They encircled the room several times, alternately singing and giving their Potstown yell. They were received with enthusiasm and requested to seat themselves to hear the remainder of Mr. Ritchie's talk.

The remainder of Mr. Ritchie's talk was on methods of collecting through a credit association. He advocated the use of at least two very courteous follow-up letters to delinquents in order not to antagonize them, and the third should usually threaten the publishing of the matter before all the merchants of the association and later bring suit, naming a certain time limit. He said that it was essential to carry out the threat as delivered if the association expected to be a force.

The first letter Mr. Ritchie suggested is as follows:—

Dear Madam:—For the purpose of economy through co-operation, and to insure courteous treatment to its subscribers, John Jones has asked us to represent him with reference to your account.

Owned, as our company is, by over 200 retail merchants, our first

A Service Department for Subscribers.

Are you thinking of buying a cash register, new or second-hand?

A coffee mill or roaster?

A computing scale?

A cheese cutter?

A cash carrier system?

An oil-pumping outfit?

A waste paper baler?

An adding machine?

An account register?

A slicing machine?

A refrigerator?

A typewriter or adding machine?

A safe?

A delivery wagon, team or motor?

New fixtures of any kind, or any store appliance?

Are you dissatisfied with your jobber?

Is there any other move you are about to make on which you would like some honest, fair, well-posted advice?

We can help you. We have all the principal catalogues of all the store appliances used by retail merchants on file in this office. You can see them if you call here, or we will send you any information from them which you want.

As to any other things, we have a staff here which is pretty expert about most things connected with merchandising. It is entirely at your service without limit and without price.

Generous? Not at all. On the contrary, selfish. The more we can do for you the longer we will keep you a subscriber. It is straight business all the way through.

aim is to conduct our communications with you in strict confidence and with the utmost fairness.

If the balance of your past due indebtedness is entirely correct and the merchandise satisfactory, we should appreciate your check.

In any event, we shall anticipate hearing from you immediately upon receipt of this letter.

Yours,

The second letter is a little stronger, but not harsh.

Mr. Ritchie was so full of his subject that he suggested that those present consider earnestly the establishing of credit companies in their various communities, assuring them of success if they put their minds to it.

When Mr. Ritchie had finished Mr. Malloy asked what effect the Garnishee Law in Ohio had on the Credit Association.

Mr. Ritchie.—We have been able to collect upon necessities right along by attaching 10 per cent. of the salaries, particularly because of the fact that we are in close touch with the employers in most cases. The Garnishee Law has been a help to us.

Mr. Edgar, of Philadelphia, suggested that a committee be appointed to make more business like plans for the awarding in 1915 of prizes for the Pennsylvania Plan than heretofore. Mr. Schutte seconded the motion. Carried. Committee appointed: Wm. Smedley, Mr. Farley, Mr. Edgar.

This resolution was then offered: That the Executive Committee draft a credit plan, including collection letters based upon the Cleveland plan, and submit to each association.

The Rules Committee recommended a bill to provide "a commission to secure plans and designs for a memorial bridge to the memory of William Penn."

This was signed by C. K. Dewees, Mr. Kendall, Mr. L. L. Lydell.

Mr. Wanamaker was not able to speak, owing to a bad throat.

He extended greetings and regrets through Mr. A. C. McGowan, president of the National Shoe Retailers' Association and the shoe buyer for the Wanamaker store. Mr. McGowan gave a little talk on the reason for advances in shoe prices at this time. He said that the trade was under the misapprehension that the war was given as the excuse for the advances. If the war had not broken out prices were due to go up, anyway, and that very considerably, within the next three or six months, for the reason that everything that goes into the shoe is not growing with the population.

Mr. McGowan commended the work of Harvard University showing merchants how to know the cost of doing business, methods of bookkeeping, etc.

In conclusion he said: "You cannot buy goods properly unless you have been a salesman. You must study the art of selling, and then you will know what to buy and will become a great power and a successful merchant."

Mr. Kendall, vice-president, was then called to take the chair and nominations were called for.

Mr. C. Wolfe, of Pittsburg, proposed D. E. Durbin for president, but Mr. Durbin declined the honor, saying that his business would not permit him to devote the necessary time to the office.

Mr. Lydell, with words of high praise, presented Mr. J. Denny O'Neill as a nominee for president.

Mr. Rankin moved that the nominations for president be closed.

Mr. Malloy proposed Mr. J. W. Kendall for vice-president.

Mr. Harry W. Schaeffer, Lock Haven, was named for vice-president by C. M. Elliott, of that city.

Mr. Ebenezer Evans, Pittston, was named for vice-president by Mr. R. Keeler, of Pittston.

Mr. D. E. Durbin, of Pittsburg, was named by Mr. Simpson, Pittsburg.

Mr. Theo. Landsberg was named by Mr. Schutte.

Mr. Samuel Clements, J. A. Edgar, Philadelphia, proposed by W. C. K. Fischer.

Mr. Eli Beo, of Sunbury, was proposed by Mr. Kimmel, of Mt. Carmel, but declined.

D. L. Crane by A. E. Waters, of Carbondale.

J. W. Neff, New Castle, Pa., by Ed. O'Brien.

Mr. Rankin moved that nominations for vice-president be closed. Carried.

Mr. Smedley named A. M. Howes for secretary. Seconded by Mr. Wessels. Carried, and nominations closed.

D. H. Rankin nominated W. H. Nelson, of Chester, for treasurer.

Nominations closed upon motion of Mr. Mast, of Coatesville.

Nominations for two vacancies in Executive Committee. Dr. C. H. Bosworth, of Wyalusing, nominated to serve by Mr. Crow, of Harrisburg.

Rev. John W. Gilds, of Easton, Pa., was proposed by a delegate of that town.

A. M. Latschaw, of New Brighton, and C. J. Pohle, Erie, Pa., proposed by J. W. Rittenhouse.

Nominations were then made for the 1915 convention city.

Mr. Burnett, of Meadville extended an invitation from the Meadville Business Men's Association to have the convention there.

Mr. Kaiser, of Philadelphia, rose to commend most heartily the consideration of the Meadville Association's invitation.

Mr. Wessels requested that a New York delegation which had just arrived be given the glad hand. His request was granted and the New York delegation filed to the front, shook hands with the president, secretary, etc., and took some front seats.

Mr. Kale, of Sharon, very earnestly presented his town for consideration as the 1915 convention city.

Mr. Curr, of Titusville, requested that nominations for vice-president be reopened, which request being granted, he named Mr. F. G. Burnett, of Meadville, but Mr. Burnett declined. Nominations closed.

The Rules Committee suggested 20 minutes' intermission. Put to a vote and over-ruled. The convention continued.

Mr. H. G. Flint, president of the Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives, told of the efforts of his association to purify the taking and giving of specialty orders, telling of their care in the choosing of courteous salesmen, and then he asked that the merchants be as bound by giving their order to a salesman as though they had given their check for the goods. If the merchants would do this the Manufacturers' Association would have nothing further to ask.

He extended greetings and wished them a pleasant time at Willow Grove.

Mr. W. H. Ukers, president Grocers' and Allied Trade Press of America, was called on. After greetings, thanks, etc., Mr. Ukers said in part: "We of the trade press are in hearty sympathy with your problems. We are trying to help you solve them. We want you to know all your trade papers better. We are trying to help you do the things you are trying to do all along the line."

By request Mr. Ukers read his rules of what a grocer should know, which rules he had delivered before a convention in Louisville.

"1.—Every grocer should know first that he is a soldier in the army for the common good and has a duty to perform in rendering real service, not only to the manufacturer and jobber, but to the consumer.

"2.—He should know how to figure the cost of doing business.

"3.—He should realize his most valuable advertising medium is his window. It should be changed at least every week.

"4.—He should know that a great trade winner is politeness, and the cost is nothing.

"5.—Another winner that costs but little is cleanliness.

"6.—He should know that the customer is always right. That she is the boss, because she pays not only the clerks, but the proprietor's salary also.

"7.—That advertised goods are sold for him. Don't be a price cutter.

"8.—He should know that if he subscribed for every magazine or book published he would not learn as much about his business as by reading one issue of his trade paper."

Mr. Henry Lohman, of the New York City delegation, gave thanks in behalf of his association and dwelt a few minutes on the importance of a good secretary for every local association.

E. J. Buckley, a member of the Bar of Philadelphia, at Mr. Schoch's request, gave legal advice upon three questions brought before the association for attention. The questions, with their answers, were as follows:—

No. 1.—Why would it not be a good thing to pass one more law allowing a merchant to have but one license—but one place of business.

Mr. Buckley said he assumed this was an attack upon the chain store. He did not believe such a law would be either constitutional or fair, as it was an unwarranted interference with the growth of a man who by thrift, industry or natural aptitude for business had accumulated surplus enough to open more than one store.

2.—Does not the giving of trading stamps partake of the nature of unfair competition?

Hooton Cocoa Creates Sales

We'll help you get your customers started buying Hooton's Cocoa and when they're once started they'll buy more of it than they would buy of any other brand, because the fine quality, rich flavor and big money's worth will make them use it more freely. It will pay you to write us for particulars of the special introductory arrangements we'll make to establish its sale in your store.

The answer was that it did not. Unfair competition is palming off one's business or one's self, one's goods, as those of another, where no infringement of trade-mark is involved. Not by any theory could this be applied to the giving of trading stamps.

No. 3.—In regard to the law requiring the net weight on package goods, which went into effect September 3, 1914, does this apply to domestic goods prepared or foreign goods imported before its passage and in stock by the grocer?

The answer was that the question evidently confused the Federal net weight law, which went into effect September 3d last, with our own Pennsylvania State law which went into effect January 1, 1914, but with a proviso that no penalty should be enforced for violation until eighteen months after its passage, nor should the act apply to domestic goods prepared or foreign goods imported until eighteen months after its passage. There were different views as to whether this latter clause meant that as to domestic products prepared and foreign products imported before its passage, the law should not go into effect for eighteen months later, or whether it did not go into effect at all as to domestic products prepared or foreign products imported for eighteen months after the passage of the law. The enforcing authorities, however, had given it out that no prosecutions would be made before January 1, 1915.

Mr. C. M. Wessels was presented with a watch in appreciation for his work for the associations throughout the State.

Mr. Wessels said that he didn't deserve the credit; that the manufacturers were behind him in the financing of the Pennsylvania Plan, and that his part was like that of the workman on a building in process of erection, while the manufacturers were like the financiers who were paying the costs, etc.

Mr. O'Neill suggested that Mr. Wessels enlarge his field, taking in manufacturers of all lines carried by merchants.

The following Committee on Elections was appointed: E. O. Spotts, G. L. Dobie, E. A. Schutte.

This resolution was then offered:—

Resolved, That the State Executive Committee have introduced an appropriation measure of $100,000 to establish a Department of Mercantile Affairs in the hands of practical men, to conduct instruction by printed matter on salesmanship and store management, to the end that the high cost of living be reduced; and a portion of the mercantile tax be spent for the improvement of those who pay it. (Signed A. M. Howes, Erie.

John A. Green, secretary of the National Retail Grocers' Association, then spoke in part as follows:—

The present bankruptcy act is taken advantage of by every dead beat in the country. It is not the honest debtor who takes wrongful advantage of the provisions of the National Bankruptcy Act, but it is the real, dyed-in-the-wool dead beat, the scoundrel, the scallawag, the swindler, the sort of a person who obtains money under false pretenses, the scum of society, so far as business honor is concerned. Honest debtors do not take advantage of the National Bankruptcy Act as they should. They do not remember and appreciate as they should the fact that it was created for their benefit. Generally speaking, however, the National Bankruptcy Act has given encouragement to men to become dishonest and repudiate their just indebtedness, and this is the main point and the point on which we base all our objections or most of them.

The opportunities which the National Bankruptcy Act offers to the unscrupulous have operated to defeat its own ends, and instead of preventing fraud and relieving distress it has in the course of its existence become a favorite method by which fraud is perpetrated, and by which rascality and unscrupulous methods are covered. A resolution was passed at our last National convention requesting the law be amended so as not to include household necessities. The question is not how to collect but how can I prevent the accumulation of bad debts. Prevention is the order of the day.

Conclusively let me put all the emphasis of which I am capable in declaring that one of the greatest causes of price cutting; one of the greatest handicaps the retailer has, one of the chief things with which he plays into the hands of his arch enemies, is his laxity, his variability, his subservience to name or station, his generally reactionary methods in making collections from those whose credit is "good."

Now, one other plan, where it seems to me that business men have done a great deal in the way of progress, but where they may do a great deal more—I refer to the movement for accuracy in the representation of goods.

There is a great solid foundation for that movement, which has gone so far by way of legislation, and it is a movement which the business men ought to foster, because it means good business, more business and sounder business. Business men should give thought to this movement, because truth makes good business; it will make the public feel at home and satisfied and ready to spend their money for the right things; and next, because if the business men do not control the movement for treating the public truthfully, the movement may proceed to unreasonable lengths. There have been laws passed already by ignorant legislators that bear harshly upon business, and unless business men superintend the situation and act with utmost wisdom and honestly instruct the legislatures in the directions in which they should work, it is very probable that laws may be passed that will bear very harshly upon perfectly sane and sound business enterprises.

Meeting adjourned till Thursday.

At Willow Grove on Wednesday the delegates were the guests at supper of the Tri-State Wholesale Grocers' Association and the Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives. The freedom of the park was given to everybody and a generous supper was provided. During the evening William Smedley was presented with a fountain pen by the Brooklyn delegation.

It was reported that 122 delegates were duly registered, representing 65 local associations, exclusive of the officers.

The following visitors addressed the convention at Thursday morning's session: Mr. Holmes, of the "General Store," Pittsburg, Pa., on organization.

Mr. Swartferger, of the W. Va. Association, on the interchange of ideas for uplift.

Mr. Thomas Martindale, Philadelphia, gave an address upon the reasons some merchants succeed while others fail, right in the same communities. He said that any man who studied his goods and tried to please with courtesy and fair dealing was bound to succeed. He told the story of his own great success in teas, which came about through careful attention to different blends and kinds.

About 50 raised hands upon Mr. Sumnerfield's request to know how many would visit the Wanamaker store on Thursday.

The following is the report of the Resolution Committee, delivered by Mr. Landsberg:—

1.—Resolved, That the grocers favor a registration act for the betterment of their business and the elevation of the standard thereof.

(The committee has not found the resolution sufficiently complete in its detail for adoption on their part.)

2.—The resolution concerning placing the support of association members only to those candidates for the Legislature who would promise to use every effort to have the Mercantile Tax Law repealed was approved by the committee as read at yesterday's session.

Adopted.

3.—Approved, the resolution of the Retail Grocers' Protective Union recommending active State legislation for the elimination of the trading stamp evil.

Adopted.

4.—Committee approved the resolution concerning the non-use of private brands of unknown origin and at times of doubtful quality, offered at cut price.

Adopted.

5.—Approved, the resolution that the committee of three be appointed, whose duty it shall be to confer with the specialty manufacturers, looking toward better profit on the profitless specialties.

Adopted.

6.—The resolution regarding having the Executive Committee draft a cre plan based on the Cleveland plan, and to be submitted to each association.

Carried.

7.—The resolution that this convention is opposed to the increase in charges for mileage books and that the Executive Committee file a protest with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Carried.

8.—The resolution in favor of having the Legislature appealed to for an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of distribution of printed matter and free lectures on salesmanship and store management, to the end that the high cost of living be reduced, etc.

There was some discussion for and against this resolution. Mr. Lydell said that it was inconsistent with the resolution concerning the association stand taken against the Mercantile Tax Law, and absolutely wrong for them to suggest how the money collected through that law be used. He moved that the resolution therefore be laid on the table. Later the resolution was amended and presented by Mr. Lydell in the following form:—

Resolved, That the State Executive Committee be instructed to introduce legislation at Harrisburg providing a department of mercantile affairs, in the hands of practical men, and an appropriation be provided for free lectures, printed matter and text books on salesmanship and store management, to the end that the high cost of living may be reduced.

Referred to the Committee on Resolutions.

9.—Resolved, That the State Retail Merchants' Association, now in convention at Philadelphia, does hereby endorse the work of E. C. Thompson, representative of the "General Store," Pittsburg, in the matter of introducing bills in the State Legislature in the interest of the retail merchant.

Carried.

10.—Resolution approving the passage of the Stevens Bill was approved by the Committee on Resolutions and carried.

11.—Whereas, C. W. Summerfield, Secretary of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, has been unflinching in his efforts to make this convention a success, be it resolved that thanks be extended to him.

Carried.

12.—Resolution in appreciation for efforts of the Philadelphia and Frankford Associations to make the convention a success.

Carried.

13.—Appreciation to the management and employees of the Adelphia Hotel.

Carried.

14.—Thanks extended to manufacturers and jobbers for substantial assistance for the pleasure of the convention delegates and visitors.

15.—Thanks extended to the local press for courtesies.

Mr. Bryant's talk on "When You Buy, Buy at Home," was received with much applause all through the talk, and upon conclusion, a rising vote of thanks was tendered him. This will be published in a future issue.

The Auditing Committee reported the state Association accounts correct. Signed by W. C. K. Fisher, C. J. First and W. K. Cuddy.

The Committee on Elections report the following ballots cast for president, D. O'Neill, 98 votes.

Vice-president: J. W. Kendall, 61, for first vice-president; W. H. Shaffer, 47, for second vice-president; T. Landsberg, 43, for third vice-president; J. A. Edgar, 38, for fourth vice-president; Evans, 28; D. E. Durbin, 35; S. A. Emens, 24; E. L. Crane, 34; J. W. Hoff, 36.

Secretary, A. M. Howes, 98 votes. Treasurer, W. H. Nelson, 95 votes. Executive Committee: Dr. C. H. Bosworth, 55 votes; J. W. Gilds, 54 votes; R. Latshaw, 53 votes; C. J. Pohl, 26 votes.

The first two named are elected on the Executive Committee.

Convention city: Meadville, 90 votes; Sharon, 10 votes.

At this time Mr. Kale, of Sharon, moved that the selection of Meadville be unanimous. The motion was seconded and carried.

Mrs. M. H. Longwell, of Meadville, is presented with 19 gorgeous American Beauty roses in congratulation for her work in the Meadville Association, of which she is the secretary.

Mr. Loeb, of Punxsutawney, suggested that the convention be held in August next year, as that was a more convenient time for the merchant to give his business. Mr. Lydell also favored this change, but Mrs. Longwell intimated that the Meadville Business Men's Association could better conduct the convention in September. Mr. Howes said that the most convenient time for the city in which the convention was to be held was the customary consideration.

Questions from the Question Box were then taken up, as follows:—

Would it not be a good idea for the secretaries of the different associations to make cases where a delinquent moved from one town to another, to notify the secretary of the town to which he goes as to his indebtedness?

ADVERTISED

The reputation of Borden's Milks, and the word of mouth recommendation from housewife to housewife, is backed up by our advertising in newspapers, magazines, billboards and street cars. Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is the safest and best food for infants. We keep advertising this fact so that every baby born that is compelled for any reason to be fed artificially, the mother will find in Eagle Brand Condensed Milk an ideal and satisfying substitute for her breast milk. Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk is the leading brand for cooking purposes, and its quality and purity, together with our advertising, is steadily winning for it more and more satisfied customers.

It Will Pay You to Keep Borden's Brands Prominently Displayed

The sale of Borden's Brands is lively at all times, making a steady stream of profit flowing into your cash register. You should take advantage of their prestige and established popularity to secure all the sales you can. Remember also that every can is guaranteed to your customer, and all Borden's Brands, whether sweetened or unsweetened, are made from the highest grade raw material, by the most modern method of manufacture, and guaranteed absolutely pure.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"When you buy Borden's Brands you get a finished product that is safe and uniform, which has been made in surroundings and by methods that are the most perfect types of cleanliness and sanitary handling."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

Mr. Howes.—That is done to some extent.

When the net weight law is enforced will the grocer be required to make the package in which he places such things as 14 pk. potatoes, half pound lard, etc.?

C. J. First, Oil City.—My interpretation is that you are not expected to do this with any package you put up yourself.

Why should not a grocer be exonerated from a poor tax?

Laughs, but no action.

Why not teach our members to sell for cash instead of how to get a percentage of bad accounts?

Some little applause, but no action.

Mr. O'Neill laughingly called on Mr. Lydell, who arise to say that Mr. O'Neill's having asked him the previous evening for an explanation of the above plan showed that there were lots of things every merchant has to learn. This led him to speak again of the resolution regarding an appropriation of $100,000 by the State for the education of the merchant. He said that the State would be benefited by this expenditure, inasmuch as a better merchant makes a better citizen, etc.

Mr. Simpson said that the resolution was all right without the reference to the high cost of living, which seemed to put the association in the position of admitting that they are the cause of the high cost of living.

Mr. Clemens, of Greensburg, said that it was not becoming for the merchant to appeal to the State to teach him how to run his business.

Mr. Curran also said that such a resolution would point them out as a body of admitted incompetents.

Mr. Durbin, of Pittsburg, said that since the State educated the farmer's boy through agricultural schools, etc., it should also educate the business man's son; that the fact that 122 delegates only were present at this convention demonstrated that out of the 7,000 of 100,000 merchants in Pennsylvania, there were many who needed education to show them how to conduct their business.

Mr. Landsberg, of Erie, was strongly in favor of the resolution, stating that the incompetency of grammar school and even high school graduates in mercantile matters was appalling, and that they needed lectures and instruction to fit them to take the places of their fathers.

Mr. Smedley was opposed to it, on the ground that the association was the place for the education of the merchant. He mentioned the free literature and lectures given by the University of Pennsylvania upon application; of the same service by the University of Wisconsin and of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," which contained several weeks ago an article on Harvard's system of bookkeeping for the retail merchant.

Mr. Smith, of New Castle, favored it, as the storekeeper is sadly in need of education. He repeated his opinion that a man should be compelled to pass an examination in order to enter business.

Mr. Lydell asked that the resolution be read after the elimination of the reference to the high cost of living.

This was done and the question put before the convention for acceptance. It was lost, however.

The convention being open for anybody to speak who desired, several suggestions were presented. Mr. Slaughter recommended the old practice of having the delegates give their reports upon the floor for the benefit of neighboring associations.

Mr. Landsberg said that a delegate was not honoring the association that sends him when he absents himself from the sessions.

The Committee on Resolutions reported unfavorably on the resolution, that all cities or towns refusing to give information to another town in regard to the delinquent shall have their names published in the "Pennsylvania Merchant."

The committee said it strongly favors the mutual interchange of information between merchants of different towns, but does not favor attaching a penalty.

16.—Resolved, That we start a political campaign for the purpose of electing one of our members as Representative in the Legislature and Congress.

(Reported unfavorably. Committee's decision accepted.)

Mr. Smedley reported the winners in the Pennsylvania Plan and congratulated each one as Mr. Wessels handed over the prizes in gold.

The list follows:—

| | Points |
|---------------------------------------|--------|
| FIRST PRIZE. | |
| $500, Lock Haven | 4,096 |
| SECOND PRIZE. | |
| $350, Pittsburg Grocers' Assn. | 3,640 |
| $250, Scranton Bus. Men's Assn. | 2,420 |
| $150, Pittston | 1,210 |
| $100, Pottsville | 1,128 |
| $100, Butler | 1,125 |
| $100, New Castle | 888 |
| $100, Frankford | 834 |
| $100, Erie Bus. Men's Exchange. | 773 |
| $75, Erie Grocers | 740 |
| $75, Tarentum | 731 |
| $75, Carbondale | 561 |
| $75, Philadelphia Grocers | 369 |
| $50, Titusville | 365 |
| $50, Warren | 337 |
| $50, DuBois | 259 |
| $25, Lebanon | 250 |
| $25, Sunbury | 236 |
| $25, Meadville | 187 |
| $25, Mt. Carmel | 106 |

The remaining $200 was distributed among the organizers, as follows: E. O. Spotts, Tarentum, $108.80; I. L. Smith, New Castle, $43.50; A. A. Wood, Butler, $33.05; A. L. Eckert, Pottsville, $14.65.

After the prizes were distributed, Mr. C. M. Wessels told about the launching of the Pennsylvania Plan, how he, along with Mr. Smedley, went to a number of manufacturers, saying to them: "I think the retailers are ungrateful. I know better. If you will do some substantial thing for the retailer he will show his appreciation and gratitude."

"A number of manufacturers took the word for it and entered the Pennsylvania Plan. Last year they didn't have a very long run for their money, because we had to hand out money to some associations that had not done anything to earn it."

"We asked the manufacturers for a little time and they were game enough to grant it."

"The plan is right, because the manufacturer whose employee you merchandise are, should do something to increase your efficiency, and it is up to you to stand by the manufacturers who do something for you, and push their goods. Their competitor may have just as good products, not better, however, but what are they doing for you?"

"When I say I want you to buy from Smedley and me for another year is because I've got to show these Pennsylvania Plan manufacturers something and that is my apology for introducing my advertising business in the convention at this time."

Mr. Wessels then briefly mentioned each product to be pushed in the Pennsylvania Plan, calling attention to Franklin Carton Sugar, more sanitary than loose sugars; Borden's Condensed Milk, Wrigley's Spearmint, Stollwerck Chocolate, Chas. W. Young's Soft Corn Products Refining Co.'s Star Red Seal Lye, Sauer's Extracts, Thompson's Soup Flour (something which makes soup in 20 minutes simply by addition of hot water), Tetley's Tea, Miller & England's Fixtures, L. Parke's Teas.

During Mr. Smedley's preliminary talk to the distribution of prizes, Mr. Wessels had gathered many of the manufacturers' representatives and ushered them to the front to say a word of greeting to the assembly. The following spoke: Mr. Miley, of the P. C. Tomson Co.; Mr. Toboldt Sauer, of F. Sauer & Co.; Mr. White, Franklin Sugar; Mr. Thompson, of Thompson Milling Co.; Mr. Lessig, of Tetley & Co.

Mr. Wessels asked the merchants to give especial courtesy to salesmen coming on them and wearing the Pennsylvania Plan button.

The convention adjourned after J. Denny O'Neill, president, had tendered thanks to the convention for attendance, courtesy, attention to speakers, etc.

A new and decidedly interesting feature of the convention was an exhibit of the products of well-known manufacturers who are affiliated with the Pennsylvania plan. The following manufacturers had displays: Borden's Condensed Milk Co., Franklin Sugar Refining Co., Corn Products Co., Sauer & Co., Stollwerck & Co., Pottum Cereal Co., L. H. Parke & Co., P. C. Tomson, C. W. Young, Thompson Milling Co. and Tetley & Co. Loose Wiles & Co.

Government Indicts Thirty-one Washington Dealers For Conspiracy to Fix Prices

First Practical Result of Government Investigation Into High Food Prices. Men Accused of Joining Agreement Not to Compete, Which Was Carried Out By Circulation of Price List.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

Sept. 11, 1914.

The first practical result of the investigation which is being made by Government officials into high food prices all over the country developed here last week when thirty-one dealers in various food products were indicted by a Federal Grand Jury. The charge is violation of the Sherman Trust Law by fixing prices and interfering with competition.

All the indicted men are local produce dealers or commission merchants. No nationally known firm was indicted.

At the Department of Justice it was said Government agents working in many States for evidence of price-fixing were expected to make reports soon, which officials hoped would be the basis of other indictments.

Attorney-General Gregory said that whenever convictions could be obtained the Government would insist upon sentences of imprisonment, no fine or civil remedy being deemed adequate. United States Attorneys everywhere are being instructed promptly to ask for indictments whenever the facts will permit to push these to early trial, and, upon convictions, to insist upon prison sentences. It must, of course, be remembered that, outside the District of Columbia, only those agreements and combinations which affect directly interstate or foreign commerce can be reached. Inside the District of Columbia local combinations can also be reached, this being United States territory.

The men indicted are charged with having fixed prices every day by "ballots," "suggestions" or verbal agreement and to have circulated price lists which completely eliminated a competitive market for food. The penalty on conviction is a year's imprisonment or a $5,000 fine or both.

Bench warrants were issued for all the indicted men and bail was given for their appearance.

HOLT.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is about unchanged the week. The demand is active, no holder appears to be making concessions. Shipping conditions opening, especially on the Pacific, the most tea is coming now, though means additional freight charges $\frac{3}{4}$ cent. London exchange is also falling somewhat. Prices show no change for the week. High grade teas not materially higher than before war, but low grades still hold some of the war advance.

Coffee.

Ordinary grades of Rio and Santos coffee are easy and the demand is very active. The week shows a further fractional decline. On the other hand, the better grades of Santos are commanding a premium, because of scarcity. Some coffee is coming out of Brazil and the situation is gradually righting itself, being aided by the very small demand. Buyers of most grades are buying out except for actual wants. Old coffees are easier by a fraction of a cent and dull. Mocha and Java are both firm, the former having strengthened a trifle during the week.

Sugar.

The sugar situation has grown firmer during the week. Raws have advanced a fraction of a cent, and granulated is averaging $7\frac{1}{4}$ cent. The demand is good. The sugar situation is just as firm as it was, and the chief factor is still the demand from England.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. Compound syrup is unchanged, and in some light demand, on account of the cool weather of the past week. Sugar syrup is firm at the recently reported advance, but without further change for the week. Molasses dull at ruling prices.

Fish.

No important change has occurred in fish. Norway mackerel are still scarce and very firm; Irish about unchanged; haddocks relatively scarce and high. Cod, haddock and haddock unchanged, in prospective small supply and firm. Domestic sardines unchanged but firm. French and Portuguese very scarce and very high; some Norwegians coming and selling readily at comparatively small advance. New pack salmon has been taken readily at the opening prices, which as stated last week were much higher than a year ago.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes, which weakened very decidedly last week, have strengthened since the last report, and are probably $\frac{1}{2}$ cents higher. The market is at least $77\frac{1}{2}$ cents in a large way f. o. b., with prospects of higher prices if the weather stays cool. If it grows warm and favorable, as is probable, the situation may ease off. Corn is still firm and high, with light demand. Peas dull at ruling prices. Old New York State apples, which reached \$3.60 in a large way before they were exhausted, are now gone and new apples are cheaper because of the large crop. From \$2.15 to \$2.25 is quoted. California canned goods are unchanged and dull from first hands, small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged and quiet.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged, but firm, meaning especially futures. Spot prunes are neglected and dull. Apricots and peaches are both unchanged and quiet. Seedless raisins have sold very well at the opening prices, and as seeded prices have not yet been made, the raisin business is for the moment dull. Currants are still very high, and the situation does not clear as was expected. Other dried fruits quiet and unchanged, but with prices well sustained, as all are imported.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are unchanged on last week's basis; domestic marrows also unchanged on a relatively much higher basis than pea beans. California limas on spot can be bought from some holders at $7\frac{3}{4}$ cents in a large way, against a former price of 9 cents, and sales have actually been made at that figure during the week. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and firm.

Butter.

The butter market is active with a good consumptive demand, which is absorbing the receipts on arrival. All grades are scarcer, and an advance of 1 cent per pound seems probable at these words are being written. The consumptive demand for butter is better than usual for the season, and the quality arriving is fully up to standard. The market is about 1 cent above last year.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm and unchanged, with a good consumptive demand. The quality arriving is good and the market is healthy. No immediate change seems in sight. The market is 1 to 2 cents above a year ago.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady and unchanged, with a seasonable consumptive demand. The make is about normal for the season and the market is steady.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are steady and unchanged, with the demand not quite so active as it was a week or two ago. Pure and compound lard are firm with an active demand and unchanged prices. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are all unchanged, and show a fair demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Salmon.

The general opening prices on canned salmon, season 1914, are as follows:—

| | No. 1 Tails | No. 1 Flats | No. 1/2 Flats |
|------------------------------|----------------|----------------|------------------|
| Sockeyes | $1.95 | $2.20 | $1.35 |
| Red Alaska | 1.45 | 1.80 | |
| Medium Red Alaska | 1.15 | 1.40 | .85 |
| Pinks | .90 | | |

As to the quantities to be delivered on contracts, it is impossible to tell until acceptance of opening prices are all in, and especially is it impossible to tell anything about chums, as these are only beginning to be packed. In a general way it is known that the packs will be about as follows:—

Pinks.—The general report is that the pack is 50 to 60 per cent of the amount prepared for. Cannermen expect to fill their cans with chums, medium reds and Cohoes.

Medium Reds and Cohoes.—These are packed generally in September and October. As generally expected a full delivery will be made, as sales have been conservative.

Red Alaskas.—Packers expect to make full deliveries on contracts and there is a strong possibility of the opening prices of $1.45 being advanced to $1.50. The few flats available will probably be held at $1.80 and the halves about $1.15.

Sockeyes—Pack is very small.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

The evaporated apple market is in a rut here, there not being enough trading to establish market values. Some evaporators are now starting up, and a few sales have been made of ton lots at $4\frac{1}{2}$ to 5 cents, in bags, but the demand is very limited.

Good stock, for late shipment, is quotable at $5\frac{3}{4}$ to 6 cents, in bags, for prime, with strictly choice held at $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound higher.

There is no speculative trading whatever, and no new business is coming from Europe.

National President Connolly Appeals for One Dollar from Each Grocer to Help Fight Trading Stamp Case in United States Supreme Court.

Washington State Decision Upholding $6,000 Annual Tax on Trading Stamp Distributors is to be Appealed to United States Supreme Court by Trading Stamp Companies. National Retail Grocers' Association Wants $1,000 to Help Fight For it

The attorneys for the Washington State Association have just informed the officers of that association that it will be necessary to raise one thousand dollars to carry the trading stamp decision to the Supreme Court of the United States.

There is hardly a retailer in the United States, no matter what his vocation, who would not be willing to have this case carried up to the Supreme Court for a final decision.

Therefore in accordance with sentiment expressed at our National convention, I, Frank B. Connolly, president of the National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States, do make an appeal in the name of the association for $1, voluntary, individual or association membership, contributions to be sent to the secretary, John A. Green, 415 American Trust Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

Inasmuch as all retailers, whether members of the organization or not, are to be benefited by this decision let us hope that every one will respond to this call and that this money reach the National officers within the next fourteen days.

F. B. CONNOLLY.

San Francisco, Cal.,

September 8, 1914.

NOTE.—The Washington decision referred to was the only court decision that ever injured the trading stamp scheme in the slightest degree. It upheld the validity of a tax of $6,000 upon all distributors of trading stamps. Of course such a tax is prohibitory and would destroy the trading stamp scheme absolutely.—Ed.

AMONG THE TRADE.

A. Linton, a wholesale grocer at 519 South Second street, Philadelphia, was arrested during the week by the Bureau of Weights and Measures, charged with selling a barrel of short weight sugar. The barrel was 27 pounds short of the marked weight.

far as Philadelphia is concerned, the Federal investigation has proved a failure. The investigators were unable to obtain sufficient evidence to warrant any prosecutions. The investigation, however, is to be continued. Special Investigator Williamson, who was sent here by the Attorney-General, has returned to Washington, but local agents of the Department of Justice have taken up the work where he left off.

William R. Parke, 43 years old, manager of L. H. Parke & Co., died Wednesday at his home, No. 4642 Greene street, Germantown. He is survived by his widow, son and daughter. He was leader of Coffee Week Advertising Matter Out and Ready to Ship.

The advertising material to be used in connection with National Coffee Week, October 19th-24th, has been finished and is now being shipped out. It consists of the booklet on "From Tree to Cup with Coffee," advance poster, window trim, slogan cards (four) and pennants (two).

Nearly 6,000,000 pieces of this advertising matter will have been circulated, in addition to the publicity given through the medium of a number of well-known trade journals in the interest of the National Coffee Roasters' Association's first Coffee Week.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Don't Talk High Prices.—Prices aren't high. The only domestic article that is high is sugar. Talk low prices instead of high prices. The big thing that you are handling now is peaches. A year ago you got $1.35 for a 16-quart basket that you are selling to-day for 90 cents. That lone offsets the preserving cost—and more.

Take a cheerful view of this thing and don't give in to the unofficial clamor of the public who get their scare from the newspapers that glory in pot boiling.

Speaking of imported things, the following is an illustration of the foolishness of enlarging upon advanced prices. A customer ordered a pound of Jordan almonds. The salesman immediately informed her that they had advanced from 60 to 80 cents, "on account of the war." He simply displayed the poorest kind of judgment. That 20 cents naturally stuck out like 20 times 20, and the sale was lost.

This rich woman had almonds and other expensive things on her list and the probability is that she later regretted ordering them because of the bad taste of the salesman, which meant to her only a matter of 20 cents. Such is the effect of out of order suggestion.

"Do It Yet."—The writer noticed the above printed and framed in the office of a local manufacturer the other day. "Do It Now" is good, but I thought "Do It Yet" is better.

Never fail to "Do It Yet."

One of the troublesome things in mercantile life is the failure to have instructions carried out to the letter.

The man who is valuable is the man who can "carry a letter to Garcia," but the beginning of such letter carrying is in small things.

When your superior asks you to do a thing—do it. It will be a trifle at first, but the fact of your doing it the way he says without any question, without any shirking or grumbling or self-excusing will only be one of the steps to the carrying out of bigger orders.

Don't say "I can't," don't ask him how it can be done (ask somebody else if you don't know), but go right ahead and finish the thing.

Believe me, gentlemen, as a manager of men there is no one quality that appeals so strongly as this quality of "Do It Yet."

You can hardly realize the value that an employer places on this kind of chap—the chap that gets there and delivers the goods—murmurless.

Smiles.—The man that asks you to "keep smiling" never spent much of his early life back of a grocery counter, nor back of any counter, for that matter.

Smiles aren't smirks.

Real smiles come from inside.

The mind is the smiler. It's a fine thing to train this marvelous thing smile-ward.

The training is simple and God-given.

Look up!

Do you think it's easier to find evil than good?

No, it isn't. Finding good is twice as easy when you get the habit and it's more than twice as interesting.

Beautiful thing is a smiling mentality, useful beyond measure is it when it works all unconsciously into your business.

Dry Goods—Notions—Knit Wear

Merchants Not Unduly Disturbed.

Efforts to disturb, if not stampede, merchants into the belief that the condition of markets supplying their needs is on the verge of caving in do not seem to have had any marked effect. Goods of all kinds are in generous supply, excepting those of foreign manufacture, and the tendency is to take things as they come along. Reports, mostly of newspaper origin only, have been published going on to show that owing to this or that factor, more or less important, goods are either scarce or unusually high. The contrary is the truth. Merchants who have been "scared stiff" by salesmen or lurid reports, and consequently were persuaded to buy on a liberal basis, have since become satisfied the alarm had no foundation in fact.

The result is that orders are not forthcoming so frequently from general storekeepers, especially in fine and fancy cotton goods. They are buying in limited quantities only. Credits are being examined closely, and unless merchants have an established reputation and a clear record, distributors have been forced into extremely conservative positions when it comes to filling a good-sized order for general merchandise.

Full Fashioned Hosiery a Domestic Product Only.

American manufacturers of hosiery are now having things pretty much their own way with all foreign competition eliminated. The hosiery line is therefore one of the most active, and a large and increasing business is being accomplished, merchants no longer stopping to play one concern against the other, in jobbers' style; but are asking for an anticipation of deliveries so as to be on the safe side. Playing back and forth to secure even the most minute financial advantage has been a game long in vogue in the dry goods field, where sources of supply are being curtailed, as now it is to get the goods.

Importers of German hosiery, with their supply cut off, in order to hold their trade against another day, are buying what they obtain from domestic manufacturers. The latter are not disposed to favor this class of customers, and properly, first taking care of their regular purchasers among merchants. Buyers who have figured on large importations from abroad are now looking to American mills, and their orders are on a large scale. Despite the suggestion for restricting orders not further than January 1st, as resolved upon recently in Philadelphia, as reported in last week's "Modern Merchant and Grocery-World," the proposal is being disregarded. The current condition in full fashioned hosiery applies wholly to the mercerized cotton lines and specialties like infants' socks, silks, as explained before in this department, having had no competition from foreign producers. In the seamless lines—also domestic—new developments have occurred.

Reduced Quotations For Spring Silks.

According to reliable reports the broad silk manufacturers have finally decided on their prices for next spring, and the road salesmen will soon be out with staple numbers, such as messalines. There is an important reduction in prices, based, it appears, largely on the idea that raw silk is later going to cost manufacturers less money. On messalines it was reported last week that some manufacturers have named prices for spring about 5 per cent. below those originally made for this fall. Considering that some manufacturers raised prices later this season, the reduction for spring would be greater than 5 per cent. For the remainder of this year full prices will be insisted upon.

Woolen and Worsted Lines in Demand.

Advances of 5 cents each have been made on two leading domestic broadcloths. One quality that was opened at $1.40 is now $1.50; another opening at $1.05 is now $1.15, and a third leader that was $1.17½ is now $1.27½. Of course these are primary market figures. There will be a heavy consumption of broadcloth for next spring. Later another advance of 5 cents a yard is anticipated on these goods. The demand for the cheaper grade of broadcloths for suitings has not developed in a large way yet. The only kind of cheap broadcloths selling at present are 10 and 11-ounce goods that are used for coatings. Practically the entire production of worsted warp domestic broadcloths is under engagement for the remainder of the fall season. In other words, there will be a pronounced shortage, as a number of mills have been sold up.

The demand for domestic woolen and worsted dress goods continues to improve, which is accounted for by the absence of foreign merchandise, and no great hope of an additional supply for some time ahead. Prices have been advanced on many qualities, and merchants who have not already covered themselves will be narrowed in their choice of lines. An interesting demand at present is the call for stock goods. Retailers have not yet moved many fall fabrics, but there are no signs in evidence that the sales will be up to, if not beyond, the average record over the counter.

Linens High and Conditions Extraordinary.

The conditions that surround the linen industry at the present time are so extraordinary that orders for next spring's deliveries are not being solicited by the leading importers. About next week, perhaps, a change may be expected. No linens are made in this country, even American flax being unsuitable for the purpose. Russia supplies most of this material, which is sent to Germany to be processed into partly finished goods, the complete finish and artistic handling being done in Ireland and Scotland. So long as the ocean lanes on the Atlantic are kept open it is possible more or less stock will reach this side.

No prices can be quoted for goods for late delivery because of the high rate of exchange, freight rates and war risk insurance, so that linens are actually landed before prices are quoted. The demand, however, is strong, especially for white and brown dress linens. It is becoming quite certain that the conditions in the linen market are not being exaggerated. Merchants having low stocks of this merchandise would do well to watch reports closely and act quickly.

Black Favored as Never Before in Fifty Years. Short Supply in Wool Dress Goods.

Advices sent out by prominent wholesalers convey the information that buying on the part of merchants has in no wise diminished. As the real condition of the market is ascertained, the call for certain lines becomes more insistent. Along these lines Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, say: "The present heavy market buying is due to the fact that retailers have been operating on as low stocks as possible, and are now preparing to take care of the excellent fall business which will result from the good prices farmers are receiving for their crops. Additional stimulus has been given to the business during the past month by the efforts of buyers to take care of their requirements of imported merchandise, the supply of which will soon be restricted or exhausted. Laces and gingham are being shown for spring delivery and merchants are not hesitating to anticipate their usual requirements in these lines."

The Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co., St. Louis, in their current weekly review, comment as follows: "In wool dress goods indications now point to a short supply in first hands. This is shown by numerous inquiries from a broad territory. Many New York manufacturers of ready-to-wear garments are now scouring the Western market to locate quantities of desirable fabrics. The effect of large mills having either withdrawn their products from sale or advanced the price is beginning to be felt in the nature of the healthy and spirited purchases by the retailer of this class of merchandise. Many merchants who did not supply their wants early have bought more freely than in former years. Prospects in this line are good because few retailers have large stocks, and the consumer's demand for yardage fabrics seems to be on the increase. The next two or three weeks should find all jobbers entirely sold out of French and German novelties. In ladies' wear for fall the redingote suit will be very popular. Materials used are first broadcloths, gabardines, poplins and Government serges. Colors are black, navy, plum, green and tete de negre brown. At this time separate dresses are quite popular in basque and semi-basque effects; materials are satin duchess, silk crepes and silk poplins. With the foreign source of supply cut off there has sprung up a decided demand for ladies' kid gloves."

Reviewing the market, the John V. Farwell Co., in their weekly letter to the trade, remark: "Sales in wool dress goods show very heavy increase during the past two weeks—especially sales of black dress goods. Present styles, European war and dye situation favor black as never before in the past 50 years. Unusually fine advance business for spring in gingham is noted. Two leading cotton goods mills withdrew all plain colors from line this week on account of the quantity of dye necessary to produce them. Holiday buying this season is from 30 to 90 days earlier than in previous years, and many lines are rapidly being depleted. Merchants everywhere have realized the importance of protecting their stock so as to be able to take care of their customers when the holiday demand appears.

"September 1st shipment of kid gloves and imported fabric gloves were unusually large. Advices from the other side state that glove manufacturers and male employees have all gone to war. The glove situation is tense. On account of scarcity of dyestuff there is a brisk demand for portieres and tapestry in piece goods. Some of the mills have already advanced their prices."

Expected Cut in Price of Cotton Underwear.

Current reports lean strongly to the belief that a reduction in the price of heavyweight cotton underwear is imminent. Jobbers have been clamoring to the mills for a reduction on account of the scale in the price of the raw material, cotton now selling lower than it has for years. Inquiries are being received as to whether lower prices on cotton underwear of all kinds are to be made on next spring's deliveries. Many orders have been cancelled, the cancelling habit being most strongly developed in the South, and the mills are meeting it with an effective resistance. Jobbers contend they can get all the merchandise they want at lower than current quoted prices, and merchants are also assuming the same attitude.

Basic Reason Why the General Merchant is Buying Ultra-conservatively.

Many and divers reasons have been given why merchants—especially of the minor grade—are buying so conservatively. Changing fashions in dress goods and material is a favorite excuse, as the retailer was exercising wisdom in not loading up with a probable stock of unsalable goods. Another is holding out for better prices, etc., to a half dozen or even more along other or similar lines. The real milk in the cocoanut is now ascribed to still another and a different source. It is authoritatively stated that the hand-to-mouth policy of ordering has become a settled habit because jobbers and manufacturers who sell direct to retailers, as a rule, prefer to have their customers refrain from buying more than they can sell in a reasonable time.

Jobbers are confronted with new conditions. They are unable to sell commercial paper as freely as usual, and for this reason they are being forced to pay their bills, and narrow their trade to a cash basis, or to a basis more nearly governed by the actual capital in the business. Consequently they call on the merchant to act accordingly; buying no more than he can turn over in a reasonable time and paying his bills more promptly. Under current conditions this means curtailment of buying, which means a safe and sound basis. While the general storekeeper has been getting the credit for long-headedness and shrewdness, as a fact he has been governed by necessity.

Hardware Tools Specialties

When a "Leader" Line Means Extra Profits.

Every general merchant is becoming interested in handling a line of 5, 10 and 25-cent merchandise. Wholesalers are laying in or arranging stocks of such goods en bloc, in various lines, but the hardware department seems to be the most varied, attractive and profitable. A company in New York has established a permanent exchange or exposition, which is called the "Five and Ten-Cent Exchange," and in which goods of this description will be displayed by the manufacturers. It is a novel idea, and will undoubtedly prove an institution of practical utility and convenience to the general merchant contemplating adding such a line in hardware.

A contemporary in urging merchants to make their hardware stock or annex more attractive to women shoppers, also mentions the competition of the established "5 and 10-cent stores," and in this respect a Western contemporary says:—

A good many hardware dealers complain of the competition of the 10-cent stores. This is competition which must and can be met in appealing to women customers. For this purpose hardware dealers nowadays are frequently putting in a 5, 10, 15-cent department which is given a prominent place, and in which are shown household utilities and small articles of various kinds, made to retail at low prices. Usually, a table or a series of tables are employed for this purpose, running down the center or one side of the store. On such tables the goods can be displayed, prominently price ticketed and will, in most instances, practically sell themselves.

Such a department will naturally attract the feminine trade. To be able to view the goods at close range, to look over a wide assortment of stuff in which she is interested, to know the price without asking—these are things which appeal to the feminine customer. In course of time the hardware dealer's well-stocked and well-arranged 5, 10 and 15-cent department will prove just as steady a puller for his store as the regular 10-cent stores have proven. This means that not merely will the department draw trade in its own line, but it will bring customers who will purchase other things of a more expensive nature. There is nothing to prevent the hardware dealer from widening the scope of such a department to include goods up to 25 cents or even 50 cents. Here he has an advantage.

In relating his experience in connection with this merchandise, a dealer said: "About two years ago we purchased an assortment of this kind, including the goods and two six-foot tables, all complete for $85. Some of our critics, of course, advised us that we had purchased a bunch of junk and more stuff to catch the dust and pile up as worthless trash. Nevertheless we set the tables up, displayed the goods on them neatly, using plenty of price tickets. We placed the tables where the women could not help from seeing them and looking the goods over. At the time of installing, ours was the first and only one in our little town of 500 population; and I must say it was more than surprising to see that stuff fade away. We hadn't had the goods open over two weeks until we were reordering and we are still ordering and have to watch it close so that we are not out of something all the time." This is a concrete argument, and merchants who are watching for opportunities to "lead trade" into their stores will find such an investment both profitable and judicious.

Hardware Lines Not Seriously Affected. Low Price Specialties in Ample Supply.

Hardware has not been so seriously affected by the war in Europe as other lines. With the exception of a few classes of high-grade cutlery, like razors, etc., there is not an item for which its American equivalent cannot be substituted to advantage. On seven-eighths of the goods brought to this country either price has been the controlling factor, or else the established reputation of the merchandise was so widely recognized as to place it in a class by itself irrespective of price. To be sure American goods known to be of equal grade and entirely satisfactory are on the market and can take its place, only the foreign articles occupy the unique position of seniority, which, coupled with intrinsic merit, is a difficult combination to overcome in any market.

Leading wholesalers and manufacturers are not disposed to be in the slightest degree anxious as to the outlook. On the contrary business may be said to be up to about the average for several years at this season. Building operations everywhere have been carried on in a fairly liberal manner. So much so, indeed, that retailers of hardware report excellent trade in this and regular lines. There is scarcely a town of any size but reports an active market in builders' hardware, and the general stores of the neighborhood have improved their opportunities of looking after this business more intelligently and keeping in closer touch with carpenters, builders and contractors. The result of this special attention has been very satisfactory.

Cheap hardware, mostly of German and some of English origin, has been about absorbed; but apparently its disappearance is working no inconvenience, not to say hardship. The same merchandise may be had of a much better quality of American make, at a slight advance cost, but the difference in price is to the advantage of both buyer and seller in the long run. As to variety in items, etc., in this line one manufacturer alone informs the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" that "these goods are manufactured in more than 700 different patterns, and that they contain some of the best sellers that are on the market to-day," set forth in a 250 page catalogue. There are others with a similar, if not as large an output, but sufficient, in every sense, of filling any void which may be alleged as due to the cutting off the foreign supply.

Boots Shoes Findings

Foreshadowing the New Styles.

Notwithstanding the disturbance in the material market, shoe manufacturers are going right ahead getting their lines ready for next spring and summer. Every day brings fresh reports as to what is about to happen in the matter of either price or something else, but at the same time there is no cessation in the work of designing new patterns and formulating artistic styles for women's wear. Among other models announced for spring is a five-strap, low cut, having the spool heel. It is being discussed as a shoe that will be featured as a sure good seller. The Louis heel will be confined chiefly to the higher grades. Black kid will be used more generally than for several years, while patent leather, white buck and canvas will lead as materials.

Glazed Kid and Goat Leather Shoes.

Owing to the threatened scarcity of calf, colt and side leathers, it is believed that glazed kid and goat leather are again to come into general use. The source of supply for these skins is less seriously affected by the European strife than other kinds of raw material for making shoes. No shoes made give greater comfort and service for the average person than those made from glazed kid and goat leather. It is said shoe manufacturers are equipping their traveling salesmen with a variety of samples in these lines.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Under separate cover we are mailing you a copy of the "Store News," which we have put out in newspaper form instead of the booklet which you have criticized on several occasions.

Your criticism of this would be greatly appreciated.

Yours truly,
THE KUHN CO.

The Kuhn Co. used to issue the smallest store paper that I ever saw. If I remember rightly, it was only about five inches square, and was very well prepared and printed. The trouble with it was that with such a small page you couldn't do much. The form they are using now goes to the other extreme. It is one large page, 15 x 22 inches, and was well printed on good white paper.

This is a mighty good looking piece of advertising, but according to my view of it, it is as much too large as the other was too small. The happy medium is the thing with advertising—the size that is most convenient to read and handle. I think that is especially true of advertising like this, which is not cut price advertising. With cut price advertising, by which I mean advertising that depends for its results on price talk, people will bore into it if they have to get a microscope to read it. If they think there is a bargain somewhere, you can't keep them from reading it. Size or shape or quality of printing are non-essentials. But Kuhn & Co. are not doing that kind of advertising, and they therefore have to consider the factors I have mentioned. I should make their "Store News" not more than half the size and print it on both sides. They will save some money on their paper stock, and they will have a much more sightly and readable sheet.

From the standpoint of the text, this, I believe, is good advertising. It is very well written—illuminating, persuasive, impressive. People who read this will learn something.

HERE IS YOUR QUESTION ANSWERED

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his business is the grocer who succeeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other manufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

Say, ain't it a funny thing, the way things go? One fellow'll start in business, and be dumb, or crooked or lazy, and by gum his business'll jump from the start and he'll make all sorts of coin and be rolling in it.

Another fellow with ten times the brains and more of every plumb thing that people usually think make men get ahead, will go in, and by george he gets it in the neck after every meal and just before going to bed.

Everything goes wrong! Hard luck, hard luck morning, noon and night!

Ain't it plumb funny?

I have a customer down near Richmond, Va., that must have been born with a sharp knife in his mouth. There's nothing wrong with that man that I can see. You look at him and size him up and hear him talk and watch how he runs his store and you'll swear he's a good business man, straight and decent and ought to make good in everything he does.

The kind of a man you'd think God Almighty would be tickled to death to look after a little special so to speak.

He's had a couple of the toughest bumps a man in our business can have. Had 'em both since a year ago, and he lies in his bed every night now all worked up over the next one. Because he's sure he's going to get it and believes it'll get him when it comes.

The first bump was when he got arrested last February. A food inspector or something bought some cheap jelly and found it had two things in that oughtn't to have been there, I believe. One was a bad kind of dye and the other was some sort of acid, I don't remember what.

The inspector got out a warrant for him and then told the papers about it. They saw a chance at a good roast—my friend didn't advertise—and they lit into him bad. Selling painted jelly to sick people, and all that sort of thing.

Maybe he didn't get returns from that fine, big, juicy ad! He heard from it inside of an hour and he's been hearing from it ever since. He told me that the week after that thing came out he didn't do hardly anything.

Of course he went back on the jobber who sold the goods to him, and I believe the jobber went back on the manufacturer. And the jobber paid my friend's fine—cost him about a hundred bones—and collected it from the manufacturer. But that didn't put any liniment on the real sore at all.

"Why didn't you write a piece for the papers, saying that you bought the stuff thinking it was all right?" I asked him, when he told me. "You could have got in all right with the public."

"I'm not built that way," he said. "What—ask a favor of the papers that had cut me like that? I guess not!"

"It wouldn't have been a favor at all," I said, "it would have been decent justice."

"I didn't look at it that way," he said.

Of course he was plumb wrong, but you can see how he felt about it.

All right, so much for that. He went ahead after that, the best he could, and was just beginning to see where his business was starting to come back, when I'll be eternally smashed if some kid didn't take sick last September and blame it on some candy he said he bought of him! That got in the papers too. The doctor they had on the job was also one of these gabby gents and he talked about half a column about storekeepers that sell bad candy to "our little ones." And the kid darned near died! The doctor never was decent enough to come out and say it wasn't the candy, but he said it might have been helped along by something else, and that still left my friend in wrong.

The kid's father sued for $5,000 damages. He said the kid would never be the same again and he's

Franklin Carton Sugar Is Ready to Hand Out to Customers

When you have slit the top of a CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR with your pocketknife (and that's easier than taking the head off a barrel), the CARTONS are ready to hand out to the customers with no more work than if they were cans of tomatoes.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR saves you all the work of putting sugar in bags, saves the cost of the bags, the cost of twine, saves time, prevents loss by overweight. The CARTON is a neat, tight, strong package that will not burst like a paper bag and let the sugar out. It keeps the sugar clean and dry and your customers will appreciate those features. FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR pays you a profit because it costs you nothing to handle; bulk sugar does not pay you any profit because of the cost of handling. You can make a profit instead of a loss on all your sugar trade by handling FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR as we pack all fast selling grades in the FRANKLIN CARTON, including FRANKLIN GRANULATED, FRANKLIN CUBE, FRANKLIN DESSERT & TABLE, FRANKLIN XXXX CONFECTIONERS' and FRANKLIN POWDERED.

CCLXXVI.—How Business Men's Fire Insurance May be Affected by Keeping Gasoline, Etc., on the Premises.

Insurance, particularly fire insurance, is a subject which probably touches more business men closely than any other. I have written more at length on various phases of the law of insurance than upon any other topic, and shall continue to do so whenever a phase of the subject arises which has not been fully covered.

I have before me now an Appeal Court's decision in a case which involves the enforcement of a clause that appears in practically every fire insurance policy now in existence in this country. All companies have uniformly used it for years. I refer to the clause making the policy void if gasoline, illuminating oil or gunpowder are kept upon the insured premises. There is a perfectly good reason for including this provision in a fire insurance policy, for obviously the man who keeps such things upon his premises increases the risk of fire, and if fire occurs by reason of them, it occurred because of his own carelessness and he should not be able to recover damages from the company.

The provision itself is unobjectionable, but almost all insurance companies attempt to enforce it in arbitrary and oppressive ways. The case before me illustrates one of these. Happily the company was defeated and the holder of the policy got his insurance money. Nevertheless the case supplies another illustration of the need I have so often urged—of knowing thoroughly the requirements of your fire insurance policy and carefully following them.

In the case referred to the insured conducted a large general store, and both stock and building were insured under a policy which contained the "gasoline, illuminating oil or gunpowder" clause. The building was completely destroyed by fire, and the insurance company refused to pay the insurance money on the ground that the storekeeper had for a time kept gasoline upon his premises, thereby invalidating the policy under the clause which provided that the policy should be void if gasoline were kept. There ensued prolonged litigation, but in the end the Appeal Court gave the decision to the storekeeper, on the ground that while the policy did say that it should be void in case gasoline were kept upon the premises, the fairer interpretation was that the policy should merely be suspended while gasoline was being kept. When the storekeeper ceased to keep it on the premises—the evidence was that he had not had it as a part of his stock for two years before the fire—the policy was automatically revived, particularly as premiums were regularly paid, and at the time of the fire it was in full force. There was also ample evidence that the fire was not started by gasoline.

Obviously this is the only sane view. It would be absurd and outrageous to forfeit a policy long after gasoline ceased to be kept on the premises, and when the fire was not caused by gasoline. Nevertheless, the insurance companies have invariably contended that that was the proper interpretation of the policy, and there are quite a few cases that have upheld them in it. The decided weight of authority, however, is the other way.

This decision rested in some degree upon the fact that gasoline was a customary part of a general merchant's stock. Nevertheless the ruling would likely have been the same if it had not been, provided it was kept for some small legitimate use such as fuel for motor delivery wagons, was not stored on the premises at the time of the fire, and did not cause the fire or contribute to it. The court on this point said:—

The policy was not absolutely forfeited by keeping the prohibited articles on the premises, even if they had not been a part of the stock of merchandise in the store, in which event another rule would apply, but the policy at most was only suspended during the time the prohibited articles were so kept, and was revived by the discontinuance of the prohibited uses and by what subsequently occurred between the contracting parties. * * * The weight of authority is to the effect that the use of an article prohibited by the printed clauses of the policy will not avoid it if the prohibited article is a customary component part of the goods insured, or is in customary use in carrying on the trade or business conducted in the insured building. * * * If the prohibited articles were employed by the assured (the storekeeper) in the conduct of a particular business, and the use of such articles is a necessary incident to the conduct of such a business, the parties will be presumed to have contracted with reference thereto, and at the time the insurance policy was issued, the company will be presumed to have had in contemplation the use of such articles by the assured (storekeeper) when it assumed the risk, and under such circumstances will be presumed to have waived the condition under which the use of such articles would render the policy void.

In this case the gasoline which was claimed to be in violation of the policy had not been kept on the premises for some time before the fire. In case gasoline was on the premises at the time of the fire, the question would be, how was it there. If as a part of a stock in trade, or for domestic use, such as cleaning, or possibly—in small quantities—as fuel for motor vehicles used regularly in connection with the business, it is probable that no court would hold the policy void, particularly if the fire came from other causes. If, however, the insurance company can show that gasoline, kerosene, or any other prohibited article was kept on the premises in a way clearly prohibited by the policy, the fact that it did not cause the fire would make no difference—the policy would still be void.

This shows the importance of the subject. Almost every business man keeps gasoline or kerosene, especially the former, about his premises to-day, in spite of a positive prohibition against it in his fire insurance policy, which in most cases has probably not been waived by the company. What a dangerous situation for men whose fire insurance is often their sole protection!

Sometimes, if a fire occurs, it is possible to slip through without avoiding the policy by invoking one of the excuses which I have been discussing. But this is always risky and many times unsuccessful. Take this as a good general rule for this and all other similar situations. Where you are doing something which even seems to conflict with your policy, go to the insurance company at once, explain it thoroughly and get them to give you a rider allowing you to continue what you are doing—provided they are willing you should continue. If they are unwilling, you had better know it now rather than after a fire.

Question: * * *, Philadelphia.—Can you give us any information as to how a merchant can get judgment for small claims through magistrate without employing lawyer? I refer to claims for a few dollars which it would not pay to employ a lawyer to collect. Is this can be done by the merchant himself, it would often be done where now it is not done, and those debts go uncollected.

Answer.—I know it to be a fact that a very large number of small debts go uncollected because the debtor, though having plenty of assets, fails to pay them in the belief—which in most cases is correct—that the creditor will not bother to force him in such a small matter. All the large railroad companies and all the express companies, take advantage of this situation, and avoid the payment of thousands of dollars' worth of trifling claims such as claims for $3 or $4 or $5 merely by not paying them. The only thing the creditor can do is to enter suit, and as entering suit usually requires a lawyer, the creditor lets his claim of $5 or $10 under go, though he could easily collect it if he would only sue.

Anybody can bring suit in cases like this, without employing a lawyer. He will have to advance some costs, but the judgment he will obtain will include these, and the debtor will have to pay them back when he pays the judgment.

In Philadelphia suits for sums under $100 must be brought before a magistrate. The Philadelphia magistrate corresponds with a justice of the peace or alderman in other sections. Following is the list of Philadelphia magistrates and the locations of their courts:—

Let us say that somebody owes you a claim of $5. All that you need to do is to go to your nearest magistrate, and tell him you want to issue a summons against your debtor. You do not need to tell the magistrate at this time how much your claim is or anything more about it than that you want to issue summons against your debtor for debt. 'This is the date Knight's Cooking Extracts first decorated grocers' shelves. Time, skill and experience combined have added to the perfection of these goods each year. other words, the constable must travel to serve the summons upon him.

The summons will name a time when the case will be heard. When that time comes be at the magistrate's office with your books of original entry, which means a day book, not a ledger, showing the items of your claim. If the claim is not on goods sold or delivered you can say what it is for on the witness stand. If you know nothing personally about it, take with you the person or employee who does. What you will do before the magistrate is simply to prove that the debtor owes you the amount of your claim. If the debtor is there he will put in his defense, if he has any, and the magistrate will decide the case. The chance is that the debtor will not be there, and you can get judgment by default. In these small claims there is seldom any dispute—the debtors simply lie down and wait for the creditors to move, believing that they will not move.

In Pennsylvania no case involving less than $5.33 can be appealed from a magistrate's court. That means that in a small case if you once get judgment before a magistrate you are through. You do not need to wait the usual twenty days to give the debtor the chance to appeal—there can be no appeal. Instruct the magistrate to issue execution at once. He will collect probably $1.50 to $2 more from you, which the debtor will also pay in the end. The constable will then go out and levy on the debtor's goods, but if the debtor has any goods he will probably pay the bill rather than see them levied on. What the debtor will have to pay is your claim, interest if any, and all costs, so that you have collected in full.

The above applies particularly to undisputed claims. Where there is a dispute and a defense, you may find it harder to conduct the case before the magistrate yourself, but you can do it if it is a clear case. It applies particularly also to claims for small sums—less than $5.33, which cannot be appealed, though you can do just as well with larger claims except that you cannot then issue execution right away. You must give the debtor twenty days to appeal. If he appeals, you must then employ a lawyer. If he does not appeal, you can issue execution at the end of the twenty days.

In the greater number of these small claims, particularly those against express companies and railroad companies, there will never be any hearing, because the claims will be paid as soon as the debtors see that you mean business. They will pay the claim in full, including all costs expended up to that time, rather than hold off and pay more.

Another Retailer Who Believes in Right to Advance Prices With or Without a Reason.

Contents That Dealer Can Properly Advance His Prices When the Market Advances, Even Though He Was Making Enough Before.

I read the editorial in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" this morning publishing the letter written by the "Subscriber from Ansonia," Conn., and feel that I would like to have something to say in answer to your cover page in the issue of August 17th in regards to the merchant who advances his prices in accordance with the markets when he has a substantial stock, which he was fortunate in having when such advances took place.

I beg to state that I do not agree with you when you say that such merchant is a traitor to every generous instinct and should be shunned by society or rather made an outcast of society.

In my judgment you do not give a merchant what is really due him. The question is purely a business proposition in my mind and if a merchant has business qualities and foresight enough along with a little spare cash, and by so investing a certain amount in merchandise that he is positive will advance, why has he not the right to make that extra profit when his competitors are all selling at an advance?

The largest single selling commodity in a grocery store is sugar, which returns the smallest profit on the average, and when European conditions warranted the extraordinary advance, why should such merchant keep his price down when every other merchant is up with the market? The result would be this: not only your own patrons but others would take advantage of the situation and make an invasion which would clean him up in a very short time, and what credit would he receive? You might say, look at the new patrons you might get. Well, my experience has been in this business for eighteen years I have been in this business that all the new business anything like that brings, you can carry very nicely in the palm of your hand.

So far as conscience is concerned mine doesn't hurt me deeper than the first skin, and will say in conclusion that if a poor grocer or another merchant does nothing worse than that he will surely enter the pearly gates without question.

P. S.—Would like to have opinion of others on this subject.

NOTE.—We believe we can make the same answer to Mr. McCullough's argument that we made the similar one from the Ansonia subscriber. This is by asking him the same question and we now repeat it: "If he had had his thirty barrels of flour, and the market had declined as much as the war has recently advanced it, would he—unless forced to do so by competition—consider that he was under obligation to reduce his price before the thirty barrels were gone? Unless a retailer can fairly answer this in the affirmative, he is completely down and out, in our judgment, in his contention that he has the right to advance on the market. Fleischmann's Yeast

IS ALWAYS FRESH

Every time our salesman delivers yeast to your store he replaces any stale cakes he finds with fresh ones. No trouble or expense to you; no complaints from customers — if you sell Fleischmann's.

THE FLEISCHMANN CO.

Ham without a name is "just ham," and has no uniform quality. It may be good once, but you don't know how it will be the next time.

Your customers can't depend on you if you sell that kind of ham.

SWIFT'S PREMIUM HAMS are uniform—always properly cured, tasty, appetizing. When a woman gets a PREMIUM HAM she wants another like it next time. The only way you can be sure to have all your hams uniformly good is to see that all you sell are SWIFT'S PREMIUM HAMS.
